TROLLEYS CRASH IN TUNNEL

ARDING DUPED BY 'OHIO GANG,' SAYS FORBES

White House Poker Party Described.

New York, Dec. 3.—(AP)—The New York World will publish tomorrow an article purporting to reveal the "inside story of the Ohio gang" and inside details of the Harding administration written by Col. Charles R. Forbes.

The author, who is former head of the United States veterans' bureau, recently was released after serving part of a two year penal sentence for defrauding the government on hospital contracts.

Forbes' story sketches the Harding regime from the pre-senatorial days of Harding until his death.

Describes Poker Party.

Covering his Washington activities, Forbes tells of a party at the White House, describes $75,000 in bills of large denomination lying on a table in the department of justice offices, declares Dr. Sawyer, Harding's personal physician, proved a "pernicious medicine" in governmental affairs, and asserts that the late President finally was "betrayed by his friends."

Describing the White House poker game, Forbes writes:

"The poker party was held the following evening in the library of the White House. It was like many similar parties which were held there. We played at a rectangular table in the north end of the room. On this particular occasion the President sat at the west end, and Will Hays, who was then postmaster general, at the other. Others there were Albert Lasker, at that time chairman of the shipping board; Harry Daugherty, Ned McLean, Mrs. McLean, and Mrs. Harding.

Will Hays' Winner.

"Mrs. Harding did not play—she often sat with us at poker games, but never played. I remember that it was very hot and that Albert Lasker took his coat off, displaying red suspenders two inches wide. I won $397 and Will Hays won. The losers all paid promptly.

"During the game Ned McLean announced that Jack Johnson, the prize-fighter, was to be discharged from the federal penitentiary at Leavenworth, and either Ned or Albert Lasker exclaimed: 'Why, his old mother used to work for me and he has a fine of $1,000 hanging over him and can't pay it.' Ned McLean said: 'Albert, I'll give $500 and you give $500 and we will pay his fine.' The President spoke up: 'Don't let that worry you; I'll remit the fine,' and the game went on."

Daugherty "Evil Genius."

As to the late President himself, Forbes declares he is "satisfied" that Harding received none of the spoils of alleged administration graft and dishonest in performance of his duties.

"Warren G. Harding," Forbes writes, "was a much misunderstood man. If he erred in the administration of his high office it was solely because of an excess of loyalty to friends whom the world now knows to have been faithless. I am confident that before he departed for Alaska he had begun to suspect what these men had been to him and to the country and that this suspicion contributed to his untimely death."

The story Forbes denies that Harry Daugherty, whom he calls the "evil genius of the administration," was responsible for President Harding's nomination by the Republican convention in 1920. As early as 1915 Harding had been discussed as a presidential possibility by Theodore Roosevelt and a New York conference which Harding attended, he asserts.

Exposes Narcotic Traffic.

Describing "the Ohio gang that Harding had brought to Washington," Forbes tells of many of Daugherty's transactions in the "little green room on K street." Apparently there was friction between Forbes and Daugherty, for the former veteran bureau head asserts that when he had tried something to check narcotic traffic in federal prisons Daugherty blocked him.

"From my own recent experience in the penitentiary at Leavenworth," Forbes continues, "I know that the underlying evil which I described to you (Daugherty) still exists in our federal institutions. Narcotics can be obtained by any prisoner if he has the money to buy them."

"On one occasion," Forbes' story continues, "I saw in Jess Smith's office in the department of justice building [illegible] in $1,000 bills. The wind blew [illegible] a table onto the floor and I

REGULARS RULE; INDORSE POLICY OF PRESIDENT

Upset in Convention at Madison.

La Follette Is Silent

Washington, D. C., Dec. 3.—(AP)—When apprised of the results of the selection of the Republican national committeemen from Wisconsin by the state's central committee, Senator La Follette declined to make any comment.

Madison, Wis., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Twenty years of insurgency of the Wisconsin representatives on the Republican national committee ended today. The regular Republicans captured the Republican state central committee in its meeting, elected a national committeeman from Wisconsin in harmony with the Coolidge administration, defeating the La Follette choice for that office, and then endorsed the administration of Calvin Coolidge.

La Follette leaders had no premonition of the result when they called the committee last week and were stunned tonight by the complete victory of the regular Republicans.

George Vitz, Manitowoc, aluminum manufacturer and former president of the Wisconsin Manufacturers' association, was elected national committeeman, defeating Herman L. Ekern, La Follette choice, twenty to sixteen. Mrs. Harry Thomas, Sheboygan, was chosen national committee-woman by the same vote, defeating Mrs. Rose Meyer, Sauk City, La Follette choice, by the same vote.

Caught Off Their Guard.

In twenty years of political fighting in Wisconsin the La Follette leaders never have been defeated so decisively. They viewed the calling of the state central committee to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Ira S. Lorenz, Milwaukee, as a perfunctory affair.

Most of the La Follette leaders in the committee, sensing no danger, sent proxies for their votes. When the meeting assembled this morning the rout was apparent at once. The first test vote showed the regular Republicans in complete control and they moved forward with a regular program in harmony with the views of the national administration.

Indorse Coolidge Policies.

But the bitterest reverse of all came when the elections were out of the way. It was then that Lawrence Ledvina of Manitowoc, former conservative member of the legislature, offered the resolution endorsing the Coolidge administration. It went through and the rout of the La Follette leaders was complete in the affairs of the national organization of Wisconsin for the first time since 1908.

The Ledvina resolution was adopted, 20 to 16. It was as follows:

"Resolved, by the Republican state central committee of the state of Wisconsin assembled upon call of its chairman at Madison, Wis., Dec. 3, 1927, that we heartily indorse the splendid, businesslike administration of national affairs by the Republican administration under the able leadership of President Calvin Coolidge. His administration has brought prosperity to all classes of our people; has resulted in a stupendous lowering of taxation; has greatly diminished the national debt, and has brought the standard of living in America to the highest level ever known.

Indorse the Last Platform.

"We commend the fearless and vigorous prosecution of those who, unfaithful to public trust and the obligations of good citizenship, attempted to dispoil public domains. We further commend the President's staunch answering and loyal support of the ideals and principles of the Republican party; and we indorse the principles of the Republican party as set forth in the platform of the last Republican national convention."

Although there are 44 members of the state central committee votes were cast for only 36. There were 23 present at the meeting and the rest of the 36 votes were cast by proxy. Zimmerman leaders under the leadership of Eugene Warnimont, Milwaukee, dominated the meeting and voted for the conservative candidates and the Coolidge resolution.

A resolution asking that the na-

SYNOPSIS.

Paul Rayburn, chemist for the Grannett company, leaves his laboratory after working late into the night, convinced that he has made a discovery which will startle the world. Because he failed to realize a cent from an earlier invention which made millions for his company, he determines to keep this one a secret.

The next day Crahl, a department head, ushers into Rayburn's workshop two young women who are eager to see some of his instruments and to learn something of his work. The younger and more attractive girl asks Rayburn about a machine which he keeps covered with a metallic cloth. Rayburn tells her it is just a plaything of his own which he uses for independent research after working hours. Later she phones Rayburn and invites him to dinner that evening. He declines, saying his work will keep him in the laboratory. He has not yet learned the girl's name and wonders mildly who she may be.

Just then Crahl enters and congratulates Rayburn on having impressed his visitors, especially the younger one. Rayburn asks what her name is.

"Great Scott!" exclaims Crahl. "Didn't you know that was Eleanor Grannett, the old man's daughter?"

The spoiled Eleanor tells her father that Rayburn declined her invitation, and mentions, in passing, Rayburn's secret device in the laboratory. Her father tells her to invite Rayburn again that evening; then he instructs his confidential man to inspect Rayburn's invention while Paul is absent from his laboratory.

Rayburn accepted Eleanor's second invitation to dinner rather reluctantly, and while at "Marble Court," the family home, Mr. Grannett questions him about his secret invention. He finally admits it has to do with astronomy. Both Eleanor and her father press him for more information about it when Miss Downs, Eleanor's cousin, comes to his rescue by remarking: "Mr. Rayburn may prefer not to tell us—yet." Rayburn gave her a grateful glance, while Mr. Grannett glared at her.

CHAPTER V.

Driven into a corner, Rayburn glanced around the table. Mr. Grannett was impatiently drumming his fingers as he awaited Rayburn's answer. Eleanor, her lips parted slightly and eyes shining, was leaning forward eagerly.

Opposite him, Theodora Downs sat with face averted, sensing his reluctance to speak of his private experiments and knowing her uncle's determination.

Rayburn thought fast. He realized the folly of saying anything that might betray the character of his experiments, certainly not their phenomenal promise of success. He slowly lighted a cigaret.

"I've always been fascinated by astronomy," he began, and instantly the suspicion in Mr. Grannett's eyes intensified.

"Yes, yes. Go on," he commanded brusquely.

"My dream," continued Rayburn, rolling his eyes upward in well-assumed rapture, "has been to establish communication with the planets."

"The what!" exclaimed Grannett.

"The planets," answered Rayburn evenly, as though unconscious of the bitter irony in Grannett's voice. "Mars perhaps, that being the nearest."

Grannett's face was apoplectic. Was the man insane? Or was he daring to attempt evasion? If the latter, he should very quickly have cause to regret it; if the former his services with the Grannett company would soon terminate.

The kindly though severely plain features of Theodora Downs were deeply disturbed.

"You know," Rayburn continued, "the human face has always had two dreams, to fly and to establish communication with the planets. For two thousand years men have tried to fly in spite of a scoffing world. Yet today flying is a commonplace reality. There still remains the other dream to be fulfilled."

"But it's impossible!" blurted Grannett angrily. "It's sheer idiocy to think of it."

"Do you realize," asked Rayburn, "that nobody has ever tried to communicate with the planets? There is not a single record of such an attempt ever having been made. Astronomers and physicists have talked of it but have gone no further. They have accepted it as impossible. Would man now be flying if every one had adopted the same helpless attitude?"

Mr. Grannett stared at Rayburn, his lips working convulsively.

"The cases are not the same," he snapped. "The internal combustion engine solved the problem of flight."

"Not entirely, Mr. Grannett. You are aware, of course, that a man has flown continuously fourteen hours in a plane without an engine."

Mr. Grannett flared up.

"Young man, you're crazy. If you are trying to argue with me, you insult my intelligence!" He glared around for approval.

"You would not, I gather," asked Rayburn, "care to back my experiments—financially?"

Grannett snorted.

"Not while I am in my sound mind. If you continue this idiotic waste of time it's on your own head. I'll have nothing to do with it!"

"I beg pardon?"

"I said I'll have nothing to do with it!" he exploded, so vehemently that the butlers as well as the two young ladies were startled.

"You all have heard him," cried Rayburn, with mysterious emphasis. "You see, I've been doing this on my own time and with my own money, although I hoped the company might later be disposed to help."

Bang! Grannett smote the table. "Not a cent! The company will have nothing to do with it. That's final!" He arose and jerked back his chair. "And another thing, young man, your usefulness to my company will cease if you persist in this—this damned nonsense."

With this he stamped from the room.

Rayburn arose. His voice was quiet and his manner appeared normal.

"I'm afraid I have provoked your father," he said. "Perhaps I had better go."

"O, Mr. Rayburn, why did you try such a ghastly, tactless joke. I've never seen him so furious. He was convinced you were deceiving him."

"Your father asked me an unfair question. I might even go farther, if it were polite, and say that he was exasperatingly insistent in a matter not his concern. If I chose to answer him as I did, he invited it."

"Mr. Rayburn is quite right!" exclaimed Miss Downs. "It was none of your father's business!"

"Thank you, Miss Downs," said Rayburn gently, "but I beg of you not to take my part. It will only lead to embarrassment."

After Rayburn left Eleanor bid her cousin a curt good-night. She was annoyed. She now suddenly remembered that throughout the evening he had shown, beyond bare politeness, no sign of susceptibility. In fact—and the thought infuriated her—she could not recall ever having made such a failure with a young man.

MARINE FLIES FROM MIAMI TO TELA, HONDURAS

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, Dec. 3.—(AP)—Maj. E. H. Brainard, piloting a United States Marine corps monoplane, which hopped off from Miami today, landed at Tela, Honduras, at 4:07 this afternoon. Brainard came down safely and is expected to reach Managua on Sunday.

Tela is on the north coast of Honduras and about 250 miles from Managua. The distance from Miami to Managua is 1,035 miles, therefore the aviator covered approximately 875 miles, successfully negotiating the over-water part of the flight.

Maj. Brainard, who is the pilot, and his crew of two, Sergt. M. T. Shepard, relief pilot, and Corp. N. M. Winchester, mechanic, are delivering the Fokker bomber to American troops at Managua for service in Central America.

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina, Dec. 3.—The French Africa-to-Brazil aviators, Dieudonne Costes and Lieut. Joseph Lebrix, who departed at 4:16 a. m. for Rio de Janeiro, made a forced landing at Florianopolis, Brazil, due to bad weather.

HOMES SWEPT BY BRUSH FIRE IN CALIFORNIA

Tujunga, Cal., Dec. 3.—(AP)—Between five and ten small mountain homes had been destroyed at 10 o'clock tonight by a brush fire which was burning uncontrolled on two fronts of Tujunga valley, northwest of Los Angeles, at that hour.

Numerous other small structures were menaced by the flames which were racing ahead of a wind estimated at from 30 to 35 miles. Homes on the floor of Tujunga valley were evacuated by their occupants, who sought refuge in La Crescenta, mountain residence district near here.

Several hundred men, including regular firemen from Los Angeles, Glendale and Pasadena, were fighting the flames.

Four Vessels in Distress as Storm Rages

Norfolk, Va., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Four vessels, carrying more than 60 persons, are in distress in storms raging along the Atlantic coast from the Delaware Capes to Florida tonight.

A number of vessels are rushing to the rescue of the Greek tanker Paraguay, with a crew of 26 men, which is helpless and leaking fore and aft, 60 miles off Cape Henry.

Says Decks Are Awash.

The last wireless received from the Paraguay said her decks were awash, but a relayed message said the British steamer Baron Herries was standing by attempting to take off the crew of the Paraguay. The Baron Herries was the first of 6 vessels which answered the call for help to reach the Paraguay.

Heavy seas prevented the Baron Herries from sending small boats to the Paraguay and it is feared she may sink before reaching safety.

Another vessel in distress is the tanker William M. Irish. She damaged her hull and broke her steering gear when she tried to turn against the tremendous seas to go to the rescue of the Paraguay. She in turn had to call for assistance.

Aid to Crippled Steamer.

Two coast guard patrol boats from the Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., station discovered the disabled Munson Line steamer Montgomery in distress off Great Isaac lighthouse in the Bahamas. The patrol boats are standing by until the liner New Orleans can arrive to aid the Montgomery.

A barge en route from New Orleans to Norfolk broke away from the escort tug and is tossing about helplessly 30 miles south of Charleston, S. C., with five men aboard.

13 Are Hurt by Collision Under River

Thirteen persons were injured last night when two surface cars, moving in opposite directions at high speed, collided in the middle of the Washington street tunnel, directly beneath the bed of the Chicago river.

The blowing out of a fuse and the subsequent failure of air and emergency brakes on Milwaukee avenue car No. 3259, east bound, caused the accident. The motorman, S. Krawzak, lost power when he was near the top of the incline that opens on Franklin street, and the car began to hurdle back into the tunnel.

Crash Under Mid River.

Behind, separated by the length of the tube, was another east bound Milwaukee avenue car. Daniel Sullivan, conductor of the first car, and Joseph Miller, motorman of the second, were unable to see that a collision was imminent until both had reached the short level stretch under the river.

But Sullivan, striving to make the emergency brakes work, and Krawzak had shouted to their passengers to get to the front of the car. Sullivan followed them at the last second and was only slightly injured, although the rear end of his car and the front of the other were demolished.

Hurries to Save Passengers.

Miller, when he beheld the uncontrolled car rushing at him, tried to throw his motor into reverse. Then he ran into the car and was shouting to his passengers to get back when the crash occurred. Several of those in the front had time to obey the warning and his action is given credit for preventing more serious hurts to these.

Although the casualty list was not large, it comprised more than half the passengers on both cars. Miller, whose leg was cut and bruised, was the only one of the crews injured.

Mrs. Martha Horn, 56, of 5261 Windsor avenue, was severely cut and bruised, as was Mrs. Margaret Hunt, 45, of 6145 Byron avenue. Miss Lucille Maas, 19, of 5901 West North avenue was cut on the cheek. Miss Grace Moffatt, 21, of 3344 North Kildare avenue and Mrs. Mary Bloom, 38, of 4323 Henderson street suffered cuts and bruises. Several of these, according to physicians at the Iroquois hospital, suffered possible internal injuries.

Fire Companies Called.

Mrs. Josephine Warden, 30, of 2306 North Springfield avenue, was internally injured and Miss Ruth Ericksen, 19, of 1925 North Leamington avenue, suffered hurts to her spine and legs. Mrs. Mary Kamajes, 23, of 5233 South Fairfield avenue, was bruised on the face and body.

Bruised and shaken, but apparently uninjured otherwise, the following were taken to the hospital and later released: O. H. Beyer of 4646 North Leamington avenue and his wife; Martin Mosnick of 4949 Kamerling avenue, and Omar Halloway of 420 Diversey parkway.

Firemen of engine company No. 40 were called to the scene and assisted the victims to the hospital. Traffic on the eastbound line through the tunnel was delayed between twenty and twenty-five minutes before the wrecked cars could be moved.

Workman Whose Head Was Pierced by Rod Well Again

Paul Kosty, 36 years old, steel worker, whose head was pierced by a hot steel bar three-quarters of an inch in diameter and twenty-six feet long, was released yesterday from a hospital at Hammond, where he had been under treatment since June 25. It was announced that his recovery was complete. Kosty was at work in a steel mill when the bar struck his skull. Fellow workmen drew the entire length of metal through his head to release him.

COPS BUST UP RANSOM PLOT FOR $200,000

Rescue Booze Chief After Three Days.

Interference spoiled a $200,000 hoist yesterday in which Morris Roisner of Minneapolis was the intended victim and in which men of notoriety in the realm of crime and booze figured prominently, with women shoplifters acting as lures and spies.

When Roisner returned from a captivity of three days, his head, body, and legs a mass of welts and bruises, notice was served on the police department of the reopening of the hoisting season.

In Which Hoisting Is Defined.

And in the tale of criminality, violence, and booze that followed, Deputy Chief of Detectives Michael Grady felt it necessary to issue the following definitions:

Hoisting — Argot meaning the robbing of one racketeer by another racketeer, or by a gang—slightly different than the ordinary kidnaping or abduction for ransom, inasmuch as places of business may be and are often hoisted.

Racketeer—One who has a racket—an illegitimate means of making money, little or much.

Enter More Characters.

It followed therefore, police pointed out, that Roisner, who was held for ransom, was a racketeer, as were Abraham Ginsberg, Minneapolis lawyer, and Charles Grosscurth of 7000 South Shore drive, Chicago, who had lesser parts in what came near being tragedy for Roisner.

In fact, Grosscurth has had little recognition of his activities in Chicago during the time he was amassing a fortune of from $10,000,000 to $15,000,000, but last night those police who hadn't heard of him before learned something of his history.

How They Get in Story.

The relation of Ginsberg and Grosscurth to the hoisting of Roisner was told in a few words as follows: Ginsberg was the go-between who brought letters from Roisner to Grosscurth pleading that $75,000 be raised "as fast as humanly possible" to bring about Roisner's release. And Grosscurth called in the police, fearing, it was said, that he would be the next to be hoisted.

It was explained that Roisner and Grosscurth were the "big men and the brains" in a series of alcohol deals that resulted in the indictment of 112 persons at Cleveland, O. Each is under sentence of a year and a day at the Atlanta, Ga., penitentiary on pleas of guilty to this indictment but Attorney Ginsberg, also indicted, has not yet been tried.

Inspired by Gambling Ltd.

The recent police order to shut down all gambling houses in Chicago was considered as having furnished the inspiration for the plot against Roisner. A side issue under consideration was that Roisner, and perhaps Grosscurth, were being shown the necessity for financing the defense of others of the 112 indicted at Cleveland.

Whatever the underlying motive, the arrest of several persons indicated that professional hoisters performed the rough work.

Harry Brown, alias Frisco Dutch, pal of Eugene McLaughlin, was one of these. McLaughlin has not been inside a police station since the time Jake Adler and Frank [Sappho] Lavro of the Frolics café were hoisted for ransom that was said to have been $25,000.

He's Reported Seeking Cash.

McLaughlin, Deputy Grady said, is wanted in Philadelphia and other places as well as in Chicago, where he forfeited a $20,000 bond, and reports of him have been that he was trying desperately to get enough money to "settle those raps."

Some of the McLaughlin gang ran into trouble in New York last May when they hoisted Abe Scharlin, brother of Nate Scharlin, millionaire partner of Roisner and Grosscurth, and joint defendant with them at Cleveland. Joseph Marcus, of the gang, was killed and David Berman captured, and a report made to a New York judge was as follows:

"Berman and his gang came to this city from Chicago equipped with high powered automobiles, liveried chauffeurs, death dealing machine guns, hand grenades and tear bombs, with the purpose of kidnaping wealthy men engaged in illicit activities who would not readily complain to the police."

Police Take a Hand.

Since then several rumors have reached police headquarters concerning minor hoistings but no direct complaint was made until Grosscurth called in Sergt. Elbert Bullard on Thursday. Then, following the arrest of Ginsberg, several addresses fell into the hands of the police.

One of them was 5908 Winthrop avenue. Here police arrested George King who said he lived there; Dave Parley, 2119 South Lawndale avenue; Anna Ford, 4246 Drexel avenue; Alma White, 4924 Indiana avenue, and May Newman, 3540 Douglas boulevard. Opium pipes and a can of opium were found and when the police entered several suit cases filled with lingerie were thrown out a window.

It was learned that this place had been rented originally by Hymie Weiss, Schemer Drucci and Dean O'Banion, all now dead, when they started their war with John Torrio and Al Capone. They quartered their hired killers there and the killers took with them a number of shoplifters.

George [Bugs] Moran retained those quarters when he succeeded to leadership of the north side gang and became affiliated with Barney Bertsche, William Skidmore, Jack Zuta and McLaughlin.

The History of Grosscurth.

Grosscurth, the police learned, had been a partner of Torrio, and was the head of a larger booze syndicate than George Remus, the bootleg king of Cincinnati, ever dreamed was possible. This syndicate bought every distillery in the middle west it could get and used several patent medicine companies as ostensible distributing agencies. One such was the J. B. Scheurer company at 16 West Austin avenue, Chicago.

When the O'Banion gang broke with Torrio and Grosscurth they took possession of the Cragin Products company. When Torrio fled Grosscurth was sole owner of the Greedale, Ind., distillery and from it came a constant flow of alcohol, according to police history.

Moran Drops Booze Racket.

A short time ago Moran dropped out of the alcohol racket, detectives said last night, and became a power in the gambling syndicate. Grosscurth had the alcohol field almost to himself, with a large staff of chemists making Scotch and redistilling denatured alky.

Moran was content, according to yesterday's revelations. He had installed one of his aces who is known as the "Gee" in a saloon at 5063 Broadway and this was a hangout for his gang. McLaughlin and his mob operated from Kenmore avenue apartments.

The women would frequent all the gambling halls at night and seek to entice the winners to places where they might safely be robbed. If their wiles weren't sufficiently effective they would report to the Kenmore avenue address by telephone whenever a man with a large amount of money on his person was about to leave, the detectives explained.

Money for All the Gang.

The Moran-McLaughlin gunmen were said to be employed at the gambling joints as guards, protectors against other holsters. Their pay was said to have been from $15 to $25 a day and they were said to have enjoyed occasional affluence through the operations of the three "graces," who were shoplifters by day and wallet lifters by night.

And so prosperity was smiling benignly on the north side gang, men and women alike. But then came the police order: "All gambling prohibited!" and there were no more lambs with golden fleece.

So, it was decided last night, the word was passed: "Back to the hoist; it's safe, sure, and profitable."

Roisner Tells His Story.

"I received a telephone call in Minneapolis last Wednesday," Roisner told Deputy Grady last night. "Solly Weisman, whom I have known for many years, asked me when I was coming to Chicago, and I told him I'd be here Thursday.

"He called me at the Bismarck hotel soon after my arrival and asked me to meet him in the lobby of the Morrison. I started to walk there and a man stopped me and said Solly had sent him to drive me there in his automobile. I stepped into it.

"'Your're going to be taken plenty,' this fellow said after we started, and he put a gun against me. I was forced to put on glasses so arranged with adhesive tape that I could just see in a very small circle straight ahead of me. I don't know where I was taken.

Says Gang Beat Him Up.

"When they brought me into some room there were four or five men there who had black stocking caps over their heads. They all jumped on me and hit me with guns, fists, and feet.

"They said: 'You dirty rat, you robbed our friends of twenty-four cars of alcohol.' I protested that I had never had a deal in that much alcohol, but they told me they were going to make me pay plenty.

"They said they wanted $200,000 or they would kill me. I said I couldn't possibly raise it and eventually they came down to $75,000. They'd come into my room every hour or two and beat me some more while I was tied hand and foot. They always wore the masks.

Compromise on $75,000.

"I agreed to try and get them $75,000 and they asked me who I knew in Chicago that could act as go-between. I said I couldn't think of any one, except Grosscurth, and they said they couldn't trust him.

"They kept asking me, 'Do you know any one from St. Paul who is in Chicago now?' and I guessed several fellows, and finally they almost put the name of Ginsberg in my mouth.

"I said Ginsberg would be all right, so they said they'd send for him, and soon afterward Ginsberg came to see me. I talked alone with Ginsberg for a time and told him I'd like to get them to come down to $35,000. Ginsberg said he didn't care if I didn't give them anything, but he'd do whatever I suggested.

"I wrote several letters and he said he would deliver them. Then, this afternoon, I heard the men in the next room talking. They were reading the newspapers and they said, 'It's out.' Then they came into the room and released me and took me to the bathroom.

"Two of them put guns to my head and said they were going to kill me but the others came in and pushed them aside. Then they told me that if I ever identified them they would kill me and would burn my wife's legs off. They let me get dressed and I was taken out in an automobile with the glasses on me again so I couldn't see, and after a five minute ride I was put out in the 5500 block on Sheridan road."

Denies Seeing Weisman.

Roisner was insistent he had not seen Weisman at his place of captivity. Ginsberg, in his statement to Deputy Grady, said Weisman was there. He added that Weisman is a hoodlum well known in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Kansas City.

Before Roisner told his story to Deputy Grady, Chief of Detectives William O'Connor said he had been told Roisner was induced to come to Chicago to buy $200,000 worth of diamonds stolen in Cleveland. O'Connor said his information was that the hoisters had expected Roisner to have $75,000 in cash with him to pay for the stolen gems and when he disappointed them they decided to make him get that amount for them.

Detectives Hunt Stolen Gems.

Roisner, however, denied this. Burns detective agency operatives were waiting at the detective bureau to question him on this subject, their interest being the recovery of the gems. The name of McLaughlin had seemed significant to them in this connection, they said, McLaughlin being known as a specialist in diamond thefts.

But no diamonds appeared and none of the extortioners could be identified, so charges of conspiracy, larceny and disorderly conduct were made against the prisoners.

Besides those already mentioned, the persons arrested because of addresses in Ginsberg's possession were Michael Atol, taken at the Regent hotel, 5042 Kenmore avenue, who was one of the 112 indicted in Cleveland; Moe Barron, alias Joseph Stone, and Mike Roberts, arrested at the "Gee" saloon, and Solbmon Cohep, who was found in Ginsberg's room.

ROYAL FAMILY O. K.'S TERMS OF FERDINAND WILL

BUCHAREST, Roumania, Dec. 3.—(AP)—Queen Marie and all the members of the royal family who are beneficiaries under the late King Ferdinand's will today signed the act of division of Ferdinand's estate. Gen. Condescu represented former Crown Prince Carol, and the regency signed for little King Michael.

Other signatories were Princess Helen, mother of King Michael; Princess Ileana, Prince Nicholas, and former Queen Elizabeth and former King George of Greece. Prince Stirbey represented Queen Marie of Jugo-Slavia.

It took the lawyers more than three months to straighten out King Ferdinand's estate, which was extremely complicated.

EAST IS EAST, BUT WEST IS ROTTEN, PROFESSOR SAYS

Only Tells Us, He Assures, Because He's Our Friend

Princeton, N. J., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—East is east, but the west is rotten, according to Prof. Walter L. Whittlesey in an interview printed in the Princetonian. This gentleman is professor of politics and handles his subject with a rough tongue.

He said today, for example, that the middle west is full of grafting officials and is no better than a parasite on the east.

He said, furthermore, that Mayor Thompson is a poisonous blatherskite and that Chicago politics is a scent in the nostrils of decency.

The interview attributed to Prof. Whittlesey follows:

"The middle west now suffers acutely from political Elmer Gantryism. Chicago is a great and powerful city, lifting marble monuments of marvelous beauty to its smoky skies, turning with equal versatility from hoisting the price of butter and eggs and bread and fuel to organizing murders as a factor in the local beer trade.

"Birthplace of Crime."

"It is doubtful if a more poisonous blatherskite than the present mayor of this corn belt metropolis ever attained so high an office in American politics.

"Chicago's trade unions, born of and torn by violence and ill-will, have developed methods of force and fraud, copied extensively elsewhere and responsible today for much of the nation's industrial dishonesty and unrest. Chicago is now the working center of the United States that earns its own living, but the politics of Chicago is a scent in the nostrils of civil decency, while its reformers compute elaborately that, out of a survey of 6,783 electors who did not vote at one election, some 3,921 did not vote because they did not care to vote. That vicious circle shows no sign of weakening.

"Parasite on East."

"Business men of the middle west are rapidly achieving a position of power with respect to coal, iron, oil, motors, railroads, and all of the means by which our civilization plays its trick and goes forward, but the journalism of the middle west seems to have been dry rotting for thirty years, and middle western representation in congress has run down correspondingly in the same period.

"Despite its own self esteem and self advertising, despite the brag and boom of the stump speakers, the middle west today is politically parasitic on the east—a liability, dead weight, a drag on the nation's political leadership, effort and progress.

Calls Us Dumb Hicks.

"Pumpkin busting westerners, reelected time after time by their fellow hicks, rise by dumb seniority to the chairmanship of important committees in the house and the senate and there they balk and lame and distort the policy of President and cabinet in whom the nation believe.

"These remarks are offered in a spirit of friendly admiration for the corn belt. Our great middle west is building up a civilization where one is sorely needed. In that task these apostles of flivver and silo deserve sympathy and encouragement when they deserve it. The part of friendship is to call their attention sternly to the facts in the case, to the obscene and neglected truth of this parisiticism in our national politics."

WHY CAN'T HE HAVE HIS PONY IN PALACE? BOY KING WONDERS

[Copyright, 1927, By the New York Times.]

PARIS, Dec. 3.—King Michael of Roumania has a logical mind, though youth and inexperience sometimes lead to faulty premises. He has been photographed often, so when George London, French newspaper man, went to "interview" him last week the youthful king insisted: "If you have no camera you are not a journalist."

He stuck to his argument obstinately, but, to make amends, suggested: "I will give you a nice big photograph of mine."

M. London asked for a dedication. The king was covered with confusion. Though he speaks English as well as Roumanian, he cannot yet write.

King Michael showed with pride an electric train and an automobile which were slightly damaged as a result of violent collisions with a door. To M. London he confided that for some reason or other which he could not understand he was not allowed to have his pony in the royal apartments.

"Without betraying other state secrets which the king confided to me, I can disclose that the boy has not forgotten his father, Prince Carol. He talks about him often and asks for news of him," M. London said.

CONGRESS SET FOR 6 MONTHS' STORMY TERM

Battle First Over Vare, Smith Taking Seats.

BULLETIN.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Estimates made today put the senate's attitude on the seating of Vare and Frank L. Smith as approximately this: For seating them, 54; against giving them seats, 56.

BY ARTHUR SEARS HENNING.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—The Seventieth congress of the United States will meet for the first time at noon Monday.

That will begin a session lasting six months or more which bids fair to be about the most spectacular and the most critical period of peace time national lawmaking in our history.

It will be the last congress of Mr. Coolidge's present term of office and a good deal of its doings will be influenced by the calculations of its members as to the probability or improbability of having to reckon with the President for a succeeding four year period.

Try for Popular Favor.

It will be the session of congress leading up to the Republican and Democratic national conventions and will be the arena in which parties, factions and candidates for the White House will maneuver to gain popular favor, campaign capital and other advantage in the preliminaries of the 1928 presidential contest.

In the ever deepening shadow of the approaching national election the legislation at this session and all the other activities of congress will be influenced by partisan considerations.

It will be a session that powerfully will affect the fortunes of presidential aspirants. And to add to the spice of the situation there will be numbered among the national legislators in this session more candidates for President than ever before. There will be a candidate presiding over the house in the person of Speaker Longworth.

Many Candidates in Senate.

The senate will be alive with candidates: Vice President Dawes and Majority Leader Curtis heading the contingent of Republican aspirants in the senate and Senators Reed of Missouri, Walsh of Montana and Minority Leader Robinson of Arkansas leaning in the forefront of the field of Democratic possibilities.

The fireworks will start promptly. Even before the President's annual message is received and while the house is quietly reflecting Mr. Longworth speaks the senate will be observed in a state of eruption over the question of admitting Senator-elect Smith of Illinois and Vare of Pennsylvania. The senate will be unable to get down to the business of legislation and possibly will be unable to organize until it has decided whether Smith and Vare should be given the oath of office and allowed their seats pending a hearing of the slush fund charges against them.

In the house there will be 237 Republicans, 195 Democrats, 2 Farmer-Laborites and one Socialist. The senate will be composed of 48 Republicans if Smith and Vare are temporarily seated, 47 Democrats and one Farmer-Laborite.

Radicals' Balance of Power.

The radical Republican bloc will hold the balance of power in the senate and, possessing a veto on legislation and organization, will make the senate a storm area from the moment it convenes. The administration will be at the mercy of the Democrats and radical Republicans, who intend to press an anti-third term resolution aimed at President Coolidge and to hector the present occupant of the White House in every way their fertility of imagination suggests.

There will be spectacular struggles over numerous legislative projects replete with political implications. First, there will come the tax reduction bill in which there will be fighting all along the line beginning in the house next week and increasing in ferocity when the measure reaches the senate. The principal subjects of contention will be the amount of the reduction, which the administration desires to keep within $225,000,000, the lowering of the corporation tax and automobile, admission and other levies and the repeal of the inheritance tax, which Secretary of the Treasury Mellon advocates.

Helped Republicans.

It remains to be seen whether the Democrats and radical Republicans will find common cause this time in seeking to overturn the administration tax program and force the adoption of one of their choosing. A coalition of the character was successful in the 1926 session but ill fated for the Democrats, who held this mistake responsible in part for the ensuing disaster to their party in the presidential election of that year. They were so chastened in the next session that they spurned the radical Republicans and helped the regular Republicans enact the present tax law.

One of the great battles of the session will be waged over farm relief and the McNary-Haugen and other surplus control schemes will be offered again and the administration will have an alternative proposal devoid of the equalization fee and other provisions which the President has pronounced unworkable and economically unsound. Attempts will be made to put through a compromise between the corn belt plan of farm relief which is represented by the McNary-Haugen bill and the administration proposals. The corn belt partisans of former Gov. Frank O. Lowden of Illinois charge that the farm relief compromises mainly are interested in throwing a sop to the farmers in the hope of eliminating the issue from the presidential election and thereby removing embarrassment for such potential candidates as Hughes, Hoover, Longworth and Coolidge.

The compromisers retort that if a farm relief bill be not passed at this session it will be because the Lowdenites prefer to keep alive the only issue justifying the candidacy of their leader for President.

A subject that will receive prolonged attention is that of Mississippi river flood control. Congress will have before it the recommendations formulated by five army boards. They are the Mississippi river commission, the special spillways board created by congress in 1926, the reservoirs board, the navigation board, and the bypaths board. One hundred and fifty military and civilian engineers carried out the survey upon which the final flood control plan will be based.

The army engineer corps in the past has consistently advocated a policy of "levees only" and insisted after every flood that the lower Mississippi valley could be adequately protected by "bigger and better levees." It is safe to assume, therefore, that the principal emphasis in the forthcoming plan will be upon improvements in the levee system. Levees of the most modern construction from Cairo to New Orleans are certain to be recommended together with adequate levee protection along the Missouri, the Ohio, and other tributaries.

Unofficial estimates of the cost of a flood control system adequate to safeguard the valley against a maximum rise in the level of the Mississippi range from $400,000,000 to $500,000,000, although some estimates from the affected areas have placed the cost as high as a billion dollars.

The expenditure would be made over a period of ten or more years and it is probable that not much more than $50,000,000 will be appropriated for the permanent flood control plan during the next session of congress. Under existing laws appropriations for Mississippi flood control are limited to $10,000,000 annually.

Alien Property Bill.

On the program for passage by the house before Christmas is the alien property bill killed by the senate filibuster last session.

The bill provides for the return to the former German owners of 60 per cent of the value of property held by the alien property custodian and 60 per cent of the value of the German ships sequestered by the United States upon its entrance into the war. The remaining 40 per cent of the German property will be placed in a special fund to be established in the treasury, together with an appropriation of $50,000,000.

National defense legislation will figure prominently in the work of the session. The principal matter at issue will be the cruiser building program. The administration is to present a moderate building program which, when completed, would leave American cruiser strength considerably short of Great Britain's and not much superior to Japan's.

Railroad Consolidation.

A measure that will be considered early in the session is the railroad consolidation bill which will be introduced by Chairman Parker of the house committee on interstate commerce.

A pressing question at this session will be that of ways and means of creating and fostering an American merchant marine. Proposals of government aid to merchant shipbuilders and operators in order to utilize the ships as auxiliaries in time of war and to muster the crews into the naval service will be given serious consideration.

HOUSE TO ABOLISH 16 COMMITTEES, CREATE ONE ON EXPENDITURES

Washington, D. C., Dec. 3.—(AP)—House Republican leaders today approved a plan for abolishing sixteen house committees and creating one new one.

The proposal will be called up in the house shortly after congress convenes and is expected to be put through without serious opposition as Democratic leaders have acquiesced in the move.

The action was taken today at a meeting of the house Republican committee on committees. The committees to be abolished are those on alcoholic liquor traffic, railways, and canals, woman suffrage, industrial arts and expositions, mileage, and the eleven expenditure committees.

The new committee to be created will be known as one on expenditures and will care for work heretofore performed by the eleven separate committees.

Chairman Snell of the house rules committee said that membership on nearly a dozen other house committees would be increased.

HULL OPENS DRIVE TO BRING G. O. P. CONVENTION HERE

Tells Butler City Can Roof Stadium.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Chicago's advantages as a contender for the 1928 Republican convention were presented to William M. Butler, chairman of the national committee, today by Representative W. E. Hull [Rep., Ill.], Chicago, according to the presentation, is the agricultural hub of the nation in addition to being the most centrally located of any of the cities under consideration.

Mr. Hull told Mr. Butler that Chicago will offer greater inducements than any other bidder when its representatives appear before the committee on Tuesday. In addition to the greatest number of high class hotels of any city seeking the meeting, he said that Chicago is willing to go farther than any of its competitors in accommodating the convention itself.

Assuming that the new municipal auditorium will not be completed in time, Mr. Hull said that extensive additions will be made to the present Coliseum or if desired arrangements will be made to roof the stadium at Soldiers' field.

"The only objection to Chicago's selection which I have heard is the feeble one that Mayor Thompson's control of Republican politics in Chicago makes some other convention city preferable," Mr. Hull said. "That, of course, is the height of absurdity."

Regardless of any inducements which Chicago may make, the impression given by members of the committee is that it has little if any chance of favorable consideration.

TRAFFIC SAFETY LAWS ARE SOUGHT IN TWO PETITIONS

Legislation to abate the toll of automobiles is proposed by the Chicago safety council in letters mailed yesterday to Mayor Thompson and Secretary of State Louis L. Emmerson.

The suggestions are: An ordinance against jay walking; an ordinance licensing drivers, requiring examinations; an ordinance requiring periodical testing of brakes; an ordinance requiring the bonding of drivers against public liability risk; an ordinance requiring drivers to demonstrate their ability to render first aid, and an ordinance requiring all cars to be equipped with a first aid kit approved by the Chicago health department.

A similar petition, asking that all drivers be licensed, is being prepared by the public schools safety committee and will be presented to the council.

Four deaths yesterday raised the Cook county 1927 motor toll to 906. Erwin Lanzer, 9 years old, 1519 South 61st avenue, Cicero, died from injuries received Thursday when he was struck near his home by an automobile driven by Theodore Major of Berwyn.

Marquette police are seeking to identify a man about 50 years old killed at Taylor and Western avenue by a truck driver who failed to stop. The man was thrown in the path of another machine that ran over his body before Charles Olszewski, 2461 Clybourne avenue, the driver, could stop.

As he ran across the street in play, Adolph Wisnewski, 11 years old, 1368 Mohawk street, was run down in front of 1512 Larrabee street by a taxicab. He died later at the Grant hospital. Police held Chris Garwell, 1133 North Lawlor avenue, for the inquest.

Martin Seltz, 38 years old, 4412 Thomas street, was killed when he was struck by an automobile at Kostner and Chicago avenues, driven by Daniel McKenna, 27 years old, 5444 Flournoy street.

$600,000 VALUE OF TWO LIQUOR SEIZURES IN EAST

New York, Dec. 3.—(AP)—Two $300,000 liquor seizures, one at Elizabeth, N. J., and another by a coast guard cutter off Bluepoint, L. I., were reported today.

Eight men were arrested in the Elizabeth raid and federal agents seized a distilling plant, equipment and stock. Motor trucks laden with alleged alcohol led police to the plant.

The steam trawler Newton Bay, said to be owned by the Acadia Shipping company, Ltd., of Quebec, was brought to anchor in the lower bay by the coast guard cutter Gresham after a chase of seven miles. Her cargo, included 40,000 sacks of assorted liquors and champagne.

Firemen Rescue Two from Burning Rooming House

Overcome by smoke from a fire that broke out early this morning in a rooming house at 9 West Chicago avenue, a middle aged man and an elderly woman were rescued by firemen. They are Thomas Mitchell, in whose room the fire is believed to have started, and Mrs. W. S. Kusel, 68 years old. After being revived Mrs. Kusel returned to rescue her two canaries. Thirteen other roomers were driven in scanty attire to the street.

SUING WIFE TO ASK CHANCE TO WIN MATE BACK

Gottlob H. Hinderer, 60 years old, retired business man residing at Kankakee, Ill., is going to be wooed during the holidays by his estranged wife, Mrs. Margaret Hinderer, according to her attorney, if she is granted the opportunity by Superior Judge John J. Sullivan.

Yesterday the wife instructed the lawyer, Benjamin B. Davis, to prepare her unusual petition for a continuance of her divorce suit, which will be called for trial before Judge Sullivan Tuesday.

Virtually alone in middle age, she longs to return to the house where she lived with her husband for thirteen years, according to her lawyer, and she believes that the spirit of Christmas will aid in bringing about a reconciliation.

Last spring Judge Joseph Sabath tried without success to bring the couple together. Mr. Hinderer said he wouldn't invite her back, but that the "latchstring will be out if she returns."

Mrs. Hinderer told her lawyer she is going to spend the holidays in her old social circle, where she will probably meet Mr. Hinderer. Her divorce bill charges acts of cruelty that are denied by the husband.

FOUND DEAD OF HEART DISEASE.

William Burnett, 50 years old, 732 West Washington boulevard, was found dead in bed, supposedly of heart disease, yesterday afternoon by fellow roomers.

INSULL MAY NOT GET TO TELL OF POLITICAL FUND

Reed Puts Contempt Case Up to Senate.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Unless the senate approves a continuation of the activities of the Reed special committee, Samuel Insull and Daniel J. Schuyler, Chicagoans facing a contempt charge, are unlikely to get an opportunity to tell the story which they have refused to disclose heretofore.

Senator James A. Reed [Dem., Mo.], chairman of the special committee which investigated congressional expenditures in Illinois, Pennsylvania and other states, made this evident today on his returning to Washington.

Offer to Testify.

Senator Reed announced that he had received letters from Mr. Insull and Mr. Schuyler offering to give all the facts relative to the Insull contributions to campaign funds in 1926.

It was on the basis of their refusal to give information as to persons to whom money was paid for county campaign purposes that the committee last winter recommended to the senate that they be cited for contempt. The committee held that it had power to compel them to give this information, as well as facts regarding contributions to senatorial campaign funds.

"Some one will offer a resolution in the senate next week for a continuance of the powers of the committee," said Senator Reed. "I do not know what the senate will do with respect to this resolution. The committee has far from completed its work."

Wait on Senate Action.

"Mr. Insull and Mr. Schuyler have both written letters to the committee that they are now willing to answer questions which they refused to answer before. I don't know whether the committee will give them an opportunity or not. My own notion is that the committee will do nothing about it until the senate acts on the resolution to continue its powers.

"If the senate refuses to continue the powers of the committee it would presumably be unable to do anything more than submit its final report to the senate on what transpired in the last session."

Penalty Is Jail Sentence.

Senator Reed's attitude was construed as meaning in effect that if friends of Mr. Insull desire to have him relieved of possible prosecution for contempt of the senate, the penalty for which is a jail sentence, they must encourage action by the senate in support of the resolution continuing the Reed committee.

Republican regulars have opposed any extension of the authority of the Reed committee, fearing that investigations would be made in various other states besides Illinois and Pennsylvania, where its activities centered last winter. It was because of the filibuster conducted by Senator David Reed [Rep., Pa.] against the resolution for a continuance of the work of the committee that legislation was tied up in the closing days of the session of congress last March.

Hopes to Pass on Smith Case.

Just what the special committee would do if its authority is continued was not disclosed by Senator Reed. He indicated, however, that an attempt probably will be made to have the cases involving the rights of Frank L. Smith of Illinois and William S. Vare of Pennsylvania to seats in the senate referred to this committee. Ordinarily the cases would go to the committee on privileges and elections but Senator Reed contended that inasmuch as expenditures in the Smith and Vare campaigns were investigated by his committee there was good reason why it should handle the present phase of the matter. It is presumed that if the life of the committee is extended investigations will be conducted into expenditures during the 1928 presidential and senatorial campaigns.

Senator Reed said that he has heard nothing from Thomas W. Cunningham of Pennsylvania, who also was to be cited for contempt under the plans of the committee. Mr. Cunningham refused to disclose the source of funds used in the Vare campaign. The Insull and Schuyler testimony related to the Smith campaign.

GOV. RITCHIE'S HAT IS STILL IN RING DESPITE HIS BOOST FOR SMITH

New York, Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Gov. Albert C. Ritchie of Maryland, who has been viewed by the friends of Gov. Al Smith in the light of an auxiliary, made it clear to persons who have talked with him here that he still was a serious contender for the presidential nomination, and that the Smith people would have to fight for every delegate bound by Ritchie pledges.

What strength in delegates Gov. Ritchie may be in a position to expect is not known outside of his own camp, except, of course, that it is assumed that the Maryland delegation will go to the convention pledged to support him for the nomination.

Nonunion Carpenter's Home Damaged by Bomb

Fifteen roomers in a three story frame building at 439 Webster avenue fled panic stricken early this morning when the building was wrecked by a black powder bomb. Damage was estimated at more than $1,000. Antonio Bermudas, a Spaniard, owner of the rooming house, told police that his activities as a nonunion carpenter may have led to the bombing.

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Jonathan Foulk celebrated his 110th birthday anniversary by cutting a birthday cake with his 101 year old friend, former United States Senator Galusha Cole here today. Foulk never smoked, drank or chewed.

GUY HUSTON AND ANOTHER GUILTY, THREE ACQUITTED

Bank Stock Trial Ends in Minnesota.

Mankato, Minn., Dec. 3.—(AP)—Two of five former officials of the Southern Minnesota Joint Stock Land bank were found guilty of using the mails to defraud in connection with a stock issue of the bank in the summer of 1925, by a jury in federal court here tonight.

Guy Huston of New York and Chicago, former fiscal agent, and W. H. Gold, Miami, Fla., were convicted.

Glenn and Donald Gold, sons of W. H. Gold and former vice presidents, and J. E. Huston, a director of the bank, were acquitted.

Face a Heavy Penalty.

Guy Huston was found guilty of eleven of the twelve counts in the indictment, all eleven counts covering the charge of using the mails to defraud. The twelfth of which he was acquitted charged conspiracy to defraud.

W. H. Gold, 62 years old, former president of the bank, was found guilty on only one count of the 12 in the indictment and the jury recommended that "the utmost leniency" be given him by the court.

W. H. Gold was sentenced to pay a fine of $1,000, but when the proceedings extended to midnight Judge Cant postponed sentencing of Guy Huston until Monday morning.

The maximum penalty for each of the counts in the mail charge is five years in prison and a fine of $1,000.

Planned Big Expansion.

The defendants were former officers of the Southern Minnesota Joint Stock Land bank of Redwood Falls, Minn., indicted on charges of conspiracy to defraud and use of the mails for fraudulent purposes.

They were indicted after the bank in an expansion program, increased the capital stock in 1925 from $1,800,000 to $3,000,000 and raised the dividend rate on the capital stock from 9 to 10 per cent.

CAN'T BELIEVE IT, SAYS VICTIM OF LOVER'S CRIME

Teacher Will Recover from Dynamite Blast.

BY WILLARD EDWARDS.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Ottawa, Ill., Dec. 3.—[Special]—"O, I can't believe he did it. I can't believe it. We loved each other so." That whisper, coming through the mass of bandages binding the head of Miss Iola Bradford, age 23, a school teacher at Dana, Ill., was her first statement today in reply to the information that her injuries were the result of a charge of dynamite placed in the schoolhouse stove by her sweetheart, Hiram Reed. Reed, the 24 year old son of a Mossville, Ill., farmer, is in the county jail here after confessing he sought to kill the girl. His motive was to avoid a marriage with Miss Bradford, he said.

Miss Bradford will not die, physicians said today, unless an infection sets in. She had recovered strength enough to be told the cause of the explosion which mangled her chest, arms, and face as she was lighting a fire in the stove in the little schoolhouse.

Behind a pretty face, which will be scarred for the remainder of her life, the school teacher possesses a keen mind. She admitted that she had scorned the conventions and expressed no regret for doing so. She said frankly that she had been madly in love with Reed for two years.

"My Ideal of Man."

"I made up my mind long ago that if I married any one, it would be Hiram," she said. "He was my ideal of a man. And I took my part in a love affair with open eyes.

"Three months ago I advised him that my physician told me I would become a mother. He seemed to be frightened. I was happy because I was sure he would do the right thing. I looked forward to having a child. But he insisted that I take certain medicines and see several physicians in an endeavor to avoid the responsibilities of parenthood.

"Finally, he seemed resigned to affairs, and Wednesday night he called late to see me. It was one proof of his love that he had to drive forty miles from Mossville to my sister's home near Dana. We talked together until 1 o'clock in the morning. He said he would marry me Sunday and that he had already bought a ring which he would send me the next day."

Placed Dynamite in Stove.

According to his confession, Reed went immediately from his meeting with the girl to the schoolhouse a few hundred yards down the road and placed the dynamite in the stove, adjusting a fuse so that the school teacher would light it when she started a fire in the morning.

"I was thinking of nobody but Hiram as I walked to the schoolhouse next morning," continued Miss Bradford, "I was so happy I was singing. When I got to the schoolhouse, a dozen children were already there. I sent them out to play while I fixed the fire. I touched a match to the firewood and was stooping over, adjusting the draft, when the explosion came.

"I was able to stagger as far as the door and then fell unconscious. I don't remember anything more."

The wounded girl was informed Reed hoped to avoid prosecution for his deed by marrying her upon her recovery.

"Marry him?" she repeated doubtfully. "If he really did that, I would hardly be safe marrying him. But it still seems almost impossible to believe. It wasn't like him."

Attempts Repudiation.

Reed today made a half-hearted attempt to repudiate his confession of Friday. But he finally told interviewers to quote him as sticking to his original confession.

"No one would believe me, anyway," he remarked dolefully.

Reed then advanced a new theory to account for his murder attempt. It was an act of mercy on his part to attempt the death of the schoolteacher, he explained.

"The explosion would have appeared accidental," he said. "Thus Iola and her child would be saved much trouble and disgrace. As it is, look at all the disagreeable publicity she is getting."

"I didn't have to confess to this, you know," Reed said unexpectedly to a questioner. "There was absolutely no way of connecting me with the explosion. If you want to call it a perfect crime, it was one. The only possible way of tracing me was through the sale of dynamite and that was bought two months before in a Peoria store which sells plenty of the explosive to farmers for blasting purposes.

"But the state's attorney told me I would not be prosecuted if Iola married me, and I knew she would be glad to do that, so I told them all about it."

Although Reed has made no hint of what his defense will be, State's Attorney Russell Hanson today made preparations against an insanity plea.

"Reed's only chance now is an insanity plea," Mr. Hanson said. "He cannot possibly devise any other defense. I will have alienists examine him at once, so that other doctors may not come in here later and testify he was mentally unsound. His attempt at murder was that of a cowardly mind, not that of a diseased one."

Observers of Reed say that he is apparently a normal youth, mentally and physically. His companions have never noted any eccentricities except a desire to be known as an irresistible conqueror of women.

Mr. Hanson received a physician's report today asserting that the explosion may have killed the school teacher's unborn child. It will not be possible to confirm this report for some time, it was said.

Children Are Saved.

The little schoolhouse with its wrecked interior was visited by hundreds of farmers from miles around today. Most of them know both Reed and Miss Bradford and, according to their remarks, it had been an accepted theory for a year that the two were madly in love with each other and were to be married.

Nine year old Grace Johnson, who was in the schoolhouse with the teacher at the time of the explosion, was saved from serious injury or death, it was learned today, only because she was looking into her desk at a far corner of the room when the stove exploded. She was thus saved from being struck by flying particles of iron. She was slightly cut by flying glass.

Miss Bradford's action in sending the other children out to play while she started the fire probably saved the lives of many, it was said by authorities.

Reed occupies a cell in the La Salle county jail next to Harry Hill, who is accused of murdering his mother and burying her in the basement of their Streator home.

Blames "Godlessness."

"The story reads like some grotesque piece of Russian fiction," said the Rev. Charles W. McClelland, pastor of the First Presbyterian church. "But the scene here is on Illinois prairies and the characters are all decent farmer folk. Young Reed contemplated a horrible crime and thought that there was no harm in it if he executed it successfully. The only regret he seems to feel is that he has been found out. It is only another example of the results of Godlessness among the present generation."

Most of those who have known Reed for years still doubt that he could have committed the crime unless insane. He has never been in trouble before. He is known as a well behaved young man. He doesn't dance, he said, and he has attended few parties. He is interested in music, plays the violin, and has been taking lessons on the saxophone.

HALDEMAN-JULIUS AND WIFE REMARRIED IN 'DEBUNKED' CEREMONY

Kansas City, Mo., Dec. 3.—[United Press.]—A protest against established marriage ceremonies was enacted here tonight in the remarriage of Mr. and Mrs. E. Haldeman-Julius, Girard, Kas., publishers and authors.

Their first marriage—which, according to a statement made several days ago by Haldeman-Julius, was performed after the birth of their daughter, Josephine—was a regular church ceremony.

Tonight's ceremony, Haldeman-Julius said, was "minus all the bunk and hokum which characterises the usual marriage."

The remarriage was performed by the Rev. L. M. Birkhead, Liberal pastor of the All Souls Unitarian church, who performed the "companionate marriage ceremony" of Aubrey Roselle, university student, and Josephine Haldeman-Julius last week.

The phrase "whom God hath joined together" was omitted, as were other parts of the usual ceremony which the principals regarded as "superstitious."

EVANSTON DAILY NEWSPAPER PUT IN RECEIVERSHIP

The Evanston News-Index, which existed in the North Shore suburb as a newspaper and publishing concern for fifty years, has been placed in receivership.

It was announced yesterday in the columns of the paper that the receivers, H. Ellis Sidley and Edwin D. Buell, had changed the name to the Evening News-Index of Evanston and that it will continue to be published daily. The receivership, it was explained, was adopted as a means to line up old debts of the concern and make arrangements for paying them.

Important changes in personnel are to take effect on Monday. Allen D. Albert, who has been editor and publisher since last summer, and two of his sons are to retire. Joseph P. Northrup will become editor and L. D. Leavitt superintendent of commercial printing.

FRANCE SEEKS ALL-EUROPEAN SECURITY PACT

Tries to Get Russia Into Deal at Geneva.

GENEVA, Switzerland, Dec. 3.—(AP) Conclusion of a general pact of security for continental Europe, including Russia, was proposed by Joseph Paul-Boncour of France tonight as a solution of the problem of putting Europe on a permanent peace basis and as a foundation for disarmament.

M. Paul-Boncour discussed the question tonight with Ahatole Lunarchsky, member of the Russian delegation to the preparatory disarmament commission after adjournment of the commission. After the interview the French statesman said Foreign Minister Briand, who is due here tomorrow morning, would meet Maxim Litvinoff, head of the Russian delegation, tomorrow evening.

The Russians have postponed their departure until Monday in order to make conversations, which the French hope may also include Sir Austen Chamberlain, the British foreign secretary, who is en route to Geneva.

May Put Plan to Russia.

It is considered probable that M. Briand will broach the continental pact idea to Litvinoff, although the French realize great difficulty in the way of acceptance will be the soviet opposition to accepting obligations with so-called capitalistic powers.

Compulsory arbitration of all disputes, it is pointed out, necessarily would be the basis of the pact, with guarantees of its fulfillment. M. Paul-Boncour said he was told by the Russians that the masses of people in Russia genuinely fear an aggressive war upon them by the powers of western Europe.

The Frenchman said that he replied that a security pact was the best way to remove this fear.

It is suggested that the pact would not include Great Britain, due to the expressed desire of the British not to undertake commitments on the continent in addition to those prescribed by the Locarno agreements and the British membership in the league of nations.

Russia Agrees to Outlaw Gas.

M. Litvinoff announced tonight that he had signed a letter of adherence in behalf of Russia to the protocol condemning the use in war of poisonous and asphyxiating gases.

The anti-gas protocol, which was proposed by Theodore E. Burton, as head of the American delegation, was elaborated as an annex to the convention for the control of international traffic in arms. It was immediately signed by 27 nations, but has been ratified by France alone. American ratification still is pending.

ARMS PARLEY IN 1928

BY HENRY WALES.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

[Copyright: 1927: By The Chicago Tribune.]

GENEVA, Dec. 3.—Before the end of 1928 the league of nations general disarmament conference will meet at Geneva. The preparatory disarmament commission then will submit a concrete plan for reducing or limiting the strength of armies, navies and military aviation, proposing detailed figures on the quotas of troops, warships and airplanes each country may possess.

The representatives of the world's powers then will discuss whether the forces allocated are sufficient for national security.

This was decided today at the closing session of the fourth conference of the preparatory disarmament commission, when under the whip of Count von Bernstorff of Germany, former ambassador to the United States, and Maxim Litvinoff of Russia, March 15 was adopted as the date for the next meeting of the commission. Litvinoff tried to have Jan. 10 set as the date, but was defeated.

To Meet on Feb. 20.

Meanwhile the subcommittee on security decided to meet Feb. 20. It intends then to offer a complete report coördinating the questions of guarantees by regional pacts for discussion on March 15 by the preparatory commission.

Count von Bernstorff and M. Litvinoff, however, scored a valuable parliamentary tactical victory, when they forced the commission to agree to pursue the disarmament problem regardless of whether the security phase is ready for discussion, thereby dissociating the two questions which the French, and little entente powers hitherto have asserted are inalienable.

The soviets scored an important point with the aid of the German representative by leaving the gate open for the reintroduction of the Russian plan for total disarmament, presented last Wednesday, on March 15.

Heretofore it was understood that the next session of the preparatory commission would be merely for a second reading of the Anglo-French schemes presented last March, which are deadlocked pending direct conversations between the governments of the big powers.

Leaves Way for Soviet Plea.

The resolution calling the next conference does not stipulate that it is confined to a rereading of the draft of the disarmament convention, and opens the door to the soviet demand for serious examination of the Russian proposals for disbanding armies, sinking fleets, burning up airplanes, scrapping munitions factories, and razing forts.

M. Paul-Boncour of France made an unsuccessful plea to maintain the interdependence of security and disarmament and once more disinterred the Geneva protocol.

It is expected the general disarmament conference will be opened next October as soon as the league of nations assembly ends.

Mrs. F. T. Brown Bares Slander Charges in Suing Dahlbergs

The declaration in a $200,000 slander suit involving Mr. and Mrs. Bror Gustav Dahlberg as defendants and Mrs. Frank Townley Brown as plaintiff was filed in Superior court yesterday by Attorney Lloyd Faxon.

This, it was intimated, marks the prologue of a legal battle in which social register personages will furnish ammunition in the shape of testimony for the plaintiff, and in which royalty in the person of Princess Marie de Bourbon, cousin of King Alfonso of Spain, may be expected to lend moral if not verbal support to the defendant.

The "casus belli" for which the monetary recompense is asked was a series of poison pen letters to Chicago newspapers attacking the motives of the Dahlbergs in entertaining the Spanish princess at their home at 999 Lake Shore drive.

Charges Reputation Hurt.

Mrs. Brown charges that both Mr. and Mrs. Dahlberg accused her of having been the authoress of the missives, and that these statements were made at various times among her friends and acquaintances to the extent of damaging her reputation and her credit.

Mr. and Mrs. Dahlberg, who are in New York, when told of the charges revealed in the suit, called the accusations "absurd, crazy, childish and utterly asinine." Mr. Dahlberg declared that neither he nor his wife knew Mrs. Brown, denied that she had ever been in their home, and denied seeking to meet her friends.

Although the praecipe of the suit was filed two months ago, Mr. Dahlberg said that he had been unaware of its nature.

Three instances when such remarks are said to have been made are cited in the declaration, two in October, 1926, and the third in February of the present year.

In the first, Mrs. Dahlberg is quoted in the declaration as having stated in the presence of friends of the plaintiff, that: "Both I and my husband know that Mrs. Frank Townley Brown is guilty of writing those letters." The second took place at the Dahlberg home, the document sets forth, when Mrs. Brown is alleged to have confronted Mrs. Dahlberg with the accusation that the latter was making such statements.

Emblem from King.

On that occasion, according to the declaration, Mrs. Dahlberg said in the presence of two friends of the complainant: "See this thing on my arm? It was given to me by the Spanish king and it means that if there is any one I want killed he'll have it done for me, and my husband has money enough to put you out of the way without your being missed. We both know you sent those letters and others."

A third instance, which is said to have occurred at the Art club, quotes Mrs. Dahlberg as saying: "There's that Brown woman; you know she's the one that wrote all those anonymous letters about me."

Further details of her social skirmishes with Mr. Dahlberg were given yesterday by Mrs. Brown, who stated that she had incurred the enmity of the former when she refused to introduce her to her friends.

"An Uninvited Guest."

Rebuffs seemed to make no impression on Mrs. Dahlberg, she declares, and once, she says, Mrs. Dahlberg came to a reception at the Brown home to which she had not been invited. There she sent a mutual friend to the hostess to ask that she be presented to persons attending, the declaration relates.

"I said to this man," Mrs. Brown related yesterday, "I cannot do that, and you know why I cannot—for a good and sufficient reason. Please leave my house and take her with you as quietly as possible."

The highest amount in the treasury was $51,758,000, in July. The Dec. 1 balance was $38,394,362.

COURT REFUSES WIFE, 25, DIVORCE FROM HUSBAND, 60

Superior Judge Oscar Hebel yesterday denied Mrs. Lenora J. Overman, 25 years old, a divorce from Harry W. Overman, 60, an insurance broker residing in Glen Ellyn. The judge cited Supreme court rulings to the effect that marriage is an institution for society as well as a contract between a man and woman and it should not be nullified on trivial grounds.

Mr. Overman was charged with cruelty and drunkenness. He admitted he occasionally took an "eye opener," but testified that liquor improved his disposition rather than ruffled it, as alleged by his wife. He said he scuffled with her in play, but never intended to hurt her, and told the court he wanted her to remain his wife.

The two were married in 1924 and separated last year.

DRY EXECUTIVES QUARREL OVER LEADER, POLICIES

Faction Says Anti-Saloon League Needs Shakeup.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Controversies over policies and leadership in coming campaigns which threaten to disrupt the organization split the Anti-Saloon league executive committee into hostile camps today.

Rival candidacies for the general superintendency of the league, interwoven with widely divergent views of the demands to be made on the major political parties in the 1928 presidential campaign, form the issue which may be carried to the floor of the league convention next week in an open fight.

A powerful group within the committee, convinced that the league's affairs have reached a critical stage and that a house cleaning of the high command is needed, are urging the selection of Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington as general superintendent to replace Dr. F. Scott McBride. The opposition to McBride, a former superintendent for the league in Illinois, centers in the general dissatisfaction with his leadership since the death of the late Wayne B. Wheeler and the widespread feeling among the rank and file of the drys that his "direct action" methods have done much to bring criticism upon the league and alienate contributors to its war chest.

Smith Backing Criticized.

In spite of the secrecy which surrounded the executive committee's heated session today, it became known that McBride was sharply censured by several members, who declared that his policy of throwing the league's support to "dry" candidates, regardless of their other moral qualifications or disqualifications, had brought the league into disrepute.

An outstanding example cited by the critics was McBride's advocacy of Frank L. Smith in the Illinois senatorial campaign in spite of the evidence disclosed by the Reed investigating committee that Smith, while still chairman of the state commerce commission, accepted campaign fund contributions from Samuel Insull, Chicago utility magnate.

"Political Meddling."

Coupled with the feeling that McBride had carried his "political meddling" too far for the league's good, Dr. Cherrington's supporters are a unit in insisting that both of the major political parties shall be required to include strong pronouncements in favor of the eighteenth amendment and enforcement of the Volstead act in their platforms.

McBride and his followers of the old Wheeler school in the league—Bishop Thomas H. Nicholson, national president of the league; Bishop James Cannon Jr. of Richmond, Va., and others—would make no such demand on the parties, holding that because the eighteenth amendment is in the constitution and the Volstead act is on the statute books there can be no further argument. They would be satisfied merely with pledges to enforce the law from the candidates.

MAY BE CHAPLAIN

THE REV. Z. B. T. PHILLIPS.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 3.—(AP)—Overlooking a host of active candidates from the Washington clergy, a committee of senate Republicans today selected the Rev. Z. B. T. Phillips, rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Episcopalian, as its choice for chaplain of the senate. He was not an active candidate for the post which was made vacant by the recent death of the Rev. J. J. Muir, Baptist. He formerly was rector of Trinity church in Chicago.

IMMIGRANT WIFE AND 2 CHILDREN VICTIMS OF GAS

Mrs. Lucia Assalonne, 38 years old, came to Cook county from Italy only two weeks ago. She didn't understand modern household conveniences and as a consequence she and her daughters, Nellie, 2 years old, and Domencia, 5, were killed by escaping gas in their home at 1476 Asbury avenue, Winnetka, yesterday afternoon.

Investigators found that water had leaked from a cooking vessel and extinguished the flame of a burner. The bodies of the mother and her children were found on a bed in an adjoining room. It is believed that the little girls first became drowsy and were placed on the bed, Mrs. Assalonne later lying down beside them.

Giuseppe Assalonne, father of the children, discovered the bodies when he returned home. He told police he had been working in the United States for several years and sent for his family after he had saved enough to purchase a home.

BRITAIN, FRANCE, GERMANY UNITE TO CURB ITALY

Take Step to Keep Peace in Europe.

BY JOHN STEELE.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

[Copyright: 1927: By The New York Times.]

LONDON, Dec. 3.—A sensational development of the Franco-Italian conflict is the organization of a new great power group consisting of Great Britain, France, and Germany, with the object of keeping peace in Europe.

The initiative was taken by Foreign Minister Gustav Stresemann of Germany, but Sir Austen Chamberlain and Aristide Briand, the foreign ministers of Great Britain and France, respectively, fell in immediately and the first result was the warning to Premier Benito Mussolini by Sir Austen that he would lose Great Britain's support if he made trouble in the Balkans. The second result was M. Briand's speech a few days ago, holding out the olive branch to Italy.

Will Discuss "Italian Peril."

It is understood now that France is willing to come to an agreement with Italy on the basis of granting the Rome government an outlet for the surplus population on condition that it ceases the pin pricking policy toward France and at the same time abandons the shadowy claims to Nice, Savoy, and other French territory.

When the three statesmen meet next week at Geneva, they will discuss plans to guard Europe against danger from the Italian policy.

MAKES NEW CONCESSION

BY JAY ALLEN.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

[Copyright: 1927: By The Chicago Tribune.]

PARIS, Dec. 3.—France made another conciliatory gesture toward Italy today when Foreign Minister Aristide Briand, three days after uttering a surprising flood of honeyed words in the chamber of deputies about the Italians, signed the modus vivendi settling the treatment to be accorded to Italians in France and French in Italy, with Count Mazzoni II., duce's ambassador.

Since there are but few French in Italy and an overwhelming number of Italians in France, this means France has given in to Rome in an effort to reach a friendly understanding on other dangerous issues. Where the French have been particularly hard boiled with Italians working in southern France and have done their best to prevent excessive immigration in the past, they now are promising great lenience.

Suspect England's Hand.

Observers see England's hand in this first tangible step toward a Franco-Italian reconciliation. French parliamentarians who understand Downing street is urging France to make the Italians a present of Syria are observing these goings on with a fishy eye. The Italians need territory for their excess population. This is recognized by Paris, but the French are unreasonable enough to consider that as long as England considers itself interested there is no reason why it should not give something, too.

Foreign Minister Aristide Briand and Sir Austen Chamberlain, the British foreign secretary, left for Geneva on the same train tonight. It is presumed that they discussed the situation seriously because French public opinion has been rendered suspicious by M. Briand's verbal overtures to Rome, and today's concession makes many politicians want a show down. In the corridors of the chamber of deputies tonight the news of the signing of the accord was greeted cynically.

SEES AIR CLEARING

BY DAVID DARRAH.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

ROME, Dec. 3.—The bitter arguments over the Franco-Jugo-Slav and Italo-Albanian treaties, going on between France and Italy, with the accompanying exchange of vituperations, paradoxically, have cleared the atmosphere for an understanding, according to the press and semi-official Fascist circles tonight.

It is indicated that despite the wrangling and verbal abuse, an official friendly move from French sources would be readily followed by similar moves from the Italians, and it is hinted that such overtures might take place at Geneva.

The Italian press, however, is slow in expressing any reaction to Foreign Minister Aristide Briand's statements about Latin amity, but the general note indicates the speech was distasteful.

HARRY K. THAW HERE ON WAY TO MOVIE BUSINESS

Harry K. Thaw, grey haired and ageing, but still the same, arrived in Chicago yesterday on his way to California to see the Pittsburgh-Stanford football game on New Year's day and to attend to his new organized motion picture business.

He had with him two pretty protégées, Miss Anita Rivers, 17, and Miss Susan Hughes, 17, both of whom appeared in a comedy, "Redheads," which was produced by the Thaw company in New York. The two young women were chaperoned by Mrs. Anita Rivers. An advance guard of directors, secretaries, and managers of the Thaw organization have preceded the party to Hollywood.

Thaw, who is now 55, said he had tried all kinds of business since the "unfortunate incident" 21 years ago, but thinks the movies are the real gaff.

ONE OF DRUGGAN BROTHERS SHOT, ANOTHER JAILED

But Police Can't See How George Wounded Self.

CRIMINAL COURT.

Albert Costello, larceny, sentenced to 1 year in the Bridewell; Eura Isom and Peter Berger, robbery, sentenced to 1 to 10 years each in Pontiac reformatory, by Judge John P. McGoorty.

Edgar Garbadak, murder, sentenced to 14 years in the penitentiary by Judge Harry B. Miller.

Robbins Freeman, robbery, sentenced to 2 years in the Bridewell; Leon Davis, habitual libertine, sentenced to 1 year in the Bridewell, by Judge Otto Kerner.

Georgie Druggan, youngest brother of Terry Druggan, the beer lord of many trials, was shot yesterday. As to how he was shot, and why, Georgie tells quite a story, such a story, in fact, that the police told him quite flatly that he is a prevaricator, and a poor one at that.

Druggan, it was made known by Dr. Karl B. Meyer, the surgeon who attended the gangster at the University hospital, will recover. But Georgie will not be sitting down for some time, the surgeon added.

"I was going hunting," Druggan told Capt. Patrick Kelliher. "My rifle was accidentally discharged. That's all there's to it."

Scents Gang Warfare.

But Kelliher doesn't think so.

"I hear," said the captain, "that this Georgie Druggan has been trying to edge in on some gambling profits in some dives about town. He's got a small gang of his own and has edged into somebody else's territory, I guess.

"I think some other hoodlums were going to give it to him, and Georgie took it like all the other Druggans, on the run, and in the—er—in the back."

Druggan was brought to the hospital by his brother, Willie Druggan, who boasts he's an honest business man, with a cartage, storage and warehouse business at 1227 South Campbell avenue. Both the Druggans chimed in the same story, which placed the shooting at West 18th and South Laflin streets, at hour of high noon. So Capt. Kelliher journeyed over to that corner to get half a dozen witnesses to tell about the shooting.

But No Shots Were Heard.

"I found the corner running over with men, women and kids," the captain said. "Not one of them heard a shot. Not one saw a wounded man. But one saw the fine limousine in which Druggan was brought to the hospital. On the four corners at 18th and Laflin there are a drug store, a grocery store, a soft drink parlor owned by a quiet, orderly fellow, and an undertaker's establishment. None of the people in them heard any commotion.

"It's the bunk. Druggan might have been shot at anywhere in Chicago or Cook county except at that corner."

The policemen, including Lieut. John L. Sullivan of the detective bureau, who also made an investigation, and Sergt. Neil Kahler, who was first on the case, tried to figure out how Druggan could have accidentally shot himself in the place he was wounded.

WOUNDED

George Druggan, brother of Terry Druggan, who is suffering from bullet wounds he says were accidental.

They finally gave it up, for the rifle would have to have been held horizontally, grasped at the muzzle end, with the trigger out in the free air, they declared.

"Why did you go hunting at 18th and Laflin streets?" Sergt. Kahler asked Druggan.

Someone Called Brother.

"O, I went there to get some bullets for the rifle," he answered. "I was getting back in my car when the rifle, which I though wasn't loaded, went off. Somebody called my brother—I don't know who it was—and Willie came and took me to this hospital."

Willie was put in a cell at Capt. Kelliher's Canalport station on a chance that somebody else might have been shot, and not by accident, at the time of Georgie's mishap. The police were anxious to start an investigation, but, as Lieut. Sullivan remarked, "Where will we start?"

Alphonse Capone, better known as Al Brown, who is said to receive a lion's share of the $75,000,000 annual gambling, booze and vice profits in Chicago, yesterday, through Attorney Michael J. Ahern, sent two checks, totaling $41.30, to Lyman S. Sherwood, assistant district attorney, to cover a judgment obtained against Capone by the government. Two years ago Capone's limousine collided with a mail truck and damaged it to the extent of the judgment.

Pose as Customers to Rob Barber of $1,150 Diamonds

Finn Frakiowski, owner of a barber shop at 2208 South Albany avenue, was robbed of diamonds worth $1,150 and $40 in cash yesterday by two bandits who posed as customers. One of the men seated himself in the chair and after the barber put the apron around him he displayed a revolver and ordered his victim not to make any moves which would arouse the suspicion of persons passing the place. The other man took the jewelry and money and then both calmly walked from the shop to a waiting automobile.

U. S. ATTORNEY CALLS ON CITY TO CURB OWN CRIME

Finds Peril in Expansion of Federal Power.

United States District Attorney George E. Q. Johnson declared yesterday, in a formal speech, his opposition to what he described as a growing tendency to have the federal government take over police work that should be done by states and municipalities.

His remarks were made before the forty-seventh anniversary meeting of the Independent Order of Swithiod, held at 3730 North Clark street. In general, the speech followed the tenor of a statement he made on Friday to the effect that federal enforcement agencies in Chicago were too busy with their own laws to devote any time to exposing the alleged graft and other misdeeds of the city's police force.

U. S. Acts as Stop Gap.

"Out of the failure of municipal government grows a constant demand for the extension of federal jurisdiction," he said. "If this is to continue the United States must increase its agencies tremendously. Already it is difficult to enforce the laws it has assumed responsibility for. Every extension of federal police power means there has been a corresponding failure on the part of city, county and state government.

"No one will argue that this ought to take place, but the clear trend of events is in the direction of still greater assumption by the federal government of duties which ought to be discharged by municipalities and states.

"In these days from many sources comes clamor for the government to undertake many important investigations and prosecutions relating to the administration of criminal law. There has been a continual adding to the government jurisdiction in prosecuting criminal cases.

How New Trend Started.

"In 1910 came a radical departure in the enactment of the white slave law. Here the government began in a definite way to exercise police power, which heretofore had been left to the states, assuming a function which could be administered by the states if the states saw fit to exercise the power they had always possessed. This law was an opening wedge.

"And then came the national prohibition act.

"The question naturally arises, what has been the cause of this astonishing growth of federal jurisdiction? One cause probably is the fixed idea in the minds of the people that the federal government, due to the fact that it is not subject to local pressure, is more effective in the administration of criminal law; and another reason is the inability or unwillingness on the part of the states to discharge fully their obligations with reference to the administration of criminal laws.

Time to Call a Halt.

"The district attorney is constantly sought to aid in reaching situations affecting crime, over which at the present time the federal courts have no jurisdiction. I do not think any thoughtful citizen will argue that it is either well or wholesome that this growth of federal jurisdiction continue, but if our great American cities fail to discharge their responsibilities, demands will be made upon congress to extend federal jurisdiction more and more, even to the extent of amending the constitution.

"Our own Chicago stands out among the greatest American cities. None possesses more excellent citizens. What Chicago needs today is to transmit the 'I Will' spirit that has created such magnificent public improvements into political action and in an effective way make known their wishes to political leaders, and none will dare to deny them. Then will come city, county, and state government worthy of such material achievements.

Railroadless Illinois County May Have One Soon

Quincy, Ill., Dec. 3.—(AP)—Calhoun county, the only county in the state untouched by a railroad, may soon lose that questionable distinction. Agitation in Calhoun for financial support for the proposed Quincy and Alton railroad is expected to culminate tomorrow afternoon in a public meeting. Calhoun county is asked to raise $250,000 as a bonus for the building of the Illinois river bridge at Grafton.

PROPOSE GRADE SEPARATION AT CLARK-DIVERSEY

Alderman and Park Board Chief Work Out Plan.

Northbound traffic on Clark street can be doubled in volume, it is believed, should the city and Lincoln park board carry out a plan proposed yesterday for a grade separation at the junction of that street with Broadway and Diversey boulevard.

The plan was devised at a conference between David H. Jackson, president of the park board, and Ald. John A. Massen [48th], chairman of a council subcommittee engaged in a study of grade separations and elevated streets. Both agreed to present the plan before the bodies they represent. Diversey is controlled by the park board and Clark and Broadway by the city.

One of Busiest Intersections.

At present the intersection is one of the most congested in the city, especially during the evening rush hour when the heavy northbound traffic on Clark street is jammed for blocks by westbound cars on Diversey.

"It would be a comparatively simple matter to elevate Clark street enough to give a 14 foot headway over Diversey which already slopes downward to the east," Ald. Massen explained. "The entire viaduct, with ramps on both ends, we estimate can be built for less than $500,000. This would speed up traffic more than widening of both thoroughfares at a cost of several million."

First of Projects for City.

Should the grade separation be effected, it will be the first project of the kind in which the city has participated, although the Lincoln park board has completed one at North avenue and has several others planned or under construction. Traffic experts declare that north and south traffic has been increased 100 per cent as a result of the North avenue improvement.

Ald. Massen said his subcommittee will also study the feasibility of separating grades at Western avenue, 31st street, and the sanitary canal bridge, a project tentatively recommended by the Chicago Plan commission. The committeemen have also directed Leslie J. Sorensen, city traffic engineer, to make a report on other congested intersections where the two-level idea may be applied.

AGENTS WRECK FIVE STILLS IN MELROSE PARK

In a series of raids by prohibition agents yesterday five distilleries in Melrose Park were confiscated. Dry agents arrested five men who were found at the stills.

Thousands gathered as the agents poured into the streets thousands of gallons of mash and alcohol confiscated in the raids. Surviving members of the Genna gang are reported to have transferred their activities in the alky cooking to the western suburb following the killing of three of the Gennas.

Raiding a distillery at 423 East Eighty-seventh place, dry agents confiscated a huge still in operation. John Laggetto was arrested as the operator of the still.

WHEATON WOMAN CHURCH LEADER SEEKS DIVORCE

Mrs. Jeannette H. Critchlow, deaconess of the Wheaton Presbyterian church, filed a cross bill for divorce yesterday against Walter C. Critchlow, former Chicago advertising man, now president of the Vis Humidifier company. She is a member of the Wheaton's Women's club and he is well known for having been a candidate on the defeated "silk stocking" ticket for city commissioner of Wheaton in 1923.

The cross bill, prepared by Attorney Lloyd B. Faxon, alleges that Critchlow is now living with a former wife from whom he was divorced in 1907. He was married to the present wife on March 10, 1909.

Mrs. Critchlow, who came to Chicago from her parents' home in Ada, O., to fight the divorce case, separated from her husband on Dec. 19, 1926, according to her bill. She alleges she was forced to leave him because of his cruel treatment.

The original bill in the divorce case was filed a few weeks ago by Mr. Critchlow, asking a decree on the grounds of cruelty.

WIFE TRIED TO SHOOT REMUS, WITNESS SAYS

Conners Adds Chapters to Dodge Affair.

BY ORVILLE DWYER.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Cincinnati, O., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—George Conners, partner in George Remus' vast liquor operations, testifying in the Remus murder trial today, charged that the department of justice two years ago had information on which, he was told, Franklin L. Dodge Jr., and Mrs. Imogene Remus might have been sent to the federal penitentiary.

"I had a meeting in the Metropole hotel, Cincinnati, with James C. Wilcox, special agent of the department of justice," Conners told the jury. "Wilcox told me that he already had enough on Dodge and Imogene to send them to the penitentiary for five years, and that one charge against them was violation of the Mann act. He told me that if I would go to St. Louis and get just one more affidavit he would be in a position to send them up for twenty years each."

Say Wires Were Pulled.

Conners was not asked to tell from the witness stand whether he went to St. Louis to get the affidavit, but it was stated by a reliable source after adjournment that the meeting described took place, and that Conners did go after the affidavit. The same informant charged that "wires were pulled in Washington" in connection with the matter.

Remus killed his wife, Imogene, in Eden Park here on the morning of Oct. 6, overtaking her in an automobile as she was on her way to face him in the divorce court. His defense is that he was temporarily insane, because of his wife's relation with Dodge, who had worked up the case that sent Remus to federal prison.

Conners finished his direct testimony and his cross examination was started by Assistant Prosecutor Walter K. Sibbald. The brief interrogation concerned Conners' connection with Remus. It took in some of their bootlegging operations and lasted only 15 minutes, when court adjourned.

Admits He Was Bootlegger.

"When and where did you meet Remus?" Sibbald asked.

"In Cincinnati, in 1919," was the answer.

Q.—What was your business at the time? A.—I was in the real estate business.

Q.—What were you engaged in later? A.—Bootlegging.

Q.—Weren't you an agent of the internal revenue department? A.—Yes, but that was before I met Remus, it was in 1918.

Q.—Did you at that time know Remus and his bootleggers?

Attorney Charles H. Elston, for the defense, objected to the reference to Remus "and his bootleggers." Sibbald declared Remus was known as a bootlegger and Conners had stated under the cross-examination he had been one. Into this breach stepped Remus.

"Why, your honor," Remus said, "the national prohibition act had not been passed in 1918. There was no prohibition. How could there be bootleggers at that time, especially in Chicago, where I was, or in Cincinnati, your honor?

Judge Shook smiled. He had ruled during the confusion that Sibbald might refer to them as he had.

"Yes, Mr. Remus," the judge said. "I'm afraid we all overlooked that prohibition proposition."

Sibbald resumed his questioning.

Q.—Do you know Blanche Watson? A.—Yes.

Q.—What is her business? A.—She is in the wholesale liquor business.

Q.—What company? A.—The Kentucky Distributing company.

Q.—What is its business? A.—Dealing in whisky certificates on the open market and supplying medicinal whisky to the retail trade.

Q.—Isn't it a fact that Miss Watson was connected with you and George Remus in your operations? A.—N-no-o.

Q.—Weren't you the president of the Edgewood Distilling company? A.—Yes.

Q.—And weren't you president just three days, receiving $100 for your service? A.—No sir. It was considerable more than three days and the amount was considerably more than $100.

Says Wife Tried to Kill Remus.

Conners in his direct testimony gave a mass of testimony concerning the events that, Remus charges, led up to his loss of reason during which he killed his wife. Conners portrayed Imogene Remus to the jury as a shrewd and designing woman and said that on one occasion she would have killed Remus if it had not been for his (Conners') interference.

"Miss Watson and Remus and I went out to the house on Price Hill," he said. "When we got in Imogene asked Remus what he was doing there. Mr. Remus told her he had a perfect right in his own house.

"Imogene shouted, 'Well, I'll settle things right now.' Then she rushed to her hand bag and I was right behind her, and grabbed her hand as she was drawing a pearl handled pistol out. She would have killed him if I hadn't taken it away."

Tells of Hotel Incident.

From this point on, Conners detailed incident after incident, all of which, he believed, had a bearing on Remus' mental condition. He related how he told Remus about Imogene and Franklin L. Dodge being together in a room in the Hollenden hotel in Cleveland.

"I told him the house detective heard a man and a woman talking in a room that had been rented to a woman alone," Conners testified. "The detective went in and found them together. The man was ordered out at once, and the woman had to leave at seven the next morning. I sent an investigator there with pictures of Dodge and Mrs. Remus and the clerk and manager of the hotel identified them as the two people."

Breakfast for Two.

While Remus was in jail at Portsmouth, O., serving a year's sentence after he had been released from Atlanta, Conners informed Remus that the housekeeper at the Price Hill home had told him about serving breakfast to Dodge and Mrs. Remus in Remus' own room every morning, the witness declared.

"Remus began raving again," Conners declared. "He said, 'If I ever meet him, it'll be good-night Dodge.'"

Conners next told how a man called "Jew John" Marcus had tried to hire two men to kill Remus for $10,000. They were to do it "before the divorce case," Conners said, and he had heard about it from a man "up at Springdale."

"These two gunmen," the witness continued, "asked John, 'Why don't you do it, if there's ten grand in it?' and Marcus told them he couldn't because he was known as Remus' enemy and he would be the first one they would put the 'finger on.'"

"What was Remus' reaction to that?" Attorney Elston asked.

"The reaction didn't come until that night when he got home," was the reply. "Then he said, 'My God, they're going to great lengths to get me.' He wanted to go right out and get Mr. Dodge.

DAUGHTER OF SLAIN WOMAN FLAYS REMUS IN PRESS STATEMENT

Cincinnati, O., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Ruth Holmes Remus, daughter of Mrs. Imogene Remus, who was a witness for the prosecution in the murder trial of George Remus, today issued a typewritten "statement to the press." Copies were handed to reporters during a recess of court. In it, Miss Remus pointed out that her dead mother's side of the Remus story has never been told.

She said that her mother was ready to go into court "to prove her innocence and disprove Mr. Remus' lies" when "she was shot down and killed in cold blood." The girl said she sits in court and laughs at Remus as he "writes notes and whispers with the newspaper men, spreading his propaganda."

"She was never anything but a good woman and a good mother to me and a good wife to him—and he knows it, if he'd stop and think back and quit thinking of having his own way in everything," the statement said. "My mother had not a single enemy in the world except this man she loved and slaved for—and finally died for. My mother stood for his rages and brutality and 'scenes' as long as she could, always hoping he would give up bootlegging and go into a respectable business.

"Many of the reporters write as if they had forgotten that a murder had been committed and that the important thing is now to get 'poor Remus' out of jail again. I believe that if he is released he will murder some one of us again, for he has long believed that he is outside the law or above it, and that he can 'get away' with anything."

BROKER IS NEAR DEATH OF BULLET WOUND IN HEAD

Edward Fass, investment broker, living at 4223 North Leavitt street, who was found wounded in the head near the Medinah Country club last Wednesday, yesterday took a turn for the worse at the Elmhurst hospital, it was learned from the attending physician, Dr. F. J. Schroeder. Indications were that an infection had set in which would result fatally, he said.

The bullet had passed through one temple, penetrated the entire cranial cavity, and lodged underneath the skin on the other side. Dr. Schroeder explained that the reason Fass did not die immediately was that the bullet probably grazed the under surface of the brain.

Fass is conscious much of the time, but he has not altered his original explanation for the shooting, that he had shot himself. He repeatedly tells the police to "let it go at that." Fass' wife stated there was no cause for him to commit suicide.

THE EXCESSES OF PROHIBITION ENFORCEMENT.

The Christian Century, a religious but not a denominational publication, recently warned the Anti-Saloon league and its supporters against the use of unethical expedients. The particular case in point was the attempt in Ohio to get a corrupted minor judicial establishment for the enforcement of prohibition.

Ohio had a law under which justices of the peace supported themselves on fees and costs. They could hear liquor cases and had jurisdiction in traffic arrests, etc. The system grew into a great abuse and the law, being tested, was declared unconstitutional. The Anti-Saloon league was reluctant to give up a system of prosecution in which the judge was virtually bribed by the fees he could collect. That was a guaranty of punishment to the limit. The Marshall bill was designed to get around the court decision and to preserve the system. It provided that the fees and costs should be paid into a county fund out of which the justices would receive their pay, but their pay depended on the amount in the fund. The method thus was changed a little but the racket remained the same. The more active the justices were the more they had in their pockets.

The Anti-Saloon league carried this legislative act into a state referendum supporting it as something essential to enforcement and a test of the sincerity of the drys in the state. The league and the act were beaten badly, by 500,000, as they should have been.

There is a pretty general aversion to a system which supports informers out of the fines imposed in cases in which they furnish the evidence. This proposed judicial system was infamously worse but the dry leadership was either blind to that or indifferent to it.

The Christian Century, a friend of prohibition, warns against adopting unethical expedients to get results, but no other proclaimed social reform in this country for several generations has been so indifferent to the methods used. General considerations of public morality and ethics are disregarded. Here in Illinois the drys supported Frank Smith without blinking after they learned the source of his campaign funds. They were offered a dry candidate whose character was clear and whose public record had been good but they gave Illinois as a senator a man the senate has thus far refused to seat.

In Indiana they have been led by a man who now is under sentence of contempt of the state supreme court for his disregard of the ethics and his attempts to intimidate the court. There they also are endeavoring to drive out of public life the attorney general, Gilliom, an able man fighting against a good deal of what is wrong in the state today, because he procured a pint of whisky for a sister in a hospital when her physician wanted to use it as medicine.

In Michigan they have an atrocious law which will get to the United States Supreme court if there is a way to take it there. It provides life imprisonment for a person who may be convicted four times of violation of the prohibition law. The drys support this. It is incomprehensible to them that it is a barbarity or if it is comprehensible they do not care. They cannot see that no modern civilized country would provide, if it could, any such punishment for violation of sumptuary law. Or again if they can see they do not care. It is raving fanaticism. It is against every instinct for fitness in punishment, and the state of mind it indicates in its supporters is more serious than the inhumanity it may do to its victims.

Further reflection of this spirit is found in the condoning of manslaughter and murder in the enforcement of prohibition. The South Beloit informer who took a man's life merely to prevent him from disposing of evidence which would have been used against him has the moral support of prohibitionists in the region in which the crime was committed. He is sustained by the sympathy and the active aid of persons who think a man may rightfully forfeit his life if he violates the Volstead act.

Ministers have gone on enforcement raids with guns, confident that their enthusiasm in this cause was the higher law and that their inclinations would safely guide them.

This zeal has been made paramount. It is held to justify such comparatively negligible offenses as invasion of homes without warrant. They would be considered most serious in a well balanced country but they will become negligible in a country in which manslaughter is condoned and excessive, cruel and unusual punishment justified and insisted upon, in which a person may be harassed if not jailed for giving alcoholic stimulant to the sick and in which an intimidated or bribed judiciary is sought as a instrument of enforcement.

These are perversions which are insisted upon as justified, right, and sanctified in the promotion of a cause important to part of the population and obnoxious to another.

HANDS ACROSS THE SEA.

Observers of British politics see the Englishman turning back again to liberalism and Lloyd George. John Steele, our London correspondent, traces the growing discontent throughout the country to the popular belief that the Tory government is supine, lazy, and extravagant, is doing nothing to remedy business conditions, and is heading Great Britain toward great armaments and another war.

Therefore Great Britain looks to liberalism. And since no one can beat Mr. Lloyd George at scurrying to the head of the parade, no matter in which direction it proceeds, the country finds itself looking once more to the gentleman who was an anti-government pacifist in 1899 and 1900 and head of a war government sixteen years later. The rôle is now pacifist again.

The present phase of English history is an excellent illustration of the interplay of international influences. If the Englishman is discontented, the cause is not alone in the disabilities of his government. He has been looking across the Atlantic at the United States. Peace is not enough. He also wishes prosperity.

In the days of the English emigration to the American colonies, economic conditions at home made it the middle class Englishman, usually the dissenter of Cromwellian persuasion, who abandoned the old fireside to seek a new. He was virtually the only Englishman who could thus transplant himself. The royalist aristocrat had lands that kept him at home; if he left the country during a period of Roundhead domination, he never went so far that his rents could not follow him, and he returned when his monarch was restored. The lower class Englishman, unless a felon or an indentured man and so the recipient of free transportation, lacked the funds necessary for the trip. But the middle class English dissenter had no lands and he had the funds, and when political oppression became intolerable he packed up and went to America.

The very life of America—the spirit of liberty which caused the revolution, and the spirit of Roundhead intolerance which marks the present era—had its source in the fact of this English emigration.

America was peopled by democratic souls who believed in an aristocracy of goodness and labor. England was left dominated by aristocrats who believed in a democracy of landed titles and no work except politics and a little sword play.

Such a domination worked well for England so long as the white man's burden was to be borne among inferior peoples in benighted—but productive—lands. It takes an aristocrat to bear a white man's burden cheerfully. Your commoner finds it heavy and a bother, coming on top of his own.

So he looks today across the Atlantic where democracy has built prosperity on labor and where democracy has a social as well as a political meaning, where there is no white man's burden or any burden of a nonproductive aristocratic class too proud to go into trade. And then he listens to Mr. Lloyd George.

THE KAISER'S HEIR.

The French foreign minister, M. Briand, has replied to Mussolini with soft words. France, he says, has no quarrel with Italy and can have none. It is of no concern to Frenchmen what form of government the Italians prefer. The temperateness of the reply leaves Mussolini pawing the air. The calm voice only accentuates the raucous tones of Il Duce.

For the sake of Italy we hope the experience will teach a lesson to Mussolini, though it, may come too late to do much good. Mussolini's violent words have gone far to convince the world that Italy is about to engage upon a career of conquest which threatens the peace of all lands. The conviction is growing everywhere that the time is coming when the dictator will have to make a war to preserve his position and the morale of his followers. This conception may be entirely false to the facts of Italy's ambitions and Mussolini's plans, but the fact remains that Italy in the popular mind in this country and in Europe is a trouble-maker.

What that reputation can cost a nation is plainly shown by the recent experience of Germany. Historians in many lands have been amassing evidence to show that Germany alone did not provoke the war, and, though much of the evidence is compelling, the opinion of the historians is making little progress against the widespread belief in Germany's exclusive guilt. Germany brought that on herself. The kaiser was permitted for a generation to rattle the sword and shout threats across Europe. Inevitably, when war came, the world was convinced that he and his nation made it. Germans may have discounted the kaiser's words and his constant show of military power before the war, but the rest of the world accepted it at face value.

Mussolini is now by way of falling heir to the place left vacant by the kaiser.

Editorial of the Day

ENGLISH MONEY.

[The Des Moines Register.]

The king of England has just directed the English mint to issue a new series of coins. No change will be made in the values of the coins, except that the crown will be reintroduced into the British monetary system. The crown is worth about $1.20. The values of other English coins are about as follows: Farthings, half a cent; halfpennies, 1 cent; pennies, 2 cents; three-penny pieces, 6 cents; six penny pieces, 12 cents; shillings, about 24 cents; two shillings, about 48 cents; half crowns, about 60 cents; half sovereigns, about $2.40, and sovereigns, about $4.80.

Compared with our money, in the multiples of ten, the difficulties of computation in English money are tremendous. Converting farthings and pence into shillings and crowns takes a mental effort and wastes much time. Fortunately we got on a decimal basis in our money at the beginning, but unfortunately we still deal in inches and feet, gallons and quarts, ounces and pounds, which are just as awkward as the English money. It is time we applied the decimal or metric system to our units of measurement. A new bill legalizing the metric system in this country will be introduced in the next congress. If it passes, once we become used to it we would no more return to our present system of weights and measures than we would adopt the awkward English money.

THE BIBLE, THE WORLD'S BEST SELLER—I.

BY JAMES O'DONNELL BENNETT, M. A.

[Chicago Tribune Staff, Author "Much Loved Books." December, 1927, by Boni & Liveright, Publishers.]

Here is the first of a series of informal sketches about some books that are best sellers because they are best reading. Best sellers of "the trade" are considered phenomenal if they sell briskly for three months. Some do not last three weeks, though making quite a chaffering tha while. But Cicero's essays have been on the market nearly twenty centuries, and the Bible has had steadily mounting sales—except for war interludes—ever since it received its finishing touches, about the year 50 of the Christian era.

Such books are called classics. That hurts them with us average folk. But we ought to consider that they are not good because they are old, but old because they are good.

This first sketch is about the Bible, which is the premier best seller of Christendom, and has been ever since John Gutenberg first got it into type, more than four and a half centuries ago. In 1913, the most recent of its normal years, the American Bible society issued 6,040,707 "volumes of Scripture." But theologians say that we average folk are reading the Bible less than our fathers did. Why is this so? It is a good book, colorful, stimulating, a masterpiece—in the King James version—of English style, full of precept extraordinarily applicable to today and, notwithstanding all its railing, its incoherences and contradictions, and its occasional tediousness, it is a much finer, more vital thing than a superstition, a bludgeon, or a sanctified bore. Let us consider.

Two small brothers are wrangling, as small brothers, if they be sound and active, ever will. One asserts; the other denies. The first repeats his assertion—some grandiose bit of boyishness which petulance has now reduced to mere mouthing; the second squawks, "O, you're a fool."

A glow of beatific priggishness envelops the accused and he replies, "But whosoever shall say thou fool shall be in danger of hell fire. Matthew five, twenty-two."

Smug little imp, no longer little and grown whimsical now, I love thee well, but that day I quailed before thee, as thou meantest I should, and waited sick, weary hours for the fire to consume me.

That is one way not to read the Bible, nor to let it be read. 'Tis to put a bludgeon into the hands of a little child.

Five and thirty years go by.

I am sitting in the presence of an aged rabbi, Dr. Emil G. Hirsch, soft voiced, slow spoken, venerable, but young in thought and sympathies. Liberal he calls himself; some call him radical. An open book lies before him. It is that book which Christians call the Bible, but which to people of his faith is known as the Holy Scriptures. You may remember that the word Bible is not found in the Bible proper, nor were the collected writings now known to Christendom as the Bible called the Bible until St. Clement so called them, about the year 170 of our era, although formerly it was said that St. Chrysostom (John the Golden Mouthed) in the fourth century first used the word in the sense we use it.

In the Greek, from which Clement took the word, it meant merely "little books," and the Greeks in their turn got it from biblos (book), and biblos came from byblus (papyrus), on which books were written.

The forefinger of the old rabbi's brown right hand rested on a passage which, in the English translation of the Bible that was finished in 1611 by the commission of forty-seven theologians appointed by James I. and Bancroft, archbishop of Canterbury, would be designated as the second verse of the fourth chapter of Genesis.

Musingly he read:

"'And she again bare his brother Abel. And Abel was a keeper of sheep, but Cain was a tiller of the ground.'"

Lifting his eyes from the page, he seemed as one looking afar off, and for a little while silence rested upon him. Then thus he spake:

"The story of Cain and Abel, if taken as the record of individual deeds, lacks not pathos and dramatic power. The picture is a solemn one—the whole earth counting but four human beings, yet among those the spirit of envy has taken lodgment. The craftier of two brothers slays the weaker."

His eyes again sought the page:

"'And I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth; and it shall come to pass that every one that findeth me shall slay me.'"

A quiet definiteness came into his musing tone. The reader became the expounder.

"Of whom, my son, could Cain have been afraid? There were no others on earth save himself, his feeble father, and his grief-bowed mother." Then the rabbi touched on the flight into the land of Nod, which implied population outside of Eden, and, summing up what things are naïve and contradictory and incredible in the narrative, he remarked, his sad eyes twinkling a little: "To this we come if we pervert the footprints of humanity's development into notes of personal conversations. But, whatever the pathos of the story if taken as a chronicle of the far-off days of the beginning, we know today that Cain and Abel are not personal names. They stand as the personified representatives of great cultural movements. This chapter of Genesis is a paragraph in the history of civilization. We have passed beyond the literal, I hope, and we know now that these scriptural narratives were composite documents, unfolding not the history of single families but of great cultural movements. Abel stands for pastoral institutions and habits; Cain typifies agriculture. 'And Abel was a keeper of sheep, but Cain was a tiller of the ground.' Here is the beginning of the unending conflict between one civilization and another. The herdsman gives way to the tiller. The nomad loses his right to consideration and the sedentary farmer comes into his own. In these senses we must read the stories of old if we would learn not merely how they rose but what they token. The lowest stage of human development is 'kill,' and of that stage this chapter is an epitome. Pastoral civilization had to pass away when man discovered that to clothe and feed himself he had other resources than his flocks, other resources less capricious. And when man began to see this the shepherd was doomed, and a new phase of human progress sprang into view. This is the meaning of the murder Cain did. It is victorious agriculture. We cannot arrest the onward sweep of development, cruel though its processes are. But one thing we can do! We can remember—we ought to remember—that we are our brother's keeper. That responsibility to God for his brother Cain insolently denied. You see, my son, in how many directions this old legend leads us and how the story, if correctly read, is full of strong, sweet accents."

Slowly he closed the book.

From that day the Bible has been a different book to me, not provocative any more of rancors, nor of that intellectual insolence which sometimes gets itself called independence, but an ingratiating book, the eager, poignant, excited—and often terribly exciting—record of man's fallibilities and aspirations, of his slow groping out of darkness toward the light, of his first crude conceptions of what is right, of his weary fashioning, as with hammer blows upon hot metal, of that doctrine of monotheism of which Father Abraham stands forth as first champion and which has done more than any other doctrine to purge the human mind of gross fantasticalities and murderous superstition and to lead it out of that slavishness which Thoreau once finely called "pagoda worship."

Such, to his heedful listener, was the counsel of the old scholar. From one to whose people the ancient writing was most sacred that listener had heard interpretation that was most human.

He had made the old book manageable.

That is the great thing. For the tragedy of this extensive collection of writings is that, until the time of men so fortunate as to have been born into our more inquisitive and less credulous age, there has been a kind of conspiracy to talk and think and pray cant about this book, and to put under some horrid ban every effort to bring it to the people in a human way. The people of late times resented that—at first by displays of bitterness which were not unwholesome, later by a display of indifference that deprives them of valid entertainment and instruction and of a living part of their culture.

BABY'S WISH TO WALK STARTS EARLY.

THE baby's wish to walk starts very early in life. He sees those around him walking and he wants to do likewise. This comes about as soon as he is able to see and to understand. His desires may be somewhat vague so long as the walkers are adults, but once he sees a young child either walking or crawling the urge becomes acute or moving.

However, desire is not enough. Ability must accompany it. The ability to walk is dependent on the mind to see, to wish, and to imitate, the courage to try, the strength of bone to hold, the strength of muscle necessary to propel, and, finally, coördination and control.

Dr. G. Variot found the age element in the ability to walk to be as follows: Sixty-seven per cent of babies walk first when they are between 11 and 14 months of age. In a group of several hundred studied 125 walked first at 9 months of age, or a little earlier, while 95 did not walk alone for the first time until they were 21 months old or older.

The relation of height to walking was as follows: Sixty-eight and five-tenths per cent were between 28.4 and 30.4 inches long (or tall); 15 per cent were between 30.8 and 33.2 inches long. Less than 1 per cent were 25.6 inches tall and about half that proportion did not walk for the first time until they were 33 inches tall.

The relations of the age of the first step to weight were also studied. Ninety per cent of the babies who weighed 5.8 to 7 pounds at birth walked for the first time when between 11 and 14 months of age. Babies who weighed four pounds at birth were generally late in walking. A majority of the babies weighed around 18 pounds when they first walked alone. The lightest baby at that important epoch weighed about 14 pounds and the heaviest 26.7 pounds.

Food was an important factor in determining the age at which a baby first walks. Of the breast fed babies 82.8 per cent walked first when between 11 and 14 months. Of the babies brought up on a mixture of breast feeding and bottle feeding the percentage was 66.58. The proportion of the bottle fed babies walking on schedule time was 61.45. The rule is that babies have six to eight teeth when they take the first step.

Dr. Variot observed this about the relation of rickets to the time of walking. If the rickets affected the bones only, and to a moderate degree only, it did not serve to retard walking. If, however, the disease affected the muscles and the nervous system, it did.

CHILD PERSPIRES TOO MUCH.

Mrs. L. P. writes: 1. What causes my 3½ year old girl to perspire when put to bed with a light cover over her body and not above her shoulders, with fresh air in the room? She has always done this since she was a baby. She is not very fat and seems healthy. Is this a sign of any disease?

2. Eight months ago she fell on the broom and ran a straw in her shoulder. I couldn't get it out. It healed over and is not sore. Should I have this taken out or left alone?

3. Is bran cereal all right for children 3 and 5 years of age?

REPLY.

1. When children perspire without provocation, we think of rickets as the probable cause. Scurvy is another possibility. There are other possibilities. A physician would be able to decide what is wrong.
2. Leave it alone.
3. Yes.

GRINDS TEETH IN SLEEP.

Mrs. P. H. writes: I should like to inquire what the reason or cause may be for a grown person grinding his teeth viciously in his sleep.

REPLY.

I don't know.
I wonder if anybody does?

QUICK DIVORCES.

Chicago, Nov. 20.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—Please publish how many states in the Union will furnish a divorce in six months, and which they are. A. O. B.

To answer your question it would be necessary for us to investigate the statutes of each of the states in the union, involving in many cases the examination of several volumes. It seems probable that the greater part of this labor would be of no service to you. Hence, we suggest that you write us another letter stating the facts on which we can limit our search.

TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

MUD BOULEVARD.

Chicago, Nov. 16. — [To the Legal Friend of the People.]—Can you give me any information on the probable date of street paving in our neighborhood. The condition of every street to Archer avenue is terrible. The streets are all being paved north of Archer avenue, is there nothing going to be done south of Archer avenue? We have trouble in having deliveries made because the drivers do not risk going over the five blocks of mud streets. O. H. S.

We have started a proceeding for paving Keeler, Kedvale, Karlov, and Komensky avenues, between 55th and 56th streets, and 56th street, between Crawford and Keeler avenues. The property owners will be notified when we are ready to hold the public hearing. An estimate of cost has been ordered, and we will set the date for the hearing when the estimate is received.

EDWARD J. GLACKIN,
Secretary, Board of Local Improvements.

—OR NIGHTS.

Chicago, Nov. 24.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—Please tell me how many days I would have to actually sleep in a house to claim a legal residence in Illinois? A. B. S.

There is no such absolute rule. If you come to this state with a sufficiently definite intention to reside here permanently, the house which you purchase would be your residence from the moment that you enter it.

TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

MOTHER'S PENSION.

Oak Park, Ill., Nov. 23.—[To the Legal Friend of the People.]—Please tell me how to apply for a widow's pension in this state. L. I.

We have no widow's pension as such. The mother's pension is administered by the Juvenile court, Ogden avenue and Roosevelt road. TRIBUNE LAW DEPARTMENT.

TINY VOICES THAT OTHERWISE WOULD NOT BE HEARD

FROM THE TRIBUNE'S COLUMNS

65 YEARS AGO TODAY

DECEMBER, 4, 1862.

CAIRO.—The rebel rout from Abbeville, Miss., is complete. The main body of Gen. Grant's army crossed the Tallahatchie on the morning of the 2d. When the rebels learned their movements they burned the railroad, turnpike bridges and commissary stores and made a precipitate retreat. Abbeville is occupied by our cavalry under Col. Lee.

EDITORIAL.—Beyond all question a golden opportunity has been lost. Our eager army after a brilliant and rapid march are held chafing and in chagrin on the north bank of the Rappahannock. They are witnesses to the zeal with which the now strong army under the rebel Lee are preparing to dispute their passage of the river. Two weeks ago and the federal army could have entered Fredericksburg without the loss of a man. It was Gen. Burnside's destined base of operations. He has been foiled and has failed. The President's late visit to Gen. Burnside's army had for its object the investigation into the causes of this shameful business.

WASHINGTON.—Since the commencement of our national difficulties four powerful naval squadrons have been collected, organized and stationed for duty on our maritime frontier, with a rapidity which finds no approach to a parallel in previous naval history, and which it is believed no other country but our own could have achieved.

25 YEARS AGO TODAY

DECEMBER 4, 1902.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—There were sharp lines drawn when the statehood bills were considered by the senate committee. By a vote of 6 to 5 the committee agreed on a favorable report for the proposition to admit the territory of Oklahoma, combined with what is now known as the Indian Territory. The claims of Arizona and New Mexico were ignored.

LONDON.—It was officially announced that Great Britain and Germany will make a joint naval demonstration to compel Venezuela to pay up long past due claims. The fleets of both powers are already assembled in the Caribbean sea. It is believed the customs houses at Guayra and other ports will be seized.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Ex-Speaker Thomas B. Reed's condition is serious, and while he is not dangerously ill there is fear that an operation will be necessary.

CHICAGO.—A penitentiary cell is to be George Wellington Streeter's lot unless relief be granted by a new trial or through appeal. He was found guilty of manslaughter for the killing of Watchman John S. Kirk.

10 YEARS AGO TODAY

DECEMBER 4, 1917.

WITH THE BRITISH ARMY IN FRANCE.—The Germans today were making their second great attempt to break through the British defenses in the Gonnelieu sector and pinch off the salient which Gen. Byng recently drove into the enemy territory a little farther to the north. The enemy employed great forces of infantry which were sent forward under terrific artillery bombardments from a concentration of guns which the Germans had perfected since the smashing of the Hindenburg line.

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Eagerly awaiting President Wilson's message which will strike the keynote of the conduct of the war henceforth not only by the United States but all the allies, congress reassembled at noon today. The message, which is unusually long, was given final approval by the President and copies cabled to the entente capitals for publication tomorrow. The message is pronounced a state paper that will be memorable in the history not only of this war but of the nation.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A war budget of more than $11,000,000,000 to pay army and navy costs during the fiscal year 1919 faced congress when the government's estimates were presented. The sum represents only the strictly military expenses which can be estimated so far in advance.

CHICAGO.—Swift investigation of the wreck of the Camp Grant military train, in which it now is established that 42 persons were injured, followed the removal of 37 soldiers to the base hospital.

SNAPPY UNIFORMS.

Gary, Ind., Nov. 23.—Your short editorial on "Snappy Uniforms" was both timely and correct in its surmise. When the British first adopted khaki it was intended to be the uniform for active service only. The first troops to be clothed in khaki were two or three regiments of Europeans in the service of the East India company at the time of the Sepoy rebellion, known in English histories as the Indian mutiny of 1857, before Queen Victoria was created empress of India. The first time a comparatively large force of British troops was clothed in khaki was in the campaign in Afghanistan, 1878-'79, when the expedition under Sir Frederick Roberts, afterward Lord Roberts, marched from Cabul to the relief of Candahar.

At the time khaki was adopted as the active service uniform for British troops the war office in London had no more idea of an actual campaign in continental Europe than on the surface of the moon. It was adopted more for service on desert wastes in the hinterlands of the empire and not for service in European warfare. For active service in Europe, beyond all doubt, the field gray uniform of the Germans was far and away the best and least visible, and probably you are correct in your surmise that the "horizon blue" of the French was a good second; but this service uniform was not adopted by the French until the war had been in progress for nearly two years. At the opening of the war French troops were clothed in their gay colored home service uniforms, which offered an easy target for German marksmen, so much so that they suffered far heavier losses than would have been the case had their armies been clothed in more sensible uniforms. JOHN MORGAN.

EASING THE STATE STREET CONGESTION.

Chicago, Nov. 23.—Three street car tracks are laid in State street from Lake to Madison. Only the two east tracks are now used. Consequently the east side of State street is much narrower for traffic between the curb and the first track than is the west side. Yet the traffic is usually heavier, especially in afternoons, on east side.

Why couldn't the surface lines, by means of new switches at Madison street and Lake street, divert cars northbound to the second track and southbound cars to the third track, at least in the afternoon when the traffic is so jammed on the east side of State street.

WILLIAM H. SCHAEFFER.

ELECTION DAY IS COMING.

Chicago, Nov. 25.—Your editorial, "Chicago," is splendid as far as it goes. It arouses, or is in accord with, the indignation felt by most Chicagoans with respect to the clownish tactics of the school board and the super-government by the racketeers.

But why stop when you have aroused indignation? Why not suggest some practical procedure that will offer every individual who feels the same indignation to express his feelings or act in some way that will bring pressure to bear on the clowns?

What can the unorganized individuals who would like to help McAndrew or kick the school board in the pants do?

Can't you suggest some method of action to those of us who would like to do something? JOHN D. WILLIAMS.

AGAINST THE LAKE FRONT AIRPORT.

Chicago, Nov. 24.—The proposal report on the planned island between 16th and 31st streets would be short of a public nuisance and a appropriation of public money millions that the south part has so generously offering to spend constructing an airport were voted south side taxpayers for the of drives and island parks for tional purposes. The object costly enterprises was to congestion and to offer breathing for the residents of our city measure, the newly made land recompense the south side for forgivable crime of surrendering near south shore to the I. C. R. R.

Now that, with the completion first drive, the near south side to come to its own. Along came J. Kelly with the offer to use granted for the completion of front improvements on the of an airport. In other words Kelly wants the south siders to two miles of costly lake the dangerous nuisance of an Instead of creating the promised links and playgrounds the board would use the newly for a dumping ground for the other air cargo.

Why is it that nobody has north shore for an airport? the public spirited Mr. E. J. some north side aldermen to nuisance to the south side.

G. O. P. BREAKS LA FOLLETTE GRIP UPON WISCONSIN

O. K.'s Coolidge's Rule; Picks Conservative Slate

tional Republican convention go on record for modification of the Volstead act was introduced by Ben Fuellmann of Milwaukee, but a motion to lay it on the table carried without a roll call. It favored permitting the making of 2.75 per cent beer.

Papers Differ on Result.

The Capital Times of Madison, La Follette organ, blames the defeat of the La Follette forces on the committeeman, and on the combination of the friends of Gov. Fred R. Zimmerman with the regular Republicans. The Wisconsin State Journal, conservative, declares that the action of the state central committee new places "Wisconsin Republicans within the ranks of the Republican party of the nation."

"Through a combination of Zimmerman leaders and stalwart leaders the Republican state central committee meeting at the Park hotel today indorsed the national Republican administration by a vote of 20 to 16 and endorsed two stalwarts as members of the Republican national committee by practically the same vote," declares the Capital Times, La Follette organ. "The coalition of Zimmerman and stalwart leaders at the meeting brought about the first endorsement of national Republican administration by the Wisconsin Republican state central committee since the time La Follette progressives gained control of the Republican party in Wisconsin twenty years ago."

View of Lenroot Paper.

"Wisconsin Republicans placed themselves within the ranks of the Republican party of the nation today," comments the State Journal, supporter of former Senator I. L. Lenroot."

"This evidence that Wisconsin sentiment is changing as regards the position of the Republican party of the state came as a complete surprise to the La Follette Republicans, who had expected that the meeting would be a mere pro forma session for indorsement of their selections for the national committee places and who were astounded to find as the committeemen gathered this morning that a vote was likely to be against their candidates."

WEATHER HALTS NEW ENDURANCE RECORD FLIGHT

San Francisco, Cal., Dec. 3.—(AP)—Rough air currents today halted the attempt of Capt. Charles Kingsford-Smith, Australian world war ace, and Lieut. George Pond, U. S. N., to set a new endurance flight record.

The flyers were forced to bring their big tri-motored Fokker monoplane to earth at Mills field here two hours and 19 minutes after they took off in an effort to stay aloft until Monday.

They were not disheartened by failure today, however, and announced another start would be made tomorrow in the hope that they may remain in the air longer than 52 hours and 23 minutes, the world's record set last August by John Ristics and Cornelius Edzard, German aviators.

WALES TALKS TO 10,000 BRITISH VETS AT REUNION

English Cheer Messages from U. S. Buddies.

LONDON, Dec. 3.—(AP)—With solemn ceremonies under the patronage of the prince of Wales "Toc H" tonight celebrated the twelfth anniversary of its birth in comradeship and mud behind the battle lines in the Ypres salient.

While 10,000 members of the great fraternal organization, which sprang out of the great war's horrors, looked on in Albert hall, all the electric lights were turned off and the vast auditorium was lighted by the flickering lamps of the brotherhood—symbols of service to mankind.

The price of Wales outlined the work of "Toc H" and appealed for funds to carry on its activities. He was wildly cheered.

The Rev. Philip Clayton, the inspiration and leader of this social movement, who is known affectionately the world around as "Tubby," explained the significance of the organization and recalled its inception from the crude canteen, which took its name "Talbot House" from one of his associates, Neville Talbot, now bishop of Pretoria.

The vast audience of buddies cheered when telegrams of greetings were read from American branches.

CATHOLICS HERE HONOR MEMORY OF CARDINAL

Chicago Catholics yesterday honored the memory of Cardinal Bonzano, former apostolic delegate to the United States and papal legate to the Eucharistic congress, with impressive requiem services in the Holy Name cathedral. The mass was celebrated by the Rt. Rev. E. F. Hoban, auxiliary bishop of Chicago, in the presence of Cardinal Mundelein.

Pietro Yon's requiem was sung at the services by the choir of St. Mary's of the Lake seminary. Following the singing of the mass Cardinal Mundelein, attired in red robes trimmed with ermine, stepped from his throne and blessed the symbolical casket. Every nook of the cathedral was filled with the bowed heads of priests, sisters and lay members of holy orders.

Bishop Hoban was assisted by the Very Rev. C. J. Quille, the Very Rev. W. R. Griffin, the Very Rev. J. A. Casey, and the Rev. Francis A. Ryan. Prof. Otto A. Singenberger, who directed the Eucharistic congress choirs, directed the singing.

STUDY AFRICAN SKULL AS CLEW TO EARLY MAN

Discovery of an hitherto unknown type of man may be the result of further study of a skull found in northern Africa by Dr. George L. Collie, curator of the Logan museum at Beloit college, it was announced yesterday, following a conference between Dr. Collie and Prof. Fay-Cooper Cole, University of Chicago anthropologist.

Complete reports on the investigation, it was said, will not be available until three complete skeletons, found in the vicinity of the unique skull, arrive in this country for inspection. These were uncovered during excavations at Tebessa, in a locality believed to have been the cradle of the human race.

Dr. Collie said that although the skull is apelike and possessing unusual features, it is that of a creature superior to the Neanderthal man, commonly accepted as one of the first humans. The original possessor of the skull, according to contents of the mounds in one of which it was found, was a man hard pressed for foods. He made snails his principal diet and then placed the discarded shells in huge piles. He and his companions buried their dead and had tools for many purposes, including advanced types of fishhooks, according to Dr. Collie.

GOESCHELL SAYS HE CAN'T RECALL SLAYING CHILD

William Goeschell, 30, an electrical engineer, told the jury in Judge Stanley Klarkowski's court yesterday that he does not remember anything about slashing the throat of his 3 year old daughter, Elaine, stabbing his wife, Hermine, or attempting suicide. He is being tried for the murder of his daughter and his defense is that he was temporarily insane. The wife recovered, but because of the law which prevents a wife from testifying against a husband, she cannot be a witness.

Goeschell, who wept frequently while testifying, said his wife's friendship with a cousin drove him into a frenzy, which finally culminated in the stabbing. The murder occurred on July 6, shortly after Goeschell had been fined $10 and costs in the Town Hall court on a charge of disorderly conduct brought by the wife.

Assistant State's Attorney Charles J. Mueller and Henry Ayers are seeking the death penalty for Goeschell. The case probably will go to the jury tomorrow evening.

Hursen Funerals from Anywhere

Did you know that the City of Chicago is 26 miles long north to south, and 15 miles wide east to west? Do you know that in every neighborhood within this vast territory Hursen funerals are seen and instantly recognized?

This means that "Hursen's" belongs to all Chicago, including its suburbs. It is not confined to any one neighborhood. Long ago the ever-growing Hursen organization completely eliminated the question of distance in regard to funerals.

There must be a powerful reason why so many people in Chicago will disregard distance, and why their first thought, at the necessary moment, is "HURSEN." It simply proves that people will gravitate to that institution which serves them best, at the most reasonable cost.

What your distance away may be from any of the 3 Hursen "funeral-homes" is never a factor in rendering "Hursen" service. That same unusual elegance in every detail which has made Hursen famous for funerals is lavished on every occasion, whether the funeral be large or small.

Naturally, your devotion demands the best. The great Jury of over three million people in Chicago have shown their preference for years. It is this preference, for good reason, that has made "Hursen's" the largest and greatest institution of its kind in America today. So, call Hursen, of course!

ASKS EMMERSON TO AVERT DELAY IN PRIMARY FIGHT

Berger Urges Speed in Test Legislation.

BY PARKE BROWN.

Attorney Henry A. Berger, who presented the recent successful attack on the 1927 primary laws before Circuit Judge Harry M. Fisher, wrote to Secretary of State L. L. Emmerson yesterday charging him with delaying the litigation unnecessarily.

Before Judge Fisher entered his order in the case Attorney Berger filed a supplemental petition asking that Secretary Emmerson, as well as County Clerk Sweitzer and other county officials, be enjoined from calling and conducting primaries under the present law. Instead of having his appearance filed immediately as had been expected, the secretary of state asked that he be served in the regular way, a move that may delay the case several weeks on its way to the Supreme court.

Help for Emmerson?

Although Mr. Berger did not refer to it, his letter was considered an echo of political gossip that considerable advantage might come to Secretary Emmerson as a candidate for the governorship if the state is sent back to the old nominating convention system. He is the filing officer who would pass on the certificates of nomination.

"I am informed by the sheriff of Sangamon county," wrote Attorney Berger, "that service of summons has already been made upon you. If you take your full time, the pleadings cannot be settled until some time along in the middle of January, which would prevent an appeal even at the February term and necessitate a delay until submission of the cause to the April term of the Supreme court.

"We in Cook county are extremely desirous of an early disposition of the matter by the Supreme court. The hope in the beginning was to submit this cause at the December term of court, but due to the fact that it became necessary to make you a party this hope could not be realized.

Charges Responsibility.

"We now are extremely desirous of submitting the matter at the February term, but cannot do so if you persist in delaying the final disposition in the Circuit court of this county. Responsibility for this delay naturally will rest upon you unless you authorize the attorney general to enter your appearance immediately and answer the supplemental bill."

Two delegations of political interest leave Chicago on the Capitol Limited at 1 o'clock today. The larger of the two consists of more than a score of members of the Hamilton club, who will appear before the Republican national committee in Washington with a plea that the party's national convention be held in Chicago.

This group is headed by George A. Berry Jr., president of the club, and W. G. Edens, chairman of a special committee appointed to try to get the convention. Others are U. S. Marshal Palmer Anderson, Postmaster Arthur C. Lueder, William C. Hollister, John M. Glenn, David H. Jackson, George W. Dixon, L. K. Torbet, Chester E. Cleveland, and Morton Cressy. Some will take their wives and other members of their families.

Go to Boost Smith.

State Senator John Dailey of Peoria heads a group of legislators who will carry to Washington a resolution passed by the last general assembly urging that Senator-elect Frank L. Smith be seated in order to give Illinois its constitutional representation in the upper chamber of congress. His associates are Senator Richard J. Barr, Speaker Robert Scholes, and Representatives G. J. Johnson and Reed Cutler. Illness prevents Lieut. Gov. Fred E. Sterling from leading this delegation as he had planned.

On the same train will be Attorney General Oscar E. Carlstrom, who, in a sense, belongs to both delegations.

AGAIN LOVE LAUGHS AT LOCKSMITHS AND BISHOP HAS TO PAY

PARIS, France, Dec. 3.—(AP)—A young girl's happiness is more important than an elderly gentleman's comfort, even if the gentleman is a bishop, the Court of Referees at Montpelier decided today.

The trouble started when love, laughing loudly at locksmiths, broke the lock of the bishop's garage and enticed his chauffeur to a tryst with the dark eyed daughter of a sexton.

Bishop N. Mignen was sure he could not get a better chauffeur and equally sure that the girl, Mlle. Duval, could not get a worse husband. He accordingly instructed Arch-Priest Yaulbon of St. Peter's church to frown upon the marriage and to tell the sexton to refuse his consent. Papa Duval respected the bishop's authority, but desired his daughter's happiness above all things on this earth, he said.

"I cannot live without him," from the daughter was quickly followed by "bless you, my children," from the father.

The bishop retaliated by dismissing the sexton, who appealed to the Court of Referees. The court awarded him money damages for his abrupt dismissal.

Harvard Man Convicted for Sacco Speech; No Permit

Boston, Mass., Dec. 3.—[U.P.]—Powers Hapgood, Harvard graduate and nephew of Norman Hapgood, the writer, was convicted here today on a charge of delivering a pro-Sacco-Vanzetti speech on Boston Common without a permit. The jury, which had deliberated nearly 25 hours, disagreed on a second charge, that of inciting a riot.

helped to pick them up. Jess said they belonged to Daugherty."

Accuses Dr. Sawyer.

Discussing Dr. Sawyer, "the country homeopathic physician whom President Harding put into a brigadier general's uniform," Forbes declares that Dr. Sawyer was the first man to reach him after he (Forbes) had been made director of the war risk insurance bureau by the President.

"Now let's do some real work," Sawyer greeted him, Forbes says, and promptly suggested that he "kick out" the medical director of the bureau. From then on, Forbes writes, Dr. Sawyer tried to "dominate the bureau and its employes, establishing a 'stool pigeon' system in the bureau and other departments of the government as well."

Club Has Court Oust 24 Hunters from Its Preserve

Springfield, Ill., Dec. 3.—[U.P.]—Judge Louis Fitz-Henry, in federal court today, issued a preliminary injunction restraining 24 residents of Cass, Schuyler and Brown counties from poaching on the game preserve of the Sanganois club, near Beardstown. Petition for the injunction was brought by R. E. Edwards of New York City. Other members of the club reside in Chicago.

25 ATTEND FIRST MIDWEST SESSION OF CINCINNATI

Twenty-five midwesterners, members of the Society of the Cincinnati, gathered at the University club last night for the first meeting of the fraternity ever held outside the original thirteen states.

The society was organized by French and American officers in 1783 and membership has been restricted rigidly to the male descendants of the founders. At present its roster shows a total of about 1,000 members, of whom about eighty reside in the middle west. Even at its founding the entrance rules were so strict that Thomas Jefferson, Samuel Adams and Benjamin Franklin denounced it as likely to form the basis for a race of heriditary military nobles. These fears were never realized.

Among the Chicagoans who attended the dinner last night were Carter H. Harrison, Eames MacVeagh, Peter Vroom, Maj. W. Lee Hart, the Rev. Arthur Rogers, William A. Pope and Arthur W. Maynard. Representatives were present from Cedar Rapids and Dubuque, Ia.; Detroit, Louisville, St. Louis and St. Clairsville, O. Mr. Vroom, chairman of the meeting, said the gathering would be made an annual affair for midwest residents who were unable to attend their state meetings in the east.

ARMY HAMPERED BY UNCERTAINTY, PRESIDENT TOLD

Davis Report Stresses Definite Policy Need.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Secretary of War Davis, in his annual report to the President today, stressed the necessity of a stablized military policy if the nation is to be guaranteed an ever increasing degree of security and effective national defense.

While assuring the President that the military establishment has enjoyed a year of definite progress, Mr. Davis pointed out that the effectiveness of the army, its morale and proficieny have suffered since the world war from uncertainties as to strength, organization and location.

"Under such conditions, progress could not be otherwise than slow and somewhat unsatisfactory," the secretary said. "The insufficiency of our provisions for the building up and maintenance of the authorized war reserve of material for two field armies, or 1,000,000 men, is a matter of deep concern to this department.

Housing Is Still a Problem.

"Stagnation in promotion and inadequacy of housing also remain as important questions for solution. But, given opportunity for continued development during coming years, the army of the United States will afford to the nation an ever-increasing degree of security and effective defense."

While national defense was given the paramount position, Secretary Davis devoted the bulk of his report to a discussion of insular affairs, the Panama canal, Mississippi flood control, and the administration of the Inland Waterways corporation.

The secretary recommended a material relaxation in the restraints imposed in the Philippines to prevent the exploitation of the native peoples and the immediate appropriation of $7,000,000 to replace the amount allotted from the general river and harbor fund for Mississippi flood relief and to carry on necessary construction work. Enlargement of the capacity of the Panama canal and the development by congress of a definite barge line policy for inland waterways were also urged.

Situation in Philippines.

"Never has the government of the Philippine islands been in so satisfactory and promising condition as today," Mr. Davis informed the President. "Never have the people of the islands been more prosperous. Never has the outlook for the future been so bright. This happy position is the result of the policies pursued by the United States in its government of the Philippines, reinforced, strengthened, and maintained by a sterling administration of the islands during the last six years. The Philippines of today are Gen. Woods' most fitting monument."

Secretary Davis admitted that the attempt to develop in the Philippines a people capable of self-government has interfered with the economic development of the islands. He took issue, however, with the claim that announcement of a definite American policy for the Philippines would certainly result in more rapid advancement.

Would Mean Retrogression.

"If the United States," he said "were to announce the definite determination to remain permanently, or for an extended period, in control of the islands, there would be rapid development. On the other hand, it is equally true that if the United States were to announce a definite determination to withdraw within the near future such a decision would result not only in slowing up developments but, for a period, in rapid retrogression."

Mr. Davis said his studies has disclosed that the restrictive land legislation, which makes large leaseholds or estates impossible, has prevented the beneficial use of idle public lands and deprived the government of revenue.

"In order to increase the capacity of the Panama canal, he recommended the carrying out of the long considered project which involves the construction of a dam across the Chagres river at Alhajuela, fourteen miles from the canal. Such a project would cost $10,000,000, he estimated.

"By its construction," the report said, "there would be created a lake with a storage capacity of 22,000,000,000 cubic feet, an amount which would allow an increase in traffic to four times the present amount."

Secretary Davis recommended that congress express its policy with respect to the future of the Inland Waterways corporation.

Observe Golden Rule Sunday Today

Holbrook Blinn warning Martha Lorber on Harris theater stage that cornmeal is fattening as they sample an orphan's luncheon in observance of Golden Rule Sunday for the benefit of children under the care of the Near East relief. Church, society and stage are taking part in the program today.

WANTS TO INCREASE PANAMA AIR FORCE TO WAR TIME STRENGTH

Washington, D. C., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Representative Frank James [Rep., Mich.], senior member of the house military affairs committee, today announced his support of plans for raising the peace time strength of the air forces at Hawaii and Panama to the point where they would approximate war time strength.

Mr. James expressed the opinion that the five year air expansion program has been rendered inadequate by the flying achievements of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh and other flyers last summer. These flights demonstrated, he said, that the airplane will have to be considered as a greater factor in the next war than was anticipated by the war department at the time of our hearings.

As a result of personal investigation Mr. James believes $15,000,000 should be expended annually in housing projects for the next three years. After that date he believes congress could reduce its appropriation for housing down to $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 annually.

DICTATOR WEDS IN CHILE; POPE SENDS BLESSING

SANTIAGO, Chile, Dec. 3.—(AP)—Gen. Ibanez, president of Chile, was married today to Señorita Graciela Letelier Velasco, daughter of Ricardo Letelier, in the first wedding of an executive in office in the history of the country. The couple was married at the church of St. Augustine in the presence of members of the diplomatic body and high officials. Great crowds thronged the streets to watch the procession after the ceremony. Pope Pius sent a benediction to the president through Cardinal Gasparri, papal secretary of state.

DOTY, HOMEWARD BOUND, SAILS ON FREIGHT VESSEL

ORAN, Algeria, Dec. 3.—(AP)—Bennett J. Doty of Biloxi, Miss., who has just been released from serving the remainder of his enlistment in the French Foreign legion, was embarked by the military authorities aboard the freighter Tafna which left for Marseilles at 8 o'clock this morning.

The original plan was that Doty take a regular passenger steamer leaving Oran at 5 o'clock tonight, but the authorities, stressing the fact that he will be under military control until he leaves Cherbourg on Wednesday for the United States, ordered him aboard the freighter. He left with hardly a look at Oran.

Doty will arrive at Marseilles about noon Monday and there he and the others will report under military escort at Fort St. John, where he enlisted. He may be held there for two or three days by military red tape.

Doty had no time to get some "city clothes." When he left he was still wearing the army's gift suit of civilian cloths, which is anything but tailor made in its appearance.

The American, who won honors in fights with Druse rebels in Syria and faced the prospect of a firing squad for desertion, came close to rebellion when a non-commissioned officer told him he must go on the freighter, instead of the passenger ship, but finally he resigned himself to it like the soldier he is.

2 BOYS, 15 AND 16, JAILED AS ELDER ADMITS MURDER

Two "back o' the yards" hoodlums, one a boy of 15, the other just turned 16, were under arrest yesterday after one had confessed to Capt. William Stapleton of the New City police that they had murdered Kasimir Lipa, 52 years old, of 5322 South Ashland avenue, when he resisted their attempts to rob him.

"Boys are dropping their spellers to pick up guns, nowadays," observed Capt. Stapleton. "These boys are bandits and murderers at an age at which, a generation or so ago, they would just be learning to sneak a cigaret puff in some dark corner."

The elder of the lads, Andrew Zoglin of 505 West 45th place, confessed that it was he who fired the shot killing Lipa, last Thursday night. Then he gave the gun to Daniel Kozal, 4837 South Laflin street, his comrade in crime, to dispose of, according to his confession.

On the night of the crime, Lipa's body was found on the sidewalk outside his home. At first it was thought he had died of heart disease, for the small hole over his heart looked like an old abrasion.

But when Dr. Charles L. Janda, coroner's physician, made an autopsy, he discovered that the wound was fresh, and that a bullet had entered Lipa's heart.

Immediately Capt. Stapleton began an inquiry, and learning that the wound took an upward course, he deduced that the killer was of short stature. So he ordered a search made for boys known as hoodlums, and Zoglin was among those brought in. After hours of questioning, the lad confessed to the crime, and named Kozal as his accomplice. Kozal then was arrested.

GOOD FELLOWS URGED ANEW TO HELP GIVE CHEER

Benefit Show Is Planned for Disabled Vets.

BY THOMAS WREN.

Chicago Good Fellows—this morning the curtain is lowered on the first week of the 1927 crusade to brighten sad little hearts at Christmas time. Tomorrow morning the curtain will rise for the second week's activities to recruit a formidable Good Fellow army to chase the wolf from tenement doors of the poor children in the city on Christmas morning.

The fine start early last week followed by Friday and it now becomes the duty of all Good Fellows to dish in and do their bit.

Meal Is for Complete Joy.

The 1927 campaign will fall short of its mark unless every poor child is supplied with toys and candy and nuts when dawn breaks on this Christmas day.

On the afternoon of Dec. 17, between 1 and 3 o'clock, Good Fellows will sponsor an athletic and vaudeville show for world war veterans in Speedway hospital. Coöperation of Dr. O. B. Hallow of the Speedway hospital has been assured to make the show a success. The vets' show will consist of several bouts between amateur boxers, a program of music by the White Wings band, and several vaudeville acts.

Howard [Kid Howard] Carr will arrange the boxing matches. One of the matches will be between Rough House Joe Wallace and a French woman boxer and physical culturist.

Goodman to Referee.

Danny Goodman, once a contender for the world's lightweight championship, will referee the amateur fights at the hospital show. Goodman, who has entertained vets with shadow boxing and solo vaudeville stunts since the armistice, will also give several acts of his own at the show.

About half of the 800 disabled vets at Speedway are bedridden patients. Each of the latter who will be unable to see the show, will be presented with a practical Christmas gift.

To the Good Fellow department at 1 South Dearborn street yesterday came a letter from Philip W——, of Indiana avenue, basement flat rear.

"Please, Mr. Good Fellow," it read, "remember me and my little sister. I am six years old and my little sister will be 2 her next birthday and we are poor, even though we have a father and mother. But my father is out of work and my mother is buying another baby and she can't work. Please don't forget me and my little sister."

Little Philip's appeal is just one of thousands received at the Good Fellow department. To be convinced, clip out the Good Fellow coupon in today's TRIBUNE or phone Superior 0100 and ask for the Good Fellow department. If these arrangements don't meet with your convenience call personally at the Good Fellow department.

COLI'S WIDOW PROTESTS ON U. S. FUND DIVISION

MARSEILLES, France, Dec. 3.—(AP)—Mme. Coli, widow of Capt. Francis Coli, companion of Charles Nungesser in an ill fated attempt to fly across the Atlantic, is deeply dissatisfied with the apportionment of the Coli family's share of the fund subscribed in America for the Nungesser-Coli families.

She has written a long and bitter letter to Premier Poincare, expressing the hope that he will give consideration to the situation in which she has been placed. She desires that the French government compensate in some form for what she alleges to be injustice on the part of the committee handling the fund.

The committee allotted 593,000 francs [roughly $23,720] to Coli's mother and father and 97,000 francs [roughly $3,880] each to the widow and three children, which represents a monthly income of $20 apiece, Mme. Coli points out.

Coolidge Increases Duty on Sulphured Cherries

Washington, D. C., Dec. 3.—(AP)—The duty on cherries, sulphured, or in brine, stemmed or pitted, was increased by President Coolidge from two to three cents a pound under the flexible provisions of the tariff act.

A NEW AMPICO for this CHRISTMAS

THE NEW Ampico Symphonique! What gift could be more appropriate for Christmas this year? Two instruments in one—and at the price of a fine Baby Grand. The Ampico Symphonique is first of all a Grand Piano of exquisite musical quality and most attractive in appearance. But it is more—it is an Ampico with the faithful, living re-enactment of the world's great treasures of music as played by the master-pianists.

Whether it is the famous sonatas or the latest jazz that appeals to your family—the Ampico has something delightful and worth while to offer every member. Now the Ampico may be had in a Grand Piano at a new low price—nearly $500 less than any other Ampico Grand has ever before been priced. And it is the same Ampico as is in the most costly instruments, startling in its realism and the perfection of its re-enactment.

WHY not stop in tomorrow and hear the Ampico Symphonique? Let us explain how easy it is, with our Holiday Budget Plan to give your family one of these wonderful instruments for Christmas.

Special Christmas Terms

AN Ampico Symphonique will be delivered to your home for Christmas for a most moderate sum—less probably than you spent on trifling gifts for the family last year. Two whole years to pay, if you wish, with Budget Terms arranged to meet your convenience. Your present Piano will be accepted in exchange.

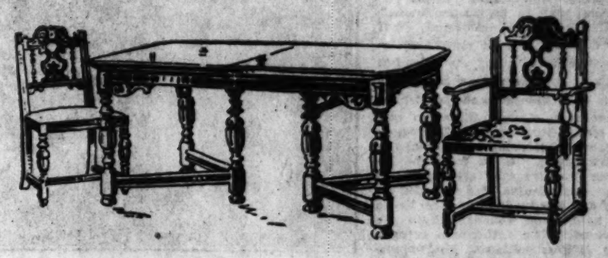
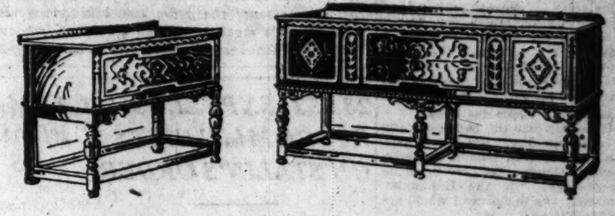
What shall I give for Christmas





YOU may not think of a furniture store—at least not the first thought—as a source of Christmas gifts.

Yet the fine art of Christmas giving rests on the thought—"What does he—or she—really want?" The wishes and pleasure of the giver are secondary to those of the receiver of the gift.

For the children you don't have to worry much; toys, games, books, sleds, skates; their wishes are passionate, but easily satisfied.

If you ask father what he wants he puts you off; and finally says "Get something that'll make mother happier. That will be a good gift for me." If you ask mother she may give you a list as long as your arm; but you know that, down deep in her heart, what she wants most of all is something that will add to her pride in the home, and contribute to her desire to make it more homelike, more cheerful, a better place in which to live.

Lots of families these days "pool" the fund—all "chip in"—and get something that's a gift, nominally for one, but really for all. And for those who feel that way about it we have the accompanying suggestions to make.

Maybe the dining room—the heart of the home—needs to be better. Look at the Berkey & Gay dining room suite we show here. It is made in the best manner known to these famous makers of fine furniture. The hand-painted panels of the china cabinet give a note of rich color to the whole room.

Or there may be a bedroom that isn't quite up to the rest of the house. We offer for that problem a Berkey & Gay bedroom suite. You'll be glad you looked at it even if you don't buy it, for it's a very beautiful group of furniture; with every detail of the making as perfect as you expect from these craftsmen.

We show also some lesser pieces; the prim colonial secretary and chairs; the warmly inviting chair that you'll enjoy using and having seen. Any of these are good Christmas gifts.

Of course you'll find here many other less expensive things—work stands, tea trays, humidors, lamps—many single items that will give general pleasure to everybody in the home.

It all depends on your idea of what's the best sort of Christmas present to give. We suggest that you can't do better than to give something that will give pleasure and comfort to every member of the family.

ADMITS POLAND AIDS LITHUANIAN REVOLT SCHEMES

Pilsudski Paper Tells of Moves in Vilna.

BY SIGRID SCHULTZ.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]
[Copyright: 1927: By The Chicago Tribune.]

BERLIN, Dec. 3.—Marshal Josef Pilsudski's semi-official newspaper in Warsaw today admitted the Poles are organizing the Lithuanian emigres in Vilna. It published on the front page a photograph of the Lithuanian captain, Majus, leader of the Tauroggen revolt, who, according to Marshal Pilsudski's organ, "is to head the Lithuanian emigrants assembled in Vilna. Capt. Majus was wounded recently and was hidden in a farm house until he became well enough to flee to Poland. The Lithuanian refugee chiefs, J. Plechkaitis and M. Poplauskas, will work with him in Vilna."

Heretofore the Polish foreign office has indignantly denied Poland was organizing Lithuanian bands for a coup against the Kovno government, but Marshal Pilsudski, with the frankness of an old soldier, pricked the soap bubble of pretense and his organ has taken up the cudgels for the refugees.

Lithuania Hopes for Peace.

"We do not fear the bands of refugees or an uprising," Premier Waldemaras of Lithuania, who is in Berlin en route to Geneva, declared in an interview today. "If the Lithuanian government was in danger I would not have left Kovno."

The dictator admitted the danger of war in his corner of the world, but added, "Everybody knows a war between Poland and Lithuania automatically would lead to an European war, and therefore I am confident that the powers who have Poland under their financial and political thumbs, will order it back if it adventures into Lithuania."

"President Wilson created the league of nations to prevent war and protect small nations. That is why I am going to Geneva.

Must Solve Vilna Problem.

"It will be difficult to find a solution for the Polish-Lithuanian disagreement immediately. Only step by step progress is possible, but we Lithuanians are optimistic and patient. We have waited for peace ever since the Polish general, Lucien Zeligowski, seized Vilna in 1921. The question of Vilna must be solved before we can make a real peace with Poland.

"We do not dream of attacking the Poles. Marshal Pilsudski has insulted me personally. I am ignoring his insults because I do not care for saloon brawl tactics. My only reply to his insinuations is that I have not mobilized a single unit of the Lithuanian army and I doubt if Marshal Pilsudski can give a similar statement with a clear conscience."

Warsaw papers claim Lithuanian troops are concentrated near Usjany and that many Lithuanian refugees are arriving in Vilna daily.

Greater importance is attached to the secret reports in diplomatic circles that the soviets have sent reinforcements to the Polish border from central Russia. Four divisions of heavy artillery and a brigade of cavalry are at Lepla, while infantry regiments 11, 12, 87, and 89 are among the new forces near the Polish-Lithuanian border.

Poland May Bolt League.

BERLIN, Dec. 3.—(AP)—A rumor is in circulation in diplomatic circles, the Tageblatt says, that Poland is prepared to withdraw from the league of nations unless her wishes with regard to Lithuania were fulfilled. Poland desires unreserved reëstablishment of diplomatic and economic relations with Lithuania as well as possession of Vilna.

New Mexico Soon to Be State Without Street Car

Santa Fe, N. M., Dec. 3.—(AP)—New Mexico soon will be a state without a street car. "Use of the cars has gradually decreased until a passenger is almost an oddity," declared a petition presented the state corporation commission today by the Las Vegas Transit company. Permission to abandon the line because of operating losses was asked.

23,653 EXPELLED BY COMMUNISTS ON STALIN'S ORDER

Dictator Cleans Out Trotzky's Friends.

BY DONALD DAY.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]
[Copyright: 1927: By The Chicago Tribune.]

RIGA, Latvia, Dec. 3.—Stern measures taken against the opposition parties have resulted in the expulsion of 23,653 communists from the communist party. An additional 93,000 communists have been obliged to devote a third of their pay over a period of months to aid homeless children because they sympathized with the Trotzky movement, according to a report from the control committee of the communist party, which announces the party has been cleaned of the heretical elements, in accordance with Dictator Joseph Stalin's orders.

The fifteenth sesion of the communist party opened at Moscow quietly, with the reports of several committes which have been engaged in suppressing the opposition movement.

Confiscate Trotzky Fund.

A sensation was caused by the revelation that G. P. U. (state political police) operatives searched the home of the diplomat M. Joffe immediately after his suicide, discovering that he headed the political red cross which is busy collecting money to aid Leon Trotzky.

They confiscated 14,000 roubles (about $7,000) together with important correspondence revealing the strongholds of the opposition movements in Leningrad, the Donetz coal basin and Ural industrial district. Mass arrests of workers have been made in these districts and the opposition members now are in the same position as the nihilist terrorists under the czarist regime.

The G. P. U. also discovered that the Centrosoyus—one of the largest cooperatives—had been transmitting correspondence between M. Trotzky and foreign communists, and a complete reorganization of the institution was ordered.

Strike at Trade Delegations.

Bolshevik trade and diplomatic delegations abroad also are being cleaned up. Two hundred and fifty unreliable communists have been ordered back to Moscow from the Berlin delegation alone.

The dislike of communists abroad to return to Moscow for punishment was commented on in the paper Moscow Economic Life, which reports the majority of the officials who are losing their posts are remaining in the countries where they are stationed. Some are buying passports to other countries to avoid the disciplinary measures.

GERMAN CLUBS PRAISE STEUBEN AS HERO OF '76

Baron Frederick William von Steuben was praised yesterday by Capt. A. F. W. Siebel and by former Congressman Richard Bartholdt of St. Louis, as the key man in the success of the American revolution at a combined meeting of three German-American clubs in the Morrison hotel to celebrate the sesquicentennial anniversary of Steuben's arrival in the United States.

"Steuben's services contributed more than those of any other one man except Washington to the success of the American revolution," declared Capt. Siebel, president of the German Club of Chicago.

"Without Baron Steuben," said Bartholdt, "in the opinion of many historians, the cause of liberty and independence might have been lost."

The German Club of Chicago, the Germania club, and the Steuben Society of America conducted the meeting.

BRITAIN LINKS TWO IN TRIAL AS SPIES TO RUSSIA

Witness Tells of Bribe for War Secrets.

BY JOHN STEELE.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, Dec. 3.—Great Britain's sensational spy drama, centering around Wilfred Francis MacCartney, a British communist, and George Hansen, a German student, who were arrested a fortnight ago, reached a climax today in the revelation that soviet Russia was involved.

George Monkland, an insurance man, was the star witness. He told of the incidents leading up to the arrests. He successfully baited MacCartney, even accepting £25 [about $125] payment for what MacCartney believed was valuable information concerning the shipment of arms to Russian border states.

Part of Evidence Secret.

Mr. Monkland said he lost no time in communicating with Admiral Sir Reginald Hall, who was director of naval intelligence during the war, and who assisted further in trapping MacCartney and Hansen.

Meanwhile a mysterious "Mr. Peters" has been assigned to the case by authorities in order to take reports from Mr. Monkland, some of whose discoveries are considered so sensational they will be submitted only as secret evidence.

A significant recche of the sensational raid on the soviet trade agency here last May was introduced into the testimony when Mr. Monkland declared MacCartney had phoned him the day of the raid to get rid of incriminating documents, for he knew the raid was coming and had warned the Arcos organization.

Mr. Monkland was given a questionnaire concerning the secret manual of the Royal Air force, as well as airplane performances and reports on airplane appropriations, to which he was expected to supply the answers for generous remuneration. If he acquired the valuable information, he declared, he was instructed to "go to the Chesham house, the soviet embassy, and ask for the attaché, telling him I was one of the firm."

New Russo-British Pact Looms.

Meanwhile it is learned there is the possibility of a Russo-British agreement before long on the basis of the payment of the Russian debts and granting of large oil concessions to British nationals. This is the result of efforts now being made by the Anglo-Persian Oil company, in which the British government is the largest shareholder, to secure an agreement with Russia.

The Anglo-Persian Oil company is operating through Persia, where it has large concessions, but where it has been hit hard by the recent tripartite agreement of Russia, Persia and Afghanistan by which Russia undertook to develop oil in Persia and Afghanistan and the other two countries agreed to grant no more concessions to European groups. Russia, however, has been unable to carry out its promises and is unable properly to develop its own fields, so now it is believed that there is the possibility that Great Britain will come in as the receiver, to take over the whole oil development, including Russian oil.

Will Fête Emir of Afghanistan.

The emir of Afghanistan now is on his way to Great Britain where he will be fêted as a great ruler, and every effort will be made to win his friendship. Sir Denys Bray, foreign secretary of the government of India, is on his way to Persia to see Shah Rhiza Khan Pahlevi, who is his personal friend. He will try to convince the Persian ruler it is better to tie up with Great Britain.

Hundreds Beg to Witness Snyder-Gray Executions

New York, Dec. 3.—(AP)—Hundreds of requests to witness the execution of Mrs. Ruth Snyder and Henry Judd Gray next January have been received at Sing Sing prison, Warden Lewis E. Lawes revealed today. Due to the limited seating capacity of the death house, however, few will have their wishes granted. The greater part of the available seats, he said, will be occupied by the press, 73 applications from newspapers having already been received.

CYLINDER WASHER

The gentle cylinder principle adopted by EVERY laundry and dry cleaning establishment in the world as the FASTEST way of washing clothes without damage

MAKE this the happiest Christmas your wife has ever had. Give her the world's finest washing machine—the gift that will mean a lifetime of service and of saving for her; in labor, time and actual money. Not some faddish article soon to be discarded.

In this latest Thor you receive at a remarkably low cost a washer that has taken over 20 years to build and that has required millions of dollars for development. Only tremendous volume production could give you so fine a washer for so low a cost.

Twenty years ago when the Thor was the first domestic electric washing machine the cylinder principle had long been used by laundries, dry cleaners and other professionals—whose profits depended upon cleaning clothes quickly and without injury. Today, after 20 years of steady improvement, the Thor has reached the ultimate perfection of the cylinder-washing principle—the only principle which has stood the test of time—in a class by itself, as a million users know.

Most Thor dealers have sold Thors continuously since the early days of their business careers, because they knew the unequaled value and quality leadership. Thor customers became their friends.

Your satisfaction is absolutely guaranteed when you buy a Thor. Right NOW, before it is too late, see the nearest Thor dealer listed below and arrange to have a New Thor 4 delivered Christmas eve.

Thor's 10 Points of Leadership

1—Washes cleaner and faster.
2—Holds world's record for long life.
3—Washes more clothes than any other.

5—No paddles or other contrivances to wear and tear the clothes.
6—Cylinder like polished silver, need never be taken out.
7—Special designed double tub that will keep the water 17 degrees warmer, because there is a dead air space between these tubs, insuring greater washing efficiency.
8—Direct gear drive; no belts to slip and break.
9—Unique Goodrich rubber soft-cushion roll wringer that won't break buttons—eliminates 97% of old wringer troubles.
10—Beautiful. Finished in a rich East India buff with ebony trim.

BRANDS ENDLESS CHAIN SELLING AS VAST FRAUD

U. S. Cites Supreme Court Ruling Against It.

Warning was issued yesterday to all concerns using the endless "chain system" of merchandising that the United States Supreme court had upheld an injunction preventing the sending of such matter through the mails. The warning was issued by K. P. Aldrich, acting chief inspector of the postoffice.

Estimates that operators of such systems have fleeced purchasers throughout the nation of sums ranging into the millions were made by postoffice inspectors who have made investigations. The scheme involves the sale of coupons. For instance, each purchaser obtains four coupons for $1. He sells three coupons for $1 each and for the remaining coupon and $3 he receives $4 in merchandise. Each of the three buyers of a $1 coupon in turn is entitled to four new coupons which he disposes of in a similar manner. And so it goes on in an endless chain until the market for coupons is saturated, leaving a great number of ultimate buyers holding the sack. The schemes are worked for things ranging from golf balls to autos and houses, the postoffice said.

New York Firm Enjoined.

The injunction against using the mails for such schemes was sustained by the Supreme court. It was against the Tribond Sales corporation of New York City. Local postoffice inspectors stated that fifty Chicago concerns were using the same system.

The postoffice inspectors found that some one in almost every family in the United States had received some such advertising.

"Complaints against these systems," said a postoffice circular, "have been received from state authorities, better business bureaus, trade bodies, merchants, manufacturers, as well as from victims lured into the scheme by the age old bait of that 'something for nothing' myth. In the Tribond scheme the lure was the hope of getting $10 worth of hosiery for $1.

Working Toward Infinity.

Each chance taker was first required to hazard the sum of $4 for four coupons. But before each adventurer even up to the fifteenth link in the chain of this lone scheme could win the $10 prize, 1,549,681,956 additional investors around the total population of the entire earth, would have to be found to advance the stupendous sum of $4,649,045,868.

FIGHT OVER CAR TRANSFER.

Thorval Hemb of 151 Linden avenue, Wilmette, demanded a transfer on a surface car at Monroe and La Salle streets yesterday. Conductor Thomas Sampson declined to issue one. Hemb swung and struck Sampson. The latter seized a switch iron and felled his opponent. Both were arrested and charged with assault.

MAAS BILL WOULD LET STATES DEFINE INTOXICATING LIQUOR

Washington, D. C., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Representative Melvin G. Maas [Rep., Minn.], who was elected on a wet platform from the St. Paul district, announced today that he will introduce a bill next week to modify the Volstead act. If enacted, it would eliminate the definition of intoxicating liquors, now set at one half of one per cent maximum of alcohol. In its place Mr. Maas would provide that intoxicating liquors must be in fact in accordance with the laws of the individual states. It would also confine the enforcement of the Volstead act to interstate violation, leaving local enforcement to the state or to local authorities.

DEBUTANTES OF CHICAGO SPEND DAY AT PARTIES

Chicago debutantes and their group went from one party to another yesterday afternoon and evening. Miss Roberta Harvey's debut reception given by her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Robert H. Harvey of 340 Barry avenue, was at the Drake in the afternoon. Miss Jessie Hosmer's dinner dance was at the Fortnightly at 8 o'clock, and later in the evening the set went to the Casino for the debut ball for Miss Frances Richardson.

Miss Harvey's debut dress was of flesh colored velvet trimmed with silver. Owing to the death of Miss Hosmer's uncle, her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Hosmer of the Seneca hotel, did not receive with their daughter. Mr. and Mrs. James Simpson stood in line with Miss Hosmer, who wore pale pink and silver and carried a bouquet of pink roses for the occasion.

CHICAGO PAYS $564,263,100 FOR YEAR'S FOOD

Or at Rate of 51½c Per Person Daily.

BY OSCAR HEWITT.

The annual food bill of metropolitan Chicago totals $564,263,100, according to the federal government census of 41,224 retailers, just completed. By chief items it may be summarized as follows:

Food—	Retail cost.
Bread, bakery products	$ 39,613,000
Ice cream, confections	41,417,000
Fish, sea foods	4,332,400
Fruits, nuts	11,438,900
Groceries, delicatessen	173,836,400
Ice	2,866,500
Meats and poultry	93,675,500
Milk, butter, eggs, cheese	43,665,300
Vegetables	9,381,900
Restaurant meals	144,616,300
Total	$564,263,100

Chicago Census Is Unique.

It is impossible to compare Chicago with other large American cities on the cost of retail food, because the government has not taken a like census in any other comparable municipality.

Taking the entire food bill of $564,263,000, which is 23.4 per cent of the total retail sales in Chicago last year, and dividing it by an estimated population of 3,000,000—although the government estimates make it 100,000 more—and the per capita cost of food in Chicago is 51½ cents a day. While thousands of Chicagoans who can afford it eat in expensive restaurants or fashionable hotels, a large part of the restaurant meals are consumed by visitors.

Other Meals Are Cheaper.

Eliminating the cost of restaurant meals—$144,616,200—and the cost of food per capita last year was a trifle more than 38 cents a day. That was the average cost of food eaten outside of public eating places and includes everything down to the baby's milk and soda pop in the corner drug store. That is the per capita cost of keeping the women slender, the men fit, and the children healthy, according to the government census.

Life can be sustained in Chicago on 38.08 cents a day per capita for food alone. That price includes babies who consume only a few cents worth of milk daily. Cook county spent $201,798.43 for food at the county hospital last year. That is at the rate of 31.3 cents per day for the average patient population of 1,764, but there are a number of employés, in addition to the patients, who get some of their meals at the hospital.

More Institutional Data.

At the Oak Forest infirmary $267,433.45 cents was spent for food where the average daily population was 3,564. That is an average of a little over 20 cents per day per inmate, and there, too, are many workers who obtain their meals there. The Bridewell has not published a report since 1921, but in that year the cost was 16.5 cents per prisoner.

Warden Fogarty of the county jail fed a daily average of 818 prisoners last year for a total of $40,344. That is an average of 13.73 cents per prisoner per day. That is about one-third of the sum spent by the average Chicagoan, according to the new census figures.

On a per capita expenditure of 51½ cents per day for food, or on 38.08 cents, excluding cost of restaurant meals, Chicago keeps its women slender, its men fit and its children active. It is on this record that Chicago has established itself as the healthiest large city in the nation.

Rains While Temperature Is Below Zero in Alberta

LETHBRIDGE, Alberta, Dec. 3.—[U. P.]—Weather experts today expressed bewilderment over the phenomenon experienced here Thursday when rain fell for 15 minutes while the temperature was slightly below zero and the ground was covered with snow. Some experts believed a warm air pocket in the midst of the cold air above the earth caused the rain.

BANDITS SEIZE $2,500 AT DAIRY; 15 TERRORIZED

Five armed gunmen terrorized fifteen men and women employés of the Western Dairy company, 1447 Edgemont avenue, yesterday morning and escaped with between $2,500 and $5,000 from the safe. The employés of the company were forced to kneel with their hands in the air while the bandits waited impatiently for Morris Dick, 3605 Douglas boulevard, the president, to open the safe.

Dick became nervous and apparently could not work the combination, and William Ronanik, 1867 South Springfield avenue, another official, finally opened it, after 20 minutes' work. Thelma Mivel, 5514 Blackstone avenue, a secretary, was forced to kneel before the telephone switchboard and answer the calls, in order to avert suspicion.

The police were told that the robbers appeared familiar with the layout of the offices and that they had escaped with their loot just seven minutes before the scheduled time for the arrival of the bank messenger to take the receipts to the bank.

SCOFF AT RULING, CALL EXTRA SESSION TO AIR OKLA. ADMINISTRATION

Oklahoma City, Okla., Dec. 3.—(AP)—In the face of an adverse decision of the state Supreme court, leaders of a movement to investigate the administration of Gov. Henry S. Johnston announced late today that the state house of representatives would convene in special session next Tuesday as planned.

The Supreme court ruled this afternoon that the legislature has no inherent right to meet on its own motion and that if a session were held any acts of the body would be "without authority of law."

Challenging the authority of the judicial branch of the government to interfere with asserted rights of the legislative branch, sponsors of the session, which has been called by four house members, declared the Supreme court ruling would be ignored.

ASKS AMERICAN METHODISTS FOR AID IN ESTHONIA

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

RIGA, Latvia, Dec. 3.—Dr. [illegible] Simons, for twenty years head of the missionary activities of the Methodist Church in Russia and the Baltic states, has broadcast an appeal to American Methodists to help save the valuable property of the church in Dorpat, Esthonia.

While visiting Dorpat in June of 1926 with Bishop John Nuelsen, Dr. Simons took an option on a building in the center of the city, which the Methodists have been using since for religious work among the students of the 500 year old university there.

Appeals resulted in several contributions, William Halls, Brooklyn antropist, donating $3,000. Dr. Simons says that unless $4,000 is raised before Dec. 7 the Methodists may lose the property.

JUST two bright keys in a dainty jewel case! But no Christmas package ever held a greater treasure of happiness—for out in the drive stands a smart, trim Studebaker Commander—and those keys make it her own.

What pleasure you'll take in giving her this world-champion motor car—the car that climaxed its championship career by traveling 25,000 miles in less than 23,000 minutes! This dramatic run was made by strictly stock Studebaker Commanders under the supervision of the American Automobile Association. Nothing else on earth ever traveled so far so fast.

Neither she nor you may be interested in the high speed which The Commander is able to maintain for long distances. But you are interested in the sturdy design which made possible better than a mile a minute for a distance equivalent to a circuit of the world. Such stamina spells utmost reliability on your trips across town or across the continent. It means long life, low maintenance cost, superlative service.

There's justifiable pride that you and your wife will take in driving a car which has so conclusively demonstrated its ability as the "world's champion." You'll sense this pride when you step on the accelerator and flash ahead of the crowd; when you "zoom" up hills or "step-out" on the open highway.

And what joy to show The Commander to her friends, for its beauty of line and finish win instant admiration.

Drop in today and we'll give you the Keys. Her Commander will be at your door Christmas Eve or Christmas morning—whenever you say. Then no one's wife will have a happier Christmas than yours!

NEW LOW PRICES

The Dictator	$1165 to $1345

All prices f. o. b. factory, including more than $100 worth of extra equipment

Important—The initial payment on any Studebaker or Erskine car, if purchased under the liberal terms of Studebaker's Budget Payment Plan, would amount to little more than the cost of an assortment of the usual Christmas trinkets. If you are interested in this plan ask your nearest Studebaker dealer for particulars. If you have a car to trade in, it may serve as the first payment.

MRS. LANGLEY CLAIMS DISTINCTION OF ONLY GRANDMA IN CONGRESS

Washington, D. C., Dec. 3.—(AP)—Mrs. Catherine Langley, Republican representative-elect from Kentucky, today laid claim to the distinction of being the only grandmother in the new congress.

She said her daughter, Mrs. Katherine Bentley, would be her secretary and that reports that this position would be filled by her husband, former Representative John W. Langley, who recently was paroled from Atlanta penitentiary, where he was serving a sentence for conspiracy to violate the prohibition law, were erroneous.

Mrs. Langley said her first legislative offering would be a bill proposing erection of a memorial arch to world war veterans on the plaza of the Union station here.

to catch him while he was away, and once, when the examination brought from him a statement that he had surrendered to the state police because they had coaxed him "to let them get credit for the arrest," he startled every one by saying:

"I could tell a lot about that."

This line of questioning was not pursued.

Hesitates in Denial.

The little man whose pale face was almost the only thing that showed above the top of the witness box, was quick with his first denial that he killed Dr. Lilliendahl, but when Mr. Hinkle asked him the same question under cross questioning, he gulped, hesitated and asked:

"What was that question? I didn't quite hear it."

The stenographer read it off and then Beach was ready with his formal denial.

He raised a laugh with his jibes about the "very efficient police force," and another when he was asked if he had ever seen Bark since the trial started and he replied:

"I have never seen that man Bark before he barked from the witness stand here the other day."

CITIZENS ACT TO SAVE TIPPECANOE RIVER IN INDIANA

Power Plans Ruin Historic Stream, They Charge.

Lafayette, Ind., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Residents of the valley of picturesque Tippecanoe river in Indiana have renewed their efforts to reclaim the stream from what they call spoliation by hydroelectric power plants. These are being operated in such a manner, they assert, as to destroy fish life, injure property rights and practically to end fishing and aquatic activities in the region of the lower stretches of what is said to be Indiana's most beautiful bass stream.

Owners of property bordering on what once was an attractive waterway, the Izaak Walton league and citizens throughout the state have taken fresh interest in the effort to get the power company to cut down its use of water to a point that will permit a normal stage of water in the river at all times.

Since 1922 the operation of power plants at Norway and Oakdale dams have resulted in the drying up of the river in the lower stretches for one part of each day and the sudden flooding of the river bed at another part. This contrast is illustrated from photographs shown on page 3, part 2, of the rotogravure picture section in today's TRIBUNE.

According to Will L. Krietenstein of Monticello, Ind., president of the Tippecanoe River Riparian Owners' association, the condition is unnecessary for the uses of the power companies. He holds that the use of water taken by the company is far beyond the amount which it was understood would be used when the power rights were granted by the state.

As a final move to impress the Interstate Public Service corporation with the seriousness of the situation, a meeting was held by property owners recently to formulate a specific demand for the regulation of water consumption so that a normal flow would at all times pass through the lower portion of the river.

The demand, in resolution form, is now in the hands of the officials of the power company, who have promised definite reply early this month. It is said that if the reply is not favorable a decision as to the rights of owners of adjoining property will be sought in the United States Supreme court.

BEG YOUR PARDON!

In the rotogravure picture section of Nov. 13 appeared a picture of a pair of bison and a calf. The caption stated the photo was snapped by F. C. Suessenguth of St. Paul half an hour after the calf was born at Thermopolis, Wyo. That information came with the picture, apparently from Mr. Suessenguth. Now Mr. George G. Bain of Thermopolis, Wyo., provides evidence that it was he who took the photograph, that he took it in May, 1922, and copyrighted the picture on May 22, 1922. Mr. Bain states Mr. Suessenguth copied his picture from an enlargement now hanging in the city hall at Thermopolis.

As matters stand, the lower stretches of the Tippecanoe are practically dry for several hours each day. Above the Oakdale dam, water is stored for several hours each day to provide a volume of flowage that will operate the four 4,100 horsepower generating units for several hours. During the storage hours no water comes over the dam, and the river bed below for miles is exposed to its center. When the turbines are put into operation the floodgates are opened and a flood of water pours into the bed below which brings the stage up to two or three feet within a few minutes.

LLOYD GEORGE ANSWERS CRITICS ON PARTY FUND

"Used None for Myself," Ex-Premier Says.

BY JOHN STEELE.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]
[Copyright: 1927: By The Chicago Tribune.]

LONDON, Dec. 3.—David Lloyd George today took a fierce slap at his critics who have interested themselves in what is known as the "Lloyd George Fund." His statement was necessary, he said, because of the "cowardly slander, privately circulated, as to my use of the party funds; calumny insidiously and privately spread by men and women of the baser sort."

"Not one penny of the fund ever has been handled by me," the war time prime minister declared. "Not one penny have I ever touched for my private use."

Gives History of Fund.

He gives a full account of the origin, history and management of the fund of the Liberal party.

"The fund was collected by party whips, the same way exactly as every other political fund has been collected for well over a century," he went on. "During my premiership I had no information as to who among the persons put forward had or had not subscribed toward the party fund. . . . Even if I was privy to the fact that he had made a contribution to the party fund, that would be to my mind an additional claim, and I say so frankly, and I believe that would be the case with every prime minister or leader of a party."

Mr. Lloyd George incidentally explained from what sources he has obtained his private income in recent years.

Earns Living by Journalism.

"Since I left office I have worked hard as a journalist to earn my livelihood, and I am pleased to say, with some success," he declared. "My articles have appeared in almost every part of the world and my emoluments from this source during these four years have been much greater than the aggregate of my salary during seventeen years in office."

Mr. Lloyd George's statement, he explains, refers particularly to recent speeches by ministers "which indicate a common purpose to create prejudice against the Liberal party."

3 DIE FROM BOILER EXPLOSION.

Harrisburg, Ill., Dec. 3.—[U.P.]—George M. Benard, owner of a mill at Cypress, and John Gregory, a millhand, are dead as a result of injuries suffered when a boiler exploded at the mill. All but one of 11 men working about the mill were injured by the blast.

On Bench Tomorrow

FRANK COMERFORD.
[Paul Stone-Raymor Photo.]

Judge Elect Frank Comerford, although going into office as a Superior court judge, will be installed tomorrow on the Criminal court bench during ceremonies presided over by former Mayor William E. Dever. Speakers will be Judge Samuel Alschuler, Justice Frederick R. De Young, Probate Judge Henry Horner, Maj. Gen. Roy D. Keehn, and Weymouth Kirkland, attorney. On Tuesday Judge Comerford will take over the duties of Judge Worth E. Caylor, whose assignment to the Criminal court last summer was the cause of a judicial controversy. Judge Caylor's record has caused favorable comment. It shows that out of fifty-one cases tried by him after Sept. 20, when he assumed a seat on the Criminal bench, forty-five resulted in penal sentences.

Italy Refuses Further Import Bars to U. S. Autos

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

ROME, Dec. 3.—American automobiles will not be subject to any further import restrictions, Undersecretary of National Economy Bisi declared in the chamber of deputies today. Deputy Morelli of Tuscany demanded to know what steps the government will take to prevent further increases of American cars in Italy. Sig. Bisi said the solution was for Italian manufacturers to put out more moderate priced cars, thus offering more competition for American cars.

MEXICAN REBEL GENERAL KILLED BY FIRING SQUAD

Police Bare Schemes of Plotters in U. S.

BY JOHN CORNYN.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]
[Copyright: 1927: By The Chicago Tribune.]

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 3.—Gen. Francisco Bertani, who was captured on Thursday by federal troops in the state of Vera Cruz, near Minatitlan, was court martialed and shot yesterday for participation in the revolt headed by Gen. Francisco Serrano and Gen. Arnulfo Gomez, who met their death in the same manner a short time ago.

Gen. Bertani joined the revolutionists on Mount Perote and was at the battle of Ayahualulco, where Gen. Gomez was defeated. Gen. Bertani was notorious in the state of Vera Cruz as a guerilla leader.

Report Three Generals Taken.

It was reported, but not confirmed, today that the remaining outstanding figures of the recent revolt, Gen. Almada, Gen. Medina and Gen. Lucero, were captured this morning while trying to cross from the state of Chiapas to the Guatemalan border.

Semi-officials statements today said Jose E. Gandara and Stephen Vergara, accused in El Paso of running arms across the border for Mexican rebels, were sent to the United States several months ago by revolutionary plotters here, according to letters found by police in the house of Luis Segura Vilches, one of those arrested in the plot to assassinate Gen. Alvaro Obregon.

To Buy Arms in U. S.

Gandara and Vergara were to collect funds throughout the southwestern United States for the revolution, and to buy arms and ship them to rebels in Sonora. The documents showed that the plotters' agents in the United States were, on the death of Gen. Obregon, to begin an active campaign for revolt in the northern states of Mexico. Yaqui Indians in the United States and in Sonora were to take part.

Gandara and Vergara were said to have been backed by the Catholic and the Mexican anti-government parties.

100 Arrested in Lisbon Riots Against Dictator

MADRID, Dec. 3.—[U. P.]—Violent anti-government disturbances occurred in Lisbon Thursday, it was learned today, during the celebration of the anniversary of Portuguese independence. Students rioted and shouted, "Down with the dictator," when the automobile of Premier Carmona passed them. One hundred students were arrested in clashes with the police.

UNIFIED CHURCH FOR ALL CHINESE, CHRISTIAN PLEA

Catholics, Protestants Oppose Foreign Bar.

BY CHARLES DAILEY.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]
[Copyright: 1927: By The Chicago Tribune.]

PEKING, Dec. 3.—Although most of the missionaries and many of the Chinese Christians in the region north of the Yangtze and in the vast hinterland to the west do not agree with them, the sentiment of the delegates to the National Christian council held in Shanghai was largely in favor of the movement for an independent Christian church in China and also for church participation in the national revolution, that has entered its seventeenth year.

As viewed by a minority of the missionaries in the south and by a large majority in the rest of China the time is not ripe for an independent Christian church in China, and in addition they oppose strongly the suggestion that the Christian Chinese be committed as a whole to independence of the foreigners.

Backed by All Creeds.

In this the Protestant missionaries are supported unanimously by the Roman Catholic missionaries. The Catholics have gone so far in their work in China that numerous Chinese bishops have been created, but an independent church is regarded as unthinkable.

The National Christian council is, of course, a Protestant organization, and its missionaries are supported chiefly by American and British contributions. About two-thirds of the delegates at the recent conference were Chinese, and the views of the foreign missionaries received only minor consideration on the question of joining in the political movement.

Chinese Leaders Fall to Agree.

The principal advocate of the union of the Christian church in China with the political movement known as the Nationalist cause was Dr. David Z. T. Yui, a Chinese, who as chairman delivered the annual address. Unfortunately he was unable to separate the national movement for independence in China from Nationalist movement at arms, which at the very time of the sitting of the council found its leaders hopelessly split and even fighting among themselves.

The Chinese people as a whole cannot or do not differentiate between the Nationalist movement he described and the Nationalist party of the politicians, and hence the misunderstanding in foreign countries. And as a step towards getting rid of foreign domination Dr. Yui urged the creation of one united Christian [Protestant] church in China. For this, he said, the demand on the part of Christian Chinese is rapidly rising. They do not want denominationalism, though they recognize values in different religious experiences.

The council also took cognizance of the desire of the Christian Chinese to be free from the foreign denomination.

AUTO PRICE WAR REPORT TRAILS NEW FORD DEBUT

Standard 6 to Cut $300, Detroit Hears.

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—While motor circles buzzed today with comment over the record breaking sales of the new Ford automobiles on their first day's showing, the automotive world was further agitated by the report that a standard six cylinder car would cut its price $300.

Such a price war has been denied in advance by officials of General Motors in public statements, wherein it was pointed out that there was plenty of room for all competitors in the motor industry. Nevertheless, the report has persisted that the phenomenal success of the Ford model has spurred all competitors to drastic action, the first step of which is to slice prices.

Crowd Ford's Position.

Discussion of the report centers around the fact that such a reduction would crowd Ford's present position in the low price field. For if a General Motors six cylinder car is sold at not much above $500, as is indicated, that would mean the four cylinder machine would be cut to a figure ranging right along with Ford prices. A new Chevrolet model, with four wheel brakes, which Ford has incorporated on all his new models, will be announced within a week, it is believed here.

With Ford orders pouring in from all quarters of the globe, 2,224 orders have already been booked in the Detroit district alone, although production does not seem likely to meet the initial demand. Attendance at Convention hall, where the Ford is being viewed, reached 114,800 today, with 31,368 at Highland Park.

Surplus Labor Worries Detroit.

As a result of the Ford announcement that preparations for production of the new Ford are going forward on a large scale, thousands of workers have arrived hoping for Ford jobs. The surplus labor has become such a heavy burden that the Detroit board of commerce is doing all it can, by advertisements and letters, to stem the incoming tide of job hunters.

QUEEN BEWAILS ROYAL CROWNS THAT PREVENT HER BOBBING HER HAIR

[Copyright: 1927: By The New York Times.]

PARIS, Dec. 3.— The queen of Spain, in a friendly chat with a pretty bobbed haired manicurist, who was doing her majesty's nails in a Paris shop today, bemoaned the restrictions of royalty, which prevent a queen from wearing short hair.

"How very fortunate you are, mademoiselle," sighed the beautiful queen, as she looked at the wavy short black locks of the blushing young French girl.

"If I could I would cut mine like yours. But the royal headpieces a queen must wear and the formal court gowns make short hair impossible. But I have had my daughter's hair cut because it is very much more modern and practical than the old fashioned way."

A Parisian writer was a discreet witness to the queen's visit to the beauty parlor.

MELLON RAKES BUSINESS CHIEFS IN TAX CUT ROW

Calls Position Unsound, Figures Erroneous.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Secretary of the Treasury Mellon today attacked the United States chamber of commerce recommendation for a $400,000,000 tax reduction as unsound and evidently based on a surprising misconception of the facts.

In a letter directed to Lewis E. Pierson, president of the chamber, the treasury secretary scored the organization for advancing the argument that no serious consequences would ensue even if a tax reduction actually resulted in a deficit. Mr. Mellon characterized portions of the chamber's tax statement as "hardly worthy of business men."

In taking exception to the chamber's lack of alarm over a deficit, the point which aroused the ire of the President a week ago, Mr. Mellon said that in his judgment it would be inexcusable for the United States to place itself in a position where it would have to borrow to pay for current expenditures.

Balanced Budget Essential.

"A balanced budget," said the secretary, "is an essential element of any sound financing system, and as long as I am secrtary the treasury department will resist the undermining of this principle and will continue to advocate a tax system adequate to produce every year the revenues necessary to meet current expenditures."

Mr. Mellon expressed surprise that the chamber was able to arrive at its conclusion without detailed figures on future revenues and expenditures.

"What has surprised me most," he wrote, "both in your public statement and in the report of your committee on taxation submitted to your charmber upon which their vote was based, is the entire absence of detailed figures as to future revenues and expenditures, without which it is impossible to prepare a budget or to express an opinion as to its soundness.

Finds Surprising Errors.

"In estimating probable surplus, probable expenditures are fully as important as receipts. The report of your committee contains no estimate of expenditures for the fiscal year 1929. At the time your report was prepared such figures were not even available to the department. Budget figures must be based on a detailed analysis of known needs, not upon generalizations.

"Moreover, when figures are given in your report they are in some instances evidently based on a surprising misconception of the facts. Thus, in giving figures for the yield of the corporation tax for 1927, the report states that the rate was 13 per cent when it was 13½ per cent. Such carelessness is likely to lead to very serious errors in the preparation of a budget."

NEW YORK STATE'S PER CAPITA WEALTH REPORTED AS $3,593

New York, Dec. 3.—[Special.]—The per capita wealth of New York state is $3,593, according to a computation made by the National Industrial conference board.

Although the total wealth of the state is $40,108,000,000, or nearly one-eighth of the total of the nation, the state ranks fourteenth in per capita wealth. Nevada, with less than 80,000 inhabitants, leads. Wyoming, South Dakota, Iowa, Oregon, Nebraska, California and North Dakota follow in the order named.

NEW YORK WIVES ASK EQUALITY IN PROPERTY RIGHTS

Want to Be on Same Basis as Their Husbands.

New York, Dec. 3.—[Special.]—On the theory that the ordinary housework a wife does in the home has an economic value great enough to entitle her to the same right to her husband's property as he now has to hers, Mrs. Jane Norman Smith of the National Woman's party pleaded today for a sweeping revision of the present statute, which she says discriminates against her sex. The plea was made before Gov. Smith's commission on defects in the law of estates.

Mrs. Smith asked the commission to change the present law so that either the dower will be applied to the husband, or so that a husband and wife will have an equal and absolute interest which neither might will away nor otherwise convey without the other's consent.

Committee Is Favorable.

After listening to Mrs. Smith's suggestions, which were apparently received with favor by the commission, the members adjourned the public hearing and went into executive session.

In her plea before the commission, Mrs. Smith cited laws of other states which tend to equalize the dower and courtesy rights and at the same time provide that the interest of either spouse cannot be defeated either by will or deed.

"The history of dower indicates that a conqueror a long time ago established this system as a reward for services rendered by women," Mrs. Smith said, "and while a great deal of sentiment has been attached to the dower system, we are aware that many men die without leaving any land, and when they do, the widow's dower may, in many cases, amount to a very small interest."

Rotary Club Attacked in Bolivia as a Masonic Body

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LA PAZ, Bolivia, Dec. 3.—The La Paz Rotary club was the subject of a petition for information in the chamber of deputies today when charges that it was a Masonic organization were made. The petition gave rise to a heated debate, during which the names of prominent Bolivian Catholics, members of the club, were cited.

WARFIELD ESTATE IS $5,500,000; BULK TO GO TO WOMAN'S HOME

New York, Dec. 3.—[Special.]—S. Davies Warfield, president of the Seaboard Air Line railroad and the Continental Trust company of Baltimore, who died at his home in Baltimore Oct. 25, left an estate of about $5,500,000, which will be reduced by debts and administration expenses to $4,000,000, it was learned here today. Because his only property in New York consisted of $26,000 in Seaboard Air Line bonds, no tax will be collected by this state.

The will of Mr. Warfield, who was a bachelor, set aside the bulk of his estate to establish the Anna Emory Warfield Home for Aged Women at his country place, Manor Glenn, outside of Baltimore, as a memorial to his dead mother.

FARM MEETING POLICY TO ECHO NATION POLITICS

Sessions Start Tomorrow —To Frame Demands.

BY FRANK RIDGWAY.

Farmers will open their presidential election convention here tomorrow. At least 3,000 delegates and farmers, representing more than forty states, are here for the opening of the American Farm Bureau federation's ninth annual meeting at the Sherman hotel tomorrow morning.

GEN. J. J. PERSHING. [P. & A. Photo.]

Quietly caucuses are being held at convention headquarters just as preconvention meetings were held two years ago when at a tense session S. H. Thompson was elected president of the federation as a direct result of a sharp division among agricultural leaders over President Coolidge's speech made to the farmers two days before.

Critic of Coolidge Elected.

O. E. Bradfute, at that time head of the farm bureau, approved the President's views, saying so in his talk at the meeting, while Mr. Thompson openly led the so-called radical group of farmers who criticised President Coolidge for failing to endorse creation of a government agency to handle surplus crops.

The expiration of Mr. Thompson's two year term again brings echoes of national politics into the farmers' convention.

Gen. Pershing to Speak.

Gen. John J. Pershing, commander of the A. E. F., will talk Wednesday on farm prosperity and its relation to national security. Dr. William Dodd of the University of Chicago will present for the first time the results of this extensive research into the cooperative movement among farmers. He and Robert P. Bass, former governor of New Hampshire will speak tomorrow afternoon.

Congressman Lister Hill of Alabama and former Gov. Nellie Taylor Ross of Wyoming will speak Tuesday morning. Dr. Edgar B. Brossard of the United States tariff commission and John E. Benton, solicitor general of the National Association of Railway and Utilities commissions, will talk Tuesday afternoon.

WOMEN ASK FARM AID

Seventy-five farm women from seventeen rural communities, delegates from every part of the country to the two day Home and Community Training school, which closed last night at the Hotel Sherman, yesterday took steps toward the advocacy of national legislation shaped to their needs.

Miss Julia Lathrop exhorted them to support the extension of the Shepherd-Towner act, which fosters the child welfare bureau work reducing mortality among mothers and children. Chester H. Gray, Washington representative of their parent organization, the American Farm Bureau federation, rebuked their apparent lassitude in supporting legislation favorable to the farmers. The women then adopted resolutions, previously framed, in support of both measures.

The farm women delegates went on record for the McNary-Haugen bill, and advocated the closer coöperation of the farm bureaus and the United States department of agriculture.

Mrs. Edward Franklin White of Indianapolis, vice president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs and candidate for the presidency, asserted at the morning session that the marriage and divorce laws of this country resemble a crazy quilt in their multiple patterns. She is a strong proponent of uniform marriage and divorce laws.

To Wed 'Bill' Edwards

MRS. NORMA STEELSMITH.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Judge and Mrs. R. G. Popham of Marengo today announced the engagement of Mrs. Popham's sister, Mrs. Norma Jones Steelsmith of New York, to William E. Edwards, also of New York. The wedding will take place in New York shortly after New Year's. Mrs. Steelsmith is a graduate of the Frances Shimer School for Girls, also of Drake university, Des Moines. She took a post-graduate course at Columbia university. Mr. Edwards, known as "Big Bill," was a Princeton football star. He was police commissioner of New York under Mayor William J. Gaynor and was collector of internal revenue in New York during the Wilson administration.

FARMS STEADILY RECOVERING FROM POST-WAR DROP

Jardine Report Shows a Gain Over Last Year.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Agriculture has made substantial progress in recovery from the effects of the post-war depression during the past year, Secretary of Agriculture William M. Jardine asserts in his annual report made public today.

"Progress is manifest in better balanced production, in advancing prices for some important crops, notably cotton and cattle, and in further improvement in the relationship between the prices of farm products and the prices of other goods," says Secretary Jardine.

"This relationship is expressed by the department of agriculture in index numbers showing the purchasing power of a unit of farm products in terms of non-agricultural goods. On Sept. 15 the index number indicating this purchasing power was 92, compared with an average of 85 for the year 1926, with 100 representing the average for the five years preceding the war.

Production Is Greater.

"It is important to bear in mind, moreover, that the improvement thus registered in the purchasing power index does not show the full extent of the recovery effected.

"In the last few years the productivity of American agriculture, as measured in output per farm worker, has increased greatly. On fewer acres and with a farm population 3,000,000 less than in 1919, the agricultural interests since 1923 have averaged a larger volume of production than in the year immediately following the war. This suggests the practical certainty that relative costs of production have been reduced despite continuing high overhead and labor expense."

Much remains to be done before the position of the farmer will cease to constitute a problem, Secretary Jardine said.

Opposes McNary Bill.

Discussing farm legislation, Secretary Jardine reiterates his opposition to schemes which he regards as unsound. He outlines his ideas for legislation to encourage marketing of surplus crops through coöperatives. Without mentioning that measure by name, he makes it clear that he will continue to oppose the McNary-Haugen bill.

"A large part of the farm problem—which, in fact, consists of many problems—must be solved by the individual and coöperative efforts of the farmers themselves," says Secretary Jardine.

"However, there is need for legislation to give further encouragement to large agricultural business organizations owned and controled by farmers and managed by strong business executives chosen by the producers.

MODERN HOMES ARE BLAMED AS COWS DIE YOUNG

Show Winners Must Fit Kitchenette Pans.

Steers, lambs and pigs ambitious to gain the rather dubious posthumous honor of grand champion beef, lamb or pork carcass at stock shows must keep themselves small and enter the lists early in life. The demand these days is for smaller animals and younger, as is seen at the International Live Stock exposition.

Twenty-five years ago it was different. The bovine Beau Brummels of those days were powerfully big fellows weighing (live weight) around 1,700 or 1,800 pounds. A pig, in order to make a hit with the packers, had to be well up around 350 pounds and a lamb well over 100 pounds.

"Families then were larger, kitchenettes and Pullman kitchens almost unknown," it is pointed out by Miss Inez Willson, home economics director of the National Live Stock association. "The kitchen in those days was considered a most important part of the household and the space allotted to it in the average house was almost as great as the space covered by an entire small apartment now. More time was devoted by a housewife to cooking and the demand was for large cuts, or cuts from large animals.

But Times Have Changed.

"Then came the era of concentrated living. Families became smaller. They lived in more compact quarters and the housewife, instead of spending the full day over the cook stove, spent about eight hours of it over a typewriter or store counter. When she cooked her dinner she wanted something which would cook quickly. Small chops, small steaks and small roasts were asked for over and over again at butcher shops and the demand echoed back to the grazing fields where live stock growers began to breed smaller animals and to send them to slaughter younger. So now live stock is grown to fit the small pans of a kitchenette stove."

A good steer is slaughtered for the best meat now at the tender age of 15 or 18 months, whereas the steers of 30 years ago were butchered when they had passed their third or fourth year. The carcass of the steer wearing the coveted champion ribbon at the International Stock show now weighs 791 pounds dressed. The live weight was 1,210. Second place went to a steer weighing 960 pounds live weight. The champion lamb carcass weighed 97 pounds when alive.

Commercial beef, however, averages around 500 or 550 pounds.

Prices Another Factor.

High prices have been another important influence in reducing the size of live stock, according to breeders at the stock show. A housewife wants to buy her chops, for instance, so that each member of the family will have at least one," one westerner said. "If the chops are small she can easily manage it without breaking the budget, but the large chops of yesteryear would be a formidably large expense, since they weighed twice as much as present day chops."

"There has been a great deal of talk of the importance of color, of fat and of texture in determining the most tender cut of meat," Miss Willson said, "but as a matter of fact very little is accurately known about these items in judging meat.

"No Jamming"

One of the 3 Big Features of the Simple Autopoint

The New Autopoint Oversize $1

YOU probably think a pencil that claims not to jam—ever—is overstating its case. But if you ask Autopoint owners you will find that they have never had this happen to their pencils.

The reason is that Autopoint has an exclusive and simple mechanism with only one moving part. There is nothing to jam about it, hence an Autopoint really cannot jam.

But this is only one of Autopoint's exclusive features. In many ways it excels all others. And today it has become known as the pencil of Big Business.

Thousands of industrials and business firms use Autopoint with their selling message stamped on it, for advertising. In numberless businesses it is used instead of wasteful wooden pencils. Wherever you go, Autopoint is rapidly gaining in ascendancy.

* * * * *

Autopoint Oversize is a new model. A big, easy-to-grip pencil—use it and it will win you. The balance is ideal, the "feel" so different. Autopoint Oversize is $1. Use it a week, and if you don't find it a better pencil than you have ever owned, we'll refund your money.

All Autopoints, no matter which model you prefer, have three exclusive features:

Bakelite Barrel
The Bakelite barrel—an unchanging, lightweight material. Most beautiful material ever used for pencils.

Simplest Mechanism
Only 1 moving part in the Autopoint. This is simplest and smoothest working mechanism of any pencil. Nothing to go wrong.

No Jamming
When lead is exhausted, the feeding mechanism goes into "neutral"—it does not jam. Jamming is what breaks ordinary mechanical pencils.

Buy an Autopoint and know long, uninterrupted, trouble-free service. And a pencil you are proud to carry in your pocket.

ACQUIRE SCIENCE IN BUYING GOODS, WOMEN ARE TOLD

With women holding the balance of power in the purchase of goods, there is need for them to acquire a scientific basis for buying, Katherine Blunt, organizer of the Conference on Problems of Household Buying, declared at the concluding session of the meeting yesterday in Ida Noyes hall at the University of Chicago.

Miss Blunt asserted that women control the expenditure of $47,500,000,000 out of the $70,000,000,000 annually spent in the United States for consumers' goods. "University and other unbiased research," she said, "is needed to remedy the lack of knowledge of women purchasers."

Inasmuch as the knowledge of the daily household buyer is small in comparison with the total expert knowledge of the dependable department stores, George R. Schaeffer, advertising manager for Marshall Field & Co., advised the audience to rely upon the discrimination and integrity of the stores.

SANTA TO DROP 100 MILLION GOLD INTO STOCKINGS

New York, Dec. 3.—(AP)—Santa Claus will drop some $100,000,000 in gold coins into expectant Christmas stockings in the United States this year, federal reserve bank officials estimated following the demand for $20,000,000 of the gold coins in New York.

The custom of giving gold coins as Christmas presents places a heavy strain on the federal reserve machinery and on the banks that supply their clients with the coins. Not because the federal reserve isn't used to handling much larger supplies—$54,000,000 of gold was exported last month through the New York federal reserve organization—but the distribution of the coins means a tremendous number of small transactions with thousands of banks.

The approach of Christmas also means the appearance of $1,000,000 worth of $2.50 gold pieces. This coin is not minted except on special occasions.

Mount Carmel's football team, winner of the Catholic league race, is champion of Chicago's prep elevens. Yesterday at Soldiers' field the south side team defeated Schurz, city league title holder, 6 to 0 in the first interleague game ever staged.

Fifty thousand persons, a record crowd for prep football in this country, saw Mount Carmel drive through Schurz's stubborn resistance to score in the first minutes of the fourth quarter, after it had been turned back twice in the preceding period within a few yards of Schurz's goal line.

Freezing Weather Causes Fumbles.

The gridiron turf at Soldiers' field was in splendid condition and had been well protected from the snow flurries of the morning. The players fumbled frequently because of the freezing weather but in the main handled the ball with the precision of two superior college elevens.

The second half recorded the fireworks. It supplied all the thrills of a title game—thrills which kept the 50,000 on their feet, the east stands cheering as Mount Carmel paraded down the field, and the west stands—Schurz rooters—cheering the fight their team waged against defeat.

But Capt. Mel Brosseau and his mates were not to be denied victory. Twice held, they returned to the attack for a third time which ended when Brosseau dove four yards through the center of the Schurz line for the touchdown.

And the Schurz players, with victory seemingly assured for Mount Carmel, came back with the determination of youth to carry the ball 40 yards in a last desperate effort which finally was stopped when Borrelli intercepted Gawlinski's pass on Mount Carmel's 28 yard line.

First Half Evenly Fought.

The first half was evenly fought. Mount Carmel kicked off and maintained this territorial advantage throughout, with Stafford of Mount Carmel and Gawlinski of Schurz fighting a checkmating kicking duel. The second half was another story.

Schurz received the kickoff and, unable to gain, Gawlinski kicked out of bounds on Mount Carmel's 30 yard line. Borrelli plunged through center for a yard and then Capt. Brosseau started wide around Schurz' right end, cut back inside and ran to Schurz' 37 yard line. It was the longest run of the game until that time. Borrelli and Stafford gained seven yards and then Brosseau passed to Dougherty, who was tackled as he caught the ball 17 yards from Schurz's goal line.

Unable to gain through the line and penalized five yards for offside, Brosseau again passed, this time to Borrelli, who took the pass over Olsen's head and ran to the Schurz 3 yard line, where Gawlinski stopped him. Brosseau plunged to within six inches of a score, failed to gain on another effort at the Schurz center trio, and then tried Schurz' left end, but Sahlin tossed him for a four yard loss. Borrelli fumbled on the fourth down, but recovered on the 8 yard line and Schurz took the ball. Gawlinski, kicking from behind his goal line, sent the ball to his 37 yard line.

Schurz Line Holds.

Again Mount Carmel advanced. Stafford ran his left end for 14 yards. Brosseau passed to Stafford for 9 yards, and then plunged to Schurz' 12 yard line for first down. Stafford gained for a yard. Brosseau made 4 yards, Borrelli picked up a yard at right tackle, and with two yards to go for first down Brosseau negotiated just half the distance and Schurz took the ball.

Gawlinski's kick carried to his 27 yard line, but two successive 15 yard penalties for holding sent Mount Carmel back into its own territory for the first time in the half. After Stafford kicked to midfield, Olson and Sahlin made first down, but Stafford intercepted Gawlinski's pass to stop the drive.

Then came the break which gave Mount Carmel its third scoring opportunity, which brought victory. Schurz lacked a matter of inches for a first down on its 24 yard line, but Olson punted the fourth down play and

PUNCHING HOLES IN SCHURZ LINE

Bud Borrelli, full back of the Mount Carmel High school football team, rips through Schurz line in fourth quarter of yesterday's game at Soldiers' field. Borrelli's all around work was a prominent factor in Mount Carmel's 6 to 0 victory, which gave the Catholic league title winners the prep football championship of Chicago. The battle between the Catholic and public high school representatives drew 50,000 to the lake front stadium.

BIG TEN FACULTY AIMS NEW BLOW AT PAID ATHLETE

BY EDWARD BURNS.

After the football coaches, indignant umpires, wrestling, baseball, hockey and swimming nabobs and other notables of the Big Ten had finished doing their stuff at the Hotel Sherman yesterday, the faculty committee went into a snappy huddle at the University club and proceeded to bear down more and more on what sometimes is described as the journeyman or mercenary athlete.

PROF. O. F. LONG.

Two new rules were put into the book which are designed to cause much writhing and stammering on the part of young gents who seek emoluments for prowess of brawn. Both have been up for consideration numerous times but yesterday they were slapped right into the statutes.

One of the rules adds a question on the eligibility card which is signed by Big Ten athletes at the beginning of each university year.

Ask About Expenses.

This question inquires quite pointedly as to whether the athletic young person signing the card is receiving any help in any form from anybody in the whole word except his folks. It goes further: The youth must tell if any one has even promised him a job, pocket money, free textbooks, a job of attending nonexistent faculty cows or stoking phantom baseburners in steam heated fraternity houses.

"We did not feel like going so far as they have in some sections where athletes are required to schedule their gross incomes, but we feel the new question will serve the purpose as well," said Prof. O. F. Long of Northwestern, newly elected chairman of the Western Intercollegiate Conference of Faculty Representatives. "We believe some faculty groups feel a little ashamed of rules inquiring into independent income, but we felt the necessity of tightening up on the loan and remission of scholarship phase of faculty regulations."

Curb on One Semester Athletes.

Another curb on the student who places athletics above reading and writing was effected through the adoption of a rule which makes a player permanently ineligible who twice has withdrawn from enrollment because of delinquency. This rule, Prof. Long said, was installed to halt one-semester athletes who repeatedly withdraw when their sport season closes, make up their delinquency in summer school and report for athletic service in a subsequent term.

Prof. Long said copies of the new rule relative to aiding students would be widely circulated among high school officials, alumni, and fraternity groups and individuals, who sometimes "become overcharitable when the young man involved is a star athlete."

The faculty representatives again went on record as favoring the scouting system, but limited the number of scouts to one from an institution at any one game except when both competing teams scouted are future

Kiki Cuyler Signs His 1928 Contract with Cub Bosses

BY IRVING VAUGHAN.

Mr. Hazen [Kiki] Cuyler, recently rescued by the Cubs from the depths of the Pirates' dugout, made his first formal visit to the headquarters of his new employers yesterday, and after looking around decided he liked the layout.

WILLIAM VEECK.

In fact, the agile young man whose mysterious troubles with Manager Donie Bush and President Barney Dreyfuss of the Pittsburgh club caused an outburst of disapproval by the customers when he wasn't employed in the last world's series, was so impressed by the business-like atmosphere that he signed up for one year as soon as President William Veek had slipped a contract in front of him.

The amount called for in the document was not revealed, but the speed with which the star fly chaser and hitter accepted was considered an indication that his bimonthly checks will be heavier than those he received at Pittsburgh.

Explains Pirate Troubles.

After greeting President Veeck and Manager Joe McCarthy, who tarried here on his way to Dallas, Tex., Cuyler said that before talking business he wanted to straighten out some of the stories alleged to be the inside facts on the Pittsburgh difficulty that forced him to hide on the bench for the greater part of last season.

One of these yarns was that he had gone into President Dreyfuss' offices to discuss money matters and had concluded his visit by turning loose a ton or two of personal remarks that irritated his employer.

Cuyler declared yesterday that he hadn't done any such thing and that he couldn't understand why Dreyfuss should feel bitterly toward him. The squabbles with Bush, of course, were something else, but they happen on all properly spirited ball teams and usually are forgotten as soon as the heat of battle subsides.

Just which of the three Cub gardens Cuyler is going to patrol is something that will not be decided until later. McCarthy was asked to divulge his ideas on this important item but declared he might not make up his mind definitely until after he has seen just how things shape up in the training camp. The best guess is that the newcomer will pitch his tent in center.

There still is a chance that McCarthy will get the finished infielder he wants and to put this over he might be forced to part with one of his star outfielders. Thus it would be useless for him to plan now on the employment of talent he may not possess a few months hence.

Before McCarthy got away Cuyler reminded him of a bit of repartee exchanged by them last season. In the opener of a series at Pittsburgh the Cubs won and went into first place. The next morning Cuyler walked past the hotel and McCarthy spotted him.

"You'll look pretty good in those barnstorming games next October," yelled McCarthy.

"What day does the city series start," retorted Cuyler.

McCarthy Not Seeking Players.

McCarthy is not going to Dallas with any idea of buying up minor league talent. The club has a string on the services of one of the few minor league infield stars not already grabbed and there is a bare possibility that this fellow may be captured merely as protection in the event a big league infielder is not taken in a trade at the New York meeting next week.

On the same train with McCarthy were Ernest S. Barnard, president of the American league and Walter McNichols, secretary of the Cleveland club. The White Sox delegation will not depart until tomorrow.

BLACKHAWKS WIN FROM RANGERS BY 4 TO 2 SCORE

BY FRANK SCHREIBER.

Flashing the best attack displayed by any team on the Coliseum rink this season, the Blackhawks last night won their first game of the season on home ice by trimming the New York Rangers, 4 to 2, in a National league hockey game. The victory was especially sweet to the Hawks, for the Rangers were the leaders of the American division of the league and advance dope rated the eastern team as far superior to the Chicagoans.

In their three previous starts at the Coliseum this year the Hawks' attacking power has been weak, but last night it was the reverse. They passed with accuracy and speed, skated brilliantly, and their shots were perfect. Goalie Chabot of the Rangers saved his team a worse beating by making several brilliant stops at critical points.

Hawks Defense Weak.

Although their attacking power was 100 per cent better, the Hawks' defense suffered considerably. In justice to this, however, it must be said that the Chicago team seemed to concentrate on its attack and let the defense side of the game care for itself.

McKey Mackay, Capt. Dick Irvin, and Gordon Fraser of the veterans on the Hawks' squad played brilliantly, but their work was equaled by that of young Corbett Dennenay, a youngster who joined the squad this fall.

The Hawks got away in front in the first period when Capt. Irvin scored after 17:25. Irvin took the puck in alone, dodging the New York defense and beating Goalie Chabot of the Rangers with a short, hard drive.

Three Blackhawk goals and the first of the New York points came in the second period. Murdock tied the score after 4:50 of play in the second session. He tallied on a long low drive that Gardiner couldn't quite reach.

Hawks Open Up.

Then the Hawks' attack started again and the Chicagoans rang up three goals in short order and had the crowd of more than 5,000 screaming. Dennenay counted the first goal of the night alone, after bouncing a short off of Chabot's pads and skating in to push the rubber in the net with the Ranger goalie lying sprawled on the ice. Less than five minutes later Dennenay and Fraser teamed to count the third Chicago goal of the game. Wentworth took the puck out of a knot of New York players in Chicago territory and rushed up the ice. At the blue line Wentworth passed to Fraser who skated in and passed to Dennenay and Corbett came on with a rush to pass Chabot and score. Thirty seconds after the next face off Fraser scored the final Chicago point after getting a pass from Mackay.

New York launched a hard attack in the third period. Murdock was credited with the point, although it was Chuck Gardiner of the Hawks who slid into his own net with the puck.

Huff Talks of Grid Evils at Illini Banquet

A prediction that there would be an upheaval in college athletics when a report is made on an investigation now being conducted by the Carnegie Foundation was made by George Huff, athletic director of the University of Illinois, at the annual dinner tendered the football team last night at the Blackstone hotel.

BOB ZUPPKE.

But the warning sounded by Huff, and on which David Kinley, president of the university, touched, was not sufficiently solemn to discourage Bob Zuppke, the Illini coach, from engaging in an exchange of lefthanded compliments with Knute Rockne, Notre Dame coach, who was a special guest, or from carrying out his expressed wish to show that he is about the most undiplomatic speaker extant.

Kinley Details Evils.

In the opening talk President Kinley detailed the evils now supposed to be surrounding college athletics, particularly football. Most of the evils, such as overexcitement, commercialism, and the payment of high salaries to coaches, he thought were unduly emphasized. Drinking before, during, and after big football games he termed unfortunate and objectionable, and voiced a plea that the alumni of all schools take steps to abolish the practice.

In mentioning the Carnegie investigation Dr. Kinley said that the intention of the investigating body was to publish a list of the alleged evils of athletics without specifying the offenders.

"I would go further than this," he added. "I favor the naming of all dates, places, names, and concealing nothing. If there is anything wrong at Illinois we certainly would clean house after having our attention called to it."

Rockne Praises Zuppke.

Huff, after warning that trouble might follow the Carnegie report, said that there is lots of talk about proselyting, but that much of it is not based on fact. He revealed that the Big Ten athletic directors at a session here Friday had discussed the subject of purity in athletics and had agreed to exchange information and determine facts on rumors that might spring up.

Rockne was given first opportunity to open what Toastmaster James Hanley termed the "duel," and the Notre Dame grid teacher led off by telling of the first time he saw Zuppke.

3 MISSOURI VALLEY PLAYERS EARN PLACES ON HONOR ROLL

Smith, Notre Dame, Wins Post at Guard.

BY WALTER ECKERSALL.

[Copyright: 1927: By The Chicago Tribune.]

Although excellent football was played by some of the Western conference elevens, other universities and colleges in the middle west also were represented by powerful elevens composed of sterling players.

Notre Dame, although it lost to the Army, should receive consideration for the western championship. The Ramblers were held to a tie by Minnesota, which also went through the season undefeated. In its closing struggle of the year Notre Dame won from Southern California, 7 to 6, in an intensely interesting contest. The defeat by the Army has no bearing on Notre Dame's standing in the middle west.

Missouri won the championship to the Missouri Valley conference by winning all its conference games with the exception of the annual Kansas battle. Early in the season the Missouri Tigers won from Nebraska, 7 to 6, but went into the south, where they were beaten by Southern Methodist, 32 to 7. On the Saturday following Missouri invaded the Western conference and won from Northwestern, 34 to 19. Missouri also defeated West Virginia, 13 to 0. The Mountaineers later held the strong Washington and Jefferson eleven to a tie.

Nebraska Team Powerful.

At the end of the season Nebraska was strong in all departments of play. The Cornhuskers won from New York university, 27 to 0, but succumbed to the powerful Pittsburgh eleven, 21 to 13. Nebraska showed steady improvement after its defeat by Missouri and decisively defeated Kansas, the team which afterward won from the Tigers. In addition to their victory over New York, the Cornhuskers won from Syracuse, 21 to 0.

Oklahoma and the Kansas Aggies were represented by some brilliant players and the same was true of Ames, which held Illinois to a tie. Marquette university of Milwaukee had a splendid half back in Gebert. A number of other colleges in the section also had players of outstanding ability.

In the selection of honorary all-western elevens such players must be considered, although their performances do not attract the attention of those in the larger universities and colleges. This is especially true of the Missouri Valley conference, which is producing excellent players every year.

Line Most Important.

As stated in the article dealing with the Western conference honorary elevens, the selections must be fortified with kickers, passers, receivers, runners, line plungers and, above all, an aggressive line. Indeed, the forward wall should receive first consideration, as almost any back can gain ground behind a line which will give him protection on every play.

The general play of the linemen is becoming more and more important. These players, who are in the thick of the struggle from whistle to whistle, seldom receive due credit. They form the backbone of any football team but seldom receive any praise.

Seven of the players who were placed on the all-conference first eleven retain their positions on the first all-western team. Their general play was commented on last Sunday and they are rightfully entitled to the added honor.

Notre Dame Captain at Guard.

Capt. Smith of Notre Dame has been placed at left guard because of his consistent play all season. There is little about line play which this warrior does not know. Although small, his aggressiveness combined with his excellent knowledge of football made him an ideal forward.

He was one of the few guards seen this season who were consistently down the field under punts and kickoffs. He made as many tackles in most games as other members of his team. He was always in the vicinity of the ball and sensed attacks quickly. On several occasions he directed his team's defensive formations and in the majority of cases he foresaw the opponents' plays. He was a hard charger and blocker, who always drove through to take off the secondary when his team was in possession of the ball. He was a sportsman on the field and the type of player who seldom is injured.

Lucas of Missouri is given the right tackle position. This player was one of the leading forwards in the Valley. He always rushed the forward passers and hurried the kickers. He was hard to take out of plays and gave opposing ends plenty of trouble to keep him out of the ball carriers' paths. On offense he generally managed to make a hole for his backs.

Presnell at Half Back.

Presnell of Nebraska, one of the country's leading backs, is awarded the right half back position. He is one of the driving type who run so hard they gain ground when opposition is met. He played brilliantly against the strong Pittsburgh eleven and was Nebraska's big gun in all of the Cornhuskers' games.

Unlike many half backs who have made names by carrying the ball, Presnell was a hard, sure blocker. He took off tacklers in deadly fashion and when he had one player out of a play he carried on to upset another. He had remarkable endurance and played just as aggressively at the finish of the game as he did at the start.

Flack of Kansas is selected for right end. This player scales 180 pounds and is six feet tall. He would make an ideal running mate for Oosterbaan in all angles of play. Charley Bachman, coach of the Kansas Aggies, rates Fleck among the greatest ends he ever has seen. Fleck covered punts faultlessly and was an excellent receiver of forward passes. He always turned plays to the inside and few ball carriers ever have circled his wing.

Notre Dame Backs Strong.

Miller of Notre Dame was a capable tackle, as was Dan Tehan of St. Xavier. Brazil of Detroit was a good half back, as were Howell of Nebraska, Mehrle of Missouri, Cooper of Kansas, Barnes of Drake and Holsinger of Kansas Aggies.

Flanagan of Notre Dame, who came into his own in the Southern California struggle, did not show as well as last season. Christy tried hard to get away on long runs, and played a fine offensive and defensive game against the Trojans. Niemiec and Dahman, the other Notre Dame backs, played consistently all season and were of just as much value to the team as Flanagan.

There undoubtedly are many players who were members of smaller college teams who could be rated with the best in the middle west had they been playing on the larger university elevens. Such a condition always has existed in football, but such warriors seldom get a chance to show their true ability because they do not receive the necessary support from other members of their teams.

The smaller colleges, however, are to be commended for the improvement they are showing. Teams of these institutions are playing a much sounder game, due to the fact the coaches are drilling them more in the rudiments of the game than in advanced tactics.

TAD JONES SAYS HIS RESIGNATION STILL STANDS

Montclair, N. J., Dec. 3.—(AP)—Tad Jones would be glad to coach the Yale football team with or without pay, but as far as his resignation is concerned, it still stands, for the present, at least, he declared here tonight at the annual "win, lose or draw" rally for the Yale football team in Nick Roberts' old barn given by the Montclair Yale alumni.

Members of the team and officials of the Montclair Yale club urged Coach Jones to reconsider his resignation. In fiery speeches they demanded the continuance of the Jones system of coaching.

Capt. Bill Webster and members of the team in one accord called for the retention of the head coach.

DRURY RACES TO 3 TOUCHDOWNS AS TROJANS TRIUMPH

Ends Grid Career Amid Cheers of 74,000.

Hibbs Elected

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Jesse Hibbs, 190 pound, 5 foot 11 tackle on the University of Southern California football team, was elected captain for 1928, immediately after the Trojans' closing game of the 1927 season with Washington today. Hibbs prepared for college at Lake Forest, Ill. His home is Glendale, Cal.

Los Angeles, Cal., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—The football comet that was Morely Drury, blazed to the end of a great season today in leading his Southern California team to a tie for the Pacific Coast conference championship with a 33 to 13 victory over University of Washington.

Seventy-four thousand gave Drury a great ovation—the most enthusiastic ever accorded a player in a far western field—when Drury left the game in the third quarter.

Coaches Howard Jones, Aubrey Devine, Cliff Herd, Bill Hunter and the faculty and student managers on the University of Southern California bench, hugged and threw their arms around Drury as he came off the gridiron. Play stopped and members of the Washington team, the Trojans and the officials, all turned toward Drury and cheered.

Makes 76 Yard Run.

Drury scored three Trojan touchdowns. He counted in the first quarter on a 76 yard run, in which he raced down the side line for 26 yards beyond his own right end, then cut back across the field and outran one tackler while Bert Heiser took two other husky tacklers off their feet and Charlie Boren put a third out of the play.

Capt. Pat Wilson of Washington, partly blocked Drury's converting place kick. Drury scored again in the first quarter when he swept around right end for a 25 yard run to a touchdown.

Don Moses, University of Southern California full back, who replaced Edelson, gave a great exhibition of sustained bucking in the second quarter, after Elliott had replaced Drury. On six bucks he and Elliott gained 46 yards. Moses had to pound the line four times from the four yard line to score and Elliott scored the extra point on a place kick.

Drury Gets Another.

Drury was back in the lineup in the third quarter and scored a third touchdown, after he and Moses had sliced off tackle, bumped the center and circled the ends from the 47 yard line. Drury's scoring play was a sweep around right end to gain the last two feet after Moses had twice been stopped. Drury made the point after touchdown.

Drury, in his last game, gained 189 yards from scrimmage in twenty-one attempts. He was in the game, all told, a little less than two quarters. U. S. C. made ten first downs to Washington's nine, and gained 438 yards to Washington's 172. In only one department, forward passing, did Washington feature, completing six of thirteen attempts for 108 yards, while the Trojans made four in eleven tries for 49 yards.

AMONG THE FOLKS IN HISTORY

Georgia Tech Beats Georgia, 12 to 0, for Southern Title

(Pictures on page 3.)

BY WALTER ECKERSALL.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Atlanta, Ga., Dec. 3.—Superior line play combined with a highly effective offensive at critical times gave Georgia Tech a victory over Georgia this afternoon on Grant field, 12 to 0. The victory carried with it the championship of the southern conference, as Tech has not been defeated by a member of the association. The local eleven was tied by Vanderbilt, which also was tied by Tennessee and Alabama.

It was a great victory for Tech, which had not been expected to win over the eleven which defeated Yale earlier in the season, 14 to 10. The Golden Tornado, however, rose to the occasion and played one of its best games of the year. The Tech players tackled and blocked well, took advantage of everything and followed the ball closely.

This great game, the football classic of the south, attracted a crowd of 38,000, the largest throng which ever saw a football game in the southland.

Field Deep in Mud.

Weather conditions were unfavorable. The heavy rain of the last twenty-four hours left the field in poor condition. When the struggle opened, pools of water spotted the gridiron while the mud made open play next to impossible. Despite these handicaps, the game was hard fought and well played.

Mizell of Georgia Tech had a decided advantage in the punting over Estes. The latter invariably punted the wet, heavy oval out of bounds, while Mizell generally got his kicks away in good style for fair distance. Tech gained many yards on the exchanges, and on some occasions Georgia was placed in bad holes because of Estes' poor kicks.

It was the twenty-third meeting of these two great teams of the southland. Previous to today's battle, each had won ten games and two had resulted in ties. Today's victory gave Tech the edge and permanent possession of a cup which was donated to the team which won two out of the last three struggles.

Tech's victory must be attributed to the great play of its five center men. These players repeatedly broke through and smeared Georgia's plays before the runner reached the scrimmage line. They continually rushed the kickers and passers and on one occasion nailed Estes for a 15 yard loss when he attempted to forward pass on fourth down.

Georgia Starts with Rush.

Georgia was a strong favorite, the wagering being as high as 3 to 1. The team which won over Yale started out as a sure winner and early in the second quarter carried the oval to Tech's 7 yard line. Tech, however, strengthened in the shadows of its goal posts and made its opponent surrender the ball on downs.

Mizzel then punted from behind his own goal and the ball rolled out of bounds on his 42 yard line. After two exchanges of punts, Tech took the ball on Georgia's 40 yard line. Randolph went over his right guard for four yards and Thomason hit the same place for another yard. Tech's backfield was in motion and a five yard penalty was inflicted. On the next play Tech crossed Georgia. Mizzell dropped back to the full back's position and received the ball from the center. He faked a line plunge and then threw a long forward pass to Durant, who ran 15 yards for a touchdown. It was a clever play made possible by some excellent blocking, particularly by Waddey, the Tech right end. Thomason failed to make the extra point by a place kick and the score was 6 to 0 in favor of Georgia Tech.

Tech Intercepts Pass.

During the intermission between halves both teams made a complete change of uniforms and a new ball was put in play. Shortly after the second half opened Tech made a bid for a score, but fell short of making their distance on fourth down and the ball reverted to Georgia on its 26 yard line. The Georgia offense got to work and a twelve yard gain by Dudley and a fifteen yard penalty for roughness placed the ball on Tech's 41 yard line.

Hooks, who had replaced McCrary at full back for Georgia, made two yards off his right tackle, and Estes made three through his right tackle. With five yards to gain on a third down, Estes turned loose a forward pass. The ball was caught by Thomason, the fleet Tech half back, who raced 58 yards before he was brought down on the Georgia 21 yard line. Randolph, the Tech full back, went over his left guard for two yards, and Mizell carried the ball to Georgia's 16 yard line by driving off his right tackle. Randolph slid off his right tackle to the Georgia 11 yard line. The full back added two more at the same spot.

With the Georgia secondary defense pulled up and the players expecting a line attack, Thomas was sent on an end sweep around his left flank. He managed to outrun the Georgia secondary to get over the goal line at one corner of the field. Thomason again missed the goal from placement and the score was 12 to 0 in favor of Georgia Tech.

MOUNT CARMEL IS 6-0 VICTOR OVER SCHURZ ELEVEN

Cherne of Mount Carmel recovered the ball.

From here Mount Carmel swept to victory. The Brosseau to Dougherty air play was brought forth and the big end grabbed the pass and ran to Schurz' 3 yard line. Stafford lost a yard at left end, but Brosseau shot 4 yards through center for the touchdown with no defensive player able to touch him. Powell tried a drop kick for the extra point, but it was wide.

Schurz came back fighting. Uhlir ran the Mount Carmel kickoff back to his 37 yard line and two passes from Gawlinski to Olson, the first of which was ruled completed because of interference, brought the ball to Mount Carmel's 28 yard line. Here Borrelli stepped in front of a pass, made a one handed catch and sped 50 yards down the sideline before Gawlinski caught him.

In the last two minutes Mount Carmel again threatened, Brosseau's pass to Dougherty, the fourth of the combination, stopping five yards from the goal line, but a second down pass was incomplete in the end zone.

Receipts Total $35,000.

Mount Carmel's victory was clean cut. Schurz made first down five times, once on a pass, once by a penalty, and three times from scrimmage. In comparison, Mount Carmel negotiated ten first downs, four of which were from passes, the others from scrimmage.

Capt. Mel Brosseau was the outstanding player, while Mount Carmel's defense kept Ted Gawlinski well in check, but his kicking was an essential factor in the north sider's defensive battle.

The receipts of the game, which are approximatey $35,000, will be used in Christmas charity enterprises.

contestants against the institution doing the scouting. In that event one man may be sent to scout each team.

Long Elected Chairman.

The representatives affirmed a previous ruling permitting the playing of football games on eight days in the fall. There is no restriction on the number of games played in a day or the day of the week on which games are played. This, the professors held, was to encourage active participation by a greater number of students through doubleheaders and inter-institution class contests.

In addition to electing Prof. Long chairman, the faculty representatives chose Prof. Louis Pelzer as secretary and named Prof. Long, G. A. Goodenough, Illinois, and T. E. French, Ohio, as the eligibility committee. The committee of officials was made rotative for the first time, provision being made that the past chairman, the acting chairman, and Maj. John L. Griffith comprise the body. Prof. T. F. Moran is the retiring chairman of the representatives and will serve with Prof. Long and Maj. Griffith.

SEA ROCKET WINS TURF FEATURE AT N. ORLEANS TRACK

Takes Race of Near Spills by Two Lengths.

New Orleans, La., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Sea Rocket, with O. Bourassa in the saddle, carried C. A. Coyle's New Orleans colors to another stake victory at Jefferson Park this afternoon when he won the Montleon handicap at a mile and a sixteenth.

The second choice in the betting at $8.60 in the two dollar mutuels, Sea Rocket had to be much the best to win. In a jam that came just after the start the Coyle representative met with interference and almost was knocked down.

Bourassa soon pulled him together and for the next three-quarters of a mile he ran over horses and romped into the lead at the head of the stretch. He was two lengths in front of Golden Mac as the race ended, with Fly Hawk third. Sea Rocket's time was 1:52 1-5. The track was still deep in mud, but well backed first and second choices accounted for most of the races.

Durnell Spending Spree Brings 23 Horses for $283,360

Spending money like the proverbial inebriated sailor, C. E. [Boots] Durnell, who trains the race horses of W. T. Waggoner, Texas man of many millions, has broken all records for American bloodstock purchases this year.

Since the middle of August, a period of a little more than three months, Durnell has purchased for the account of Mr. Waggoner 23 head of horses. He paid $283,360 for them. If he doesn't send a champion to the post in some of the divisions next season it will be because money cannot buy them.

Durnell's spending orgy started at the Saratoga yearling sales. It was the first time a western man with western money created much of a stir at these sales. But on the first night Durnell appeared in the sales ring when youngsters from the Xalapa farm were under the hammer he caused a sensation by a bid of $40,000 for a yearling that had been sold the day before for $20,000.

Durnell didn't get this colt even for a $40,000 bid. However, he did not leave empty handed. Before the night was over he had exchanged $28,500 for three of the Xalapa farm output.

Then came the auction of the young thoroughbreds from Col. Phil T. Chinn's farm in Kentucky. All eyes were upon Durnell. He entered into the bidding for the Hurry On-Fatima colt which later in the night sold for $70,000, a record price. Durnell went to $69,000 on this star and forced W. R. Coe to say "seventy thousands" before he got him.

As the Chinn sale went along Durnell bought eleven yearlings for $148,300. He bought two that cost him $30,000 each and paid $21,000 for another. In two nights he had passed out $176,800 of Mr. Waggoner's gold for 14 yearlings. This was another record. James Cox Brady a few years ago spent $158,000 for yearlings in two nights at the Saratoga sales.

Durnell did not stop there. When mediocre lots of yearlings were offered at auction at the Union stockyards in Chicago he was the liveliest bidder. And at Phil T. Chinn's disposal sale in Kentucky a couple of weeks ago, Mr. Durnell again was the life of the party. He paid top price of $27,500 for Port Hole, a mare by Man o' War out of Shady. He purchased ten other mares and the bill was $95,060.

Age No Handicap to 12 Year Old Tippity Wichet

BY FRENCH LANE.

Tippity Wichet, 12 year old in Broomstick's famous thoroughbred horse family, is still the selling plater king of the American turf.

Rounding out his eleventh year of active campaigning he has started 42 times since last Jan. 1. He won 12 races, was 11 times second and got third money in four other starts. He was only 15 times out of the money.

A race horse at 12 can be likened to a baseball player, runner or other human athlete at about fifty-five. How many home runs can Babe Ruth hit even in the lowliest bush league at 55? Or, how fast will Charley Paddock run 100 yards?

Old Tippity Wichet goes on and on. He wins at any distance from six furlongs to a mile and a half. He takes on selling platers of all shapes and sizes and shows them his heels. A couple of times every season he changes hands via the claiming route. More than 30 different trainers have handled him at one time or another. He is a small horse and there isn't anything masculine about him.

Surely old Broomstick has a warm spot in his heart for this little selling plater when he takes stock of the brilliant flock he has sent to the races. It includes such famous racers as Cudgel, Leochares, Regret, Buckhorn, Whiskbroom II., Meridian, Flagstaff, Wildair, Cherry Tree, and many others.

Tippity Wichet, while he made 231 trips to the barrier doing it, has accounted for more purse and stake money than his sire. Tippity Wichet's total earnings over the 11 year period is $81,626. Broomstick won 14 races and $75,225.

The only way to appreciate Tippity Wichet's consistency is to study his record. He has been the winner of one out of almost every four races in which he started. In 231 starts he has been out of the money only about 30 per cent of the time. He has run on almost every track in America and he has raced under all conditions.

Tippity Wichet knows the difference between the thrill of a stake victory and a triumph from platers. In his younger days he beat the best that lined up with him.

His complete record follows:

	Starts.	1st.	2d.	3d.	Amt. won.
1917	20	14	5	0	$17,403
1918	3	1	0	2	1,091
1919	17	5	3	3	8,041
1920	18	8	3	2	9,850
1921	26	10	7	6	13,842
1922	23	3	2	9	6,364
1923	27	7	4	6	8,600
1924	10	2	0	0	1,950
1925	43	7	9	4	6,293
1926	2	0	0	1	50
1927	42	12	11	4	8,143
Totals	231	69	44	36	$81,626

There is no more sturdy racing stock than the Broomsticks. His sire was Ben Brush, a winner of both the Kentucky and Latonia Derbies. On his dam's side Tippity Wichet comes from Lady Frivolles, and she was by the famous St. Simon. Thus Tippity Wichet's lines on this side of the house run back through Galopin and Vedette, among the most prized in England.

His size and the fact that it was found necessary to unsex him early in his career relegated him to the plater ranks after he had won numerous stakes for Harry Payne Whitney.

Just the opposite to Tippity Wichet is Bostonian. This is the youngest son of Broomstick to gain fame. He goes into the stud still a 3 year old. Bostonian resembles his grandsire, Ben Brush, more than he does Broomstick. He is a most attractive colt and thoroughly masculine. The Bonnie Scotland line from which Bostonian comes is going strong through Broomstick's older sons. Among these fine young sires are Whisk Broom II., sire of the last Derby winner, Whiskery; Cudgel, Wildair, and Upset. All have produced sons and daughters far better than the average.

Bostonian's breeding is almost identical with Wildair. The latter's most notable colt was Canter, which is a Pimlico futurity winner.

Bostonian was unquestionably one of the best 3 year olds of the year. But when his sons and daughters get to the races, if there are any platers among them they probably will have to beat their Uncle Tippety Wichet to get the money.

Many horsemen believe Tippety Witchet will be winning when he is 16 and 17 years old.

The most expensive piece of young thoroughbred horseflesh in the world has been named.

W. R. Coe, who paid the record price of $70,000 at public auction last August for the yearling son of Hurry On—Fatima, selected the name.

He has called the young blueblood Hustle On.

Common Gold, Outsider, Wins Tia Juana Feature

TIA JUANA, Mex., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Common Gold, a little horse from the western bush tracks, surprised the big crowd here this afternoon when he ran away with the mile and seventy yards of the feature race. He was quoted at $18.40 for $2 in the mutuel betting and never left the result in doubt after Jockey Francis shook him up and applied the whip half way down the stretch. The favorite, Hands Up, saved second money by a narrow margin from Golden Laura.

Some good sprinters clashed in the second best race of the afternoon and the odds on choice, Better Luck, got up in the last strides to down Glenister II. with Jack Fairman third. The race was over the clubhouse course, a little more than seven furlongs.

THE INQUIRING REPORTER

Every Day He Asks Five Persons, Picked at Random, a Question

The Tribune will pay $5 for each question accepted for the Inquiring Reporter to ask. Send name and address with your question, to "The Inquiring Reporter," Chicago Tribune. For today's question, R. B. Walker, 7721 N. Paulina street, Chicago, was awarded $5.

The Question.

Do you approve of the trade which sent Adams and Scott of the Cubs to Pittsburgh for Cuyler?

The Answers.

Gustave Przygodda, 2146 Wellington avenue, deputy bailiff—The deal is fine for the Cubs and for Cuyler, but I regret seeing Adams leave. He was the backbone of the team and the most versatile player the Cubs ever had. He always gave his best and never complained, but never got full credit. But when he was out of the game the team slumped.

Nick Bosco, 113 Broadway, Melrose Park, Ill., elevator man—The trade may pan out all right, but I'm afraid it will weaken the Cubs. They already had five good hitters, but needed more strength in the infield. Of course, Scott is not a star and Adams has reached his zenith, while Cuyler still is improving. I'd like to see the Cubs get Pie Traynor and Freddie Lindstrom in a trade.

Barratt O'Hara, 30 W. Washington street, attorney—I am willing to O. K. any move that Bill Veeck makes to strengthen the Cubs. I consider him a smart judge of baseball players, so I feel sure the addition of Cuyler will materially strengthen the team despite the fact that Adams goes to Pittsburgh.

E. Sydney Feinstein, 3714 Polk street, employé in sheriff's office—I consider the trade a smart one from the Cubs' standpoint. It will add an outstanding star to the team and may bring a pennant to Chicago next fall. The Cubs needed another steady hitter and got him in Cuyler.

Leroy Schmidt, 1130 Foster avenue, chauffeur—It was a good trade, as it gave the Cubs additional batting strength. In the pinches, the Cub batters often fell flat, but Cuyler should provide the needed punch. He's a great all-around player. We hate to see any of the old men go, but some of them must be sacrificed in order to bring new blood into the team.

ILLINI QUINTET SPEEDS DRILL FOR FIRST GAME

Urbana, Ill., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—University of Illinois athletes [illegible] now turn to basketball. The [illegible] game of the season is scheduled for Dec. 10, when Knox comes to the floor. This contest will be followed by a match with Bradley here Dec. 12, after which the Illini will push up to their transcontinental journey to Seattle to play the University of Washington during the Christmas holidays.

Victory in football has made other Illini athletic teams, and the basketball players would like nothing better than to continue the triumphant march of the Illini which began last June, when the track team won the conference championship and the baseball squad shared the title with Iowa. Therefore Illinois at present has two undisputed major sport championships and is tied for another.

Intensive practice began this week with a large squad competing. Mills and Kes Deimling of the football team have joined the cagers and Bill Short is still a casualty from the gridiron and more than likely will be unable to play any basketball this season.

Coach Craig Ruby's hardest task these days is to convince eager stars that he cannot stop off and play a game with the home town team on the west. However, the games at Illini will be a magnet for old time stars from all over the coast.

DETROIT BEATS CLEVELAND FOR U. S. BRIDGE TITLE

Ohioans Unable to Wipe Out Afternoon Lead.

BULLETIN.

The Detroit Athletic club bridge team last night won the all-American honors in the first auction bridge tournament ever held here, defeating Cleveland. The overwhelming majority of the Detroit four, acquired in play in the afternoon, made it mathematically impossible for Cleveland to retrieve the title. The final point score, however, will not be available until late Sunday. The women's high contestative honors, which designates the individual woman bridge champion of the country, went to Mrs. Elliot Evans, Chicago.

J. F. Atkins and A. E. Mallory, both of Chicago, tied for the men's high honors with a percentage score of .583 out of a possible 1,000. Honors for the winning pair went to New York, with W. C. Whitehead and J. H. Smith scoring 68 out of a possible 119 points.

BY HARLAND ROHM.

About the time some sleepy eyed but ambitious Plymouth Rock cockerel in the Coliseum poultry show decides to wake up all the other birds this morning a four man auction bridge team will be crowned champion of the United States. It will end the first annual tournament of the American Auction Bridge league, in session the last three days at the Hotel Sherman.

At 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon the two finalist teams of four men each sat down in two separate rooms for a 32 deal battle. Each deal was a match, two of each team playing two of the other team, but playing duplicate hands. No one but the official scorer was permitted in the rooms and through the afternoon and through the night the eight studied their cards and laid them down in silence. Only the soft voiced bids broke the silence.

Title Reward for Victory.

While there may have been some small stake on the side, the essential play wasn't for high stakes, but for a championship. For two or three of them, who make their livings playing bridge, the championship meant cash in lecturing and teaching engagements, for the others it meant only the honor of playing thirteen cards a little better than anybody else.

The two teams were chosen by two days of elimination play, which also decided the men's pairs championship. The Detroit Athletic club team finished first in the preliminaries, winning 45 out of 72 matches. It was made up of R. R. Richards, president of the league, and T. A. Lightner of Detroit, Baron von Zedwitz and Ely Culbertson of New York. Their opponents in the final were the Cleveland Athletic club team, on which are E. C. Wolfe, H. R. Todd, Omar Mueller, and M. W. Kartriner. They won 43½ matches out of 72.

From all indications the Detroit team is likely to be the victor, for with half of the matches played it had a lead of 20½ matches to 5½ for the Cleveland team. The Detroit team won 18 matches, lost three and tied five of the first twenty-six, which combined with the fact that they scored much higher in the preliminaries points to them as probable winners.

Silver Cup to Victors.

The winners will take home with them the four feet tall silver cup emblematic of the championship and as individual souvenirs four smaller cups of solid gold. The runners up also will hold a trophy and each will get small silver cups as their reward.

Scoring of pairs for that championship, and scoring of these same pairs as teams in the preliminaries were different, which led to some odd results. The Detroit team was second and fourth as pairs while the Cleveland team was fifth and fourteenth. The team which finished third placed only twelfth and seventeenth as pairs, while the fourth place team was eighth and eleventh as pairs.

This was due to the fact that pairs were scored on match points while teams were scored on the winning of matches, so winning a match by 275 points counted just as much as winning it by two points, insofar as team scoring was concerned. Another freak of the play was that of another Cleveland team. Henry P. Jaeger and Carl Apthorp won the pairs championship, but their partners, Carl T. Robertson and Maurice Maschke, rated even stronger as bridge players, finished thirty-sixth, which put the team out of the running.

Following is a summary of the other three championships decided in the tournament:

MEN'S PAIRS—Won by Henry P. Jaeger and Carl Apthorp of Cleveland with 792½ match points out of a possible 1,368; Ely Culbertson and Baron von Zedwitz, New York, second, 779 points; Winfield Liggett Jr., and J. H. Smith, New York, third, 776 points; R. R. Richards and T. A. Lightner, Detroit, fourth, 757½ points.

WOMEN'S PAIRS—Mrs. Sidney Lovell and Mrs. Elliott Evans, Chicago, 215¼ match points out of possible 342; Mrs. Ely Culbertson and Mrs. A. O. Lynch, New York, second, 199½ points; Mrs. M. K. Alexander and Mrs. Jane Fletcher, Chicago, third, 187½ points.

WOMEN'S TEAMS of FOUR—Won by Mrs. A. O. Lynch, New York, Mrs. Ely Culbertson, New York, Mrs. Owen D. Gilman, Chicago and Mrs. Louis G. Buss, Chicago.

Chicagoans Score Heavily.

In the open divisions most of the silver cups and gold buttons continued to go to Chicagoans, which was natural, as more Chicagoans were entered. High north and south in the open games were:

Mrs. C. Kidder, Indianapolis, and W. B. Morton, 2970 Sheridan road; C. S. Drake, 860 North Michigan avenue, and J. E. Wahl, 5446 Lake View avenue; Dr. E. J. Dafter and Mrs. Elliot Evans of Chicago; L. D. Bruce and G. C. Guston, Illinois Athletic club; Larry Welch and Walter Pray of Indianapolis.

The east and west winners were:

L. G. Parker and J. C. Henry of Cleveland, Mrs. George Bryant, Milwaukee, and Mrs. W. D. Thompson, Racine, Wis.; W. A. Jr. and Carl T. Robertson of Cleveland; Fred C. Berk, 3432 West 64th street, and R. E. Markeiser, 6739 Jeffery avenue; Mrs. R. W. Pruit, 400 North Oak Park avenue, and J. L. Haas, 222 West Adams street.

In the mixed pairs Mrs. Jessie J. Purple, 1374 Greenleaf avenue, and J. E. Carlin, 4167 Cullom avenue, won the cups and pins for high north and south, and Miss Margaret Beech, Pittsburgh, and Harry J. Wynne, 5317 North Rednie avenue, won the east and west prizes.

TRACK MATERIAL AT MIDWAY IS BEST IN YEARS

The best balanced indoor track team seen at Bartlett Gymnasium in years has opened training at the Midway for the 1928 season. The Maroons start the season with only one major loss from last year's young squad, the absent member of note being Anton Berg, star high jumper and captain of last year's outfit. The present team has a personnel made up of sophomores and juniors.

Coach A. A. Stagg Jr. has strong middle distance men around whom he will weld his squad. The leading performer is Capt. Dick Williams, who set the lowest time in the mile indoors last year with a record of 4:25.1 as a sophomore. He is as fast in the half mile as the mile. Close behind him is Wakefield Burke, who doubles in the half and quarter mile event, and the squad has two more fast middle distance men in Rudolph Coles and Bill Schulze. The half mile is Coles' specialty, while Schulze promises to be Chicago's leading entry in the 440 yard dash.

In the sprints, Stagg has Joe Cody as his best man, though Cody's specialty is the high jump. Courtney, Gleason, and Braud also will step through the fifty yard dash with Cody. Laurel Smith and Bob Spence, both football men, are the hurdlers who will bear the burden in this department. Smith is the only senior on the squad.

In the WAKE of the NEWS

"PLAYER OF GREATEST VALUE."

OFFICIAL votes are now being received to determine the award of THE TRIBUNE'S fourth annual trophy—a sterling silver football, actual size—to the Big Ten player of greatest value to his team during 1927. Not enough ballots have shown up yet to forecast the result, but the leaders are Rouse of Chicago, Joesting of Minnesota, Gilbert and Oosterbaan of Michigan, and Reitsch of Illinois.

In the meantime, The Wake presents herewith several of the arguments for favorite candidates:

Dear Sir: "Cotton" Wilcox of Purdue won honorable mention in last year's TRIBUNE award. I nominate him again. No player is more deserving of this treasured trophy than "Cotton." Although crippled the greater part of the season, his strength was felt by every opponent against which he played.

In the Chicago-Purdue game, he hobbled on to the field and the inspiration given his teammates was noticeable to every spectator. Against Northwestern he was back in the game and in good condition. Northwestern was slated to win. The score that Purdue piled up against the Wildcats was brought about by the reappearance of the backbone of the Purdue team.

Critics have all agreed that Purdue would have shared the Conference honors had it not lost for part of the season its leader and captain. Proclaimed by Rockne one of the best backs in the country and Purdue's greatest player since Oliphant, he is the proper man for THE TRIBUNE trophy. T. A. G.

Illinois Plea for Lewis.

Tiny Lewis of Northwestern was the best back I saw on the field this year. He deserves the trophy. Illini '15.

Here's One for Oosterbaan.

Bennie Oosterbaan, versatile left end and all-American for two years, is the outstanding Conference player measured by team value. He is a pass receiver de luxe, throws passes accurately, even goes behind the line for line plunging, performs in every game during its entire length, analyses plays quickly, signals and announces opposition plays to his teammates. His defensive work is so great few plays are tried 'round his end. He is the headiest player in the Conference and an ideal captain. Felix F.

Now Comes a Perfect Lady.

Dear Harve: Why not get some unbiased sport writers on your staff? Outside of Eckersall, who is the only one who can give a clear, concise account of a game, you have none who is fair-minded and broad in their writeups.

As every one knows, Stagg always has the most mediocre material, yet he generally manages to mold a team that is feared by every other. The schedule and injuries were too much for Chicago this season and it deserves a world of credit for the fight it put up.

There should be no question about all-Conference center or the player of greatest value. Ken Rouse stands head and shoulders above all others. His playing has been remarkable and his loss to the team keenly felt in two games he was out. I suppose it would break your heart, though, if you had to give that trophy to a Chicago man.

A Feminine Maroon.

Dear Wake: Well, Harve, I see where out in Los Angeles Strangler Lewis, champion of the world, has challenged Joe Stecher, world champion, to wrestle for the world championship. Just what will that make the winner? Papa Leo.

In Memoriam [B. P. O. E.].

Another year goes by . . .
We gather here
In all humility
To mourn the dear
Departed ones who took
The long, long trail . . .
And though today they sit
Beyond the pale
Of our poor finite minds,
We do not cease
To vouchsafe memory . . .
God give them peace!

BIG SIX SECEDES FROM MISSOURI VALLEY LEAGUE

St. Louis, Mo., Dec. 3.—(AP)—Two groups of the old ten school Missouri Valley conference amicably went their respective ways here this afternoon when the last session of the organization as it now stands disbanded after two hard days of schedule making and discussion.

As the result of the unanimous decision of the faculty members of the ten Missouri Valley conference schools to make no request for a dissolution, the so called "Bix Six" the seceding schools of the organization, gave up their right to the name, Missouri Valley conference.

The action of the ten faculty members removed the last stumbling block in the way of filling the gap in the ranks of the old conference, and today definite steps were taken by the four schools, Drake, Grinnell, Oklahoma Aggies and Washington university to invite new members into their group.

An impromptu meeting was called with Marquette, Creighton, and Butler colleges represented, at which time it was decided that a seven school conference would be formed with these three schools and others discussed as probable members. The final action rests with the athletic boards of the four old valley schools.

In discussing the plans for the new group, Dr. W. P. Edmunds of Washington university stated that the organization would retain the name, Missouri Valley conference. He further stated that the organization would be well on the road to perfection Christmas.

Englewood Y Quintet Beats Chicago Y College, 43-21

The Englewood Y. M. C. A. basketball quintet easily defeated the Chicago Y college team, 43 to 21, last night on the winners' floor. Hinckley led the Englewood attack with seven baskets and two free throws.

Bears Battle Frankford Pro Eleven Today

Chicago's Bears and the Frankford Yellowjackets, who fought to a scoreless tie yesterday in Philadelphia, will continue their National league pro gridiron rivalry this afternoon at Wrigley field. Both teams left Philadelphia immediately after the game, and expect to arrive this morning.

The Yellowjackets are a much stronger team now than earlier in the season. Earl Britton, who formerly played with Dayton, now appears at the full back position for them and handles the kicking assignments.

The scheduled game between the Cardinals and Ernie Nevers' Duluth team, which was to have been played here today, has been canceled by Manager Chris O'Brien of the Cardinals.

IRISH OPEN CAGE SEASON AGAINST ARMOUR MONDAY

Notre Dame, Ind., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Notre Dame may open its basketball season Monday night against Armour Tech minus the assistance of its coach, George Keegan. The Irish cage tutor was called away today to the bedside of his brother, who is seriously ill, and may not return for the initial game.

Mike Nyikos, forward on the Notre Dame quintet a few years ago, is in charge of the workouts. The players put in a hard but snappy afternoon today.

Capt. Joe Jachym is the only regular left from last year's flashy five. John Colerick at center, Tim Moynihan of Chicago as running guard, Jim Bray as floor guard, and Frank Crowe as forward seem to be the leading contenders for regular positions on the team from a turnout of thirty candidates.

NEW YORK'S SIX DAY BIKE GRIND STARTS TONIGHT

New York, Dec. 3.—(AP)—Internationally famous riders assembled in Madison Square Garden tonight preparatory to the forty-third international six day bicycle race, which starts tomorrow evening at 9 o'clock. More than 10,000 fans were on hand for the preliminary warmup sprints.

The first spill came in an amateur half mile sprint when Henry Trondle of the German Bicycle club of New York crashed out of the arena into a box, sustaining head lacerations and probable concussion of the brain. He was removed to the Polytechnic hospital.

Bill Edwards, Famous Tiger Gridder, to Wed Jan. 2

New York, Dec. 3.—(AP)—"Big Bill" Edwards, famous Princeton football star and former collector of internal revenue, has been tackled by cupid at the age of 51. His engagement to Mrs. Norma Jones Steelsmith, school teacher of Mount Vernon, N. Y., was announced today. The wedding will take place Jan. 2. Judge R. G. Popham of Marengo, Ia., and Mrs. Popham, brother and sister-in-law of Mrs. Steelsmith, made the announcement.

Cochran Beats Hoppe in 18.1 Match, 2,400 to 2,368

New York, Dec. 3.—(AP)—Welker Cochran, world's 18.2 balkline champion, defeated Willie Hoppe in a special eight block 18.1 balkline match here tonight by winning the final block, 385 to 268, for a final total of 2,400 points to 2,368. This was the first time that Cochran ever vanquished Hoppe in such a style of play. Cochran had a high run of 99 tonight while Hoppe had one of 63.

Hoosier A. C. Beats Hirsch Center Girls in Swim Meet

A girls' swimming team representing the Hoosier Athletic club of Indianapolis, Ind., defeated the Hirsch Center girls, 33 to 25, last night in a dual meet in the Hirsch tank. Dorothy Moore of the Hoosier team won high point honors with two victories and a similar number of seconds.

Brothers Clash When Badger Five Faces Freshmen

Madison, Wis., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Behr will meet Behr in a family squabble here Tuesday night when Wisconsin varsity basketball players will take on the freshman squad in an exhibition game.

Capt. Lou Behr is playing his third year at forward for Dr. Walter E. Meanwell, while Sammy Behr, his younger brother, is a center on the yearling outfit.

Both gained distinction with Rockford, Ill., High school teams, brother Lou being a member of the Rockford five when it placed second in the Stagg national tournament in 1924.

Sammy is one of the several frosh cagers whose football activities kept them from reporting earlier for the indoor pastime. Others who have made the shift from moleskins and will be seen with frosh five for the first time are Milton Gantenbein, guard, and Fritz Peters, forward, both of La Crosse, Wis., and Mark Schmitz, former Madison Central High school guard.

Huff Talks of Grid Evils at Illini Banquet

of them was "Psychology, a Matter of Gland Secretion'," said Rockne.

"When I came in here tonight I was asked to talk on what I thought my team could have done to Illinois this season. I am just a little too modest.

"Zuppke thinks a kick in the shins is sometimes good and sometimes the kind word is better, but I never have heard the kind word. But he is a great coach. When he has good material he wins championships. When he has poor material he lays low and smack goes a giant."

And Zup Returns Compliment.

When Zuppke arose he proceeded to show Rockne the kindest word the latter had ever heard.

"Rockne is the star speaker of the evening. I am going to let him remain the star speaker," said Zup.

"Rockne is a genius, I am only a coach. I was at a dinner down in Indiana recently and the host was a great Rockne admirer. I told the host Rockne was a genius and that I was a coach, but the host insisted Rockne was the coach and I the genius. The host said he didn't know the meaning of genius. Rockne is the peer story teller of the coaches.

"Some people have wondered why we didn't do better than tie Ames early in the season. I was covering up my defense for Northwestern, which we overrated at the time. I didn't have to cover up for Michigan, by nature the champions of the west, because I knew I could beat them. That is not diplomatic, but Yost can hand it back to me when he gets ready."

Zup then declared that Michigan plays the cleanest football of any team Illinois meets and added, "Now that's tact."

In explaining some of his football theories Zup said that Illinois is the home of defense and that a team sure of its defense gains offensive courage.

CHICAGO RIDING CLUB POLOISTS WIN INDOOR TITLE

The Chicago Riding club team won the indoor polo championship at the International Live Stock show last night when it defeated the 124th field artillery team, 10 to 7½. It was the final match in a tournament which has been in progress throughout the week.

Frank Bering's five goals brought victory to the Riding club team, although Kenneth Fitzpatrick and James Hannah, his teammates, also turned in some fine riding. Lieut. L. E. Everett led the attack for the losers. The score:

RIDING CLUB.	Post.	124TH ARTILLERY.
J. A. Hannah	1	Lieut. H.H.F.Gossett
Kenneth Fitzpatrick	2	Lieut. L. E. Everett
Frank Bering	3	Lieut. G. L. Ferguson

High Compression Power

with Exclusive Super-Six Smoothness

Hudson's two great factors of performance supremacy are exclusive inventions and can be shared by no other maker.

The released Super-Six principle converts to useful power, energy that in other types is lost in vibration.

This new companion invention adds a further step in efficiency by actually converting hitherto wasted heat into useful power.

In all previous types of automobile motors a high percentage of the power of the fuels is lost in heat thrown away in the exhaust and cooling waters.

The new Hudson motor gives the snap and performance of the high compression type without sacrifice of flexibility and smoothness.

Regular gasoline gives the performance sought, in other types, through the use of special and costly fuels. Oil dilution is ended, greater power and speed and fuel economy are obtained.

Every phase of performance is brilliantly better. The swift ease with which it takes and holds the lead is but one expression of the virile stirring power that marks its full performance range.

MAYER BOWLERS RETAIN LEAD IN NORTH END LOOP

Marino's 214 Average Tops Individuals.

Three victories in a row kept the Mayer Furniture bowlers on top in the North End Traveling league race last week. They had to sweep a three game series to keep pace with the Baby Ruths, for this team also came through and was three times victorious.

Puritan Malts and the Oh Henrys were the victims. Each dropped the complete series. Both had been well up in the standing until the disaster overtook them. The upsets enabled the Krem Kos to climb into third place, four games behind the leaders. The standing follows:

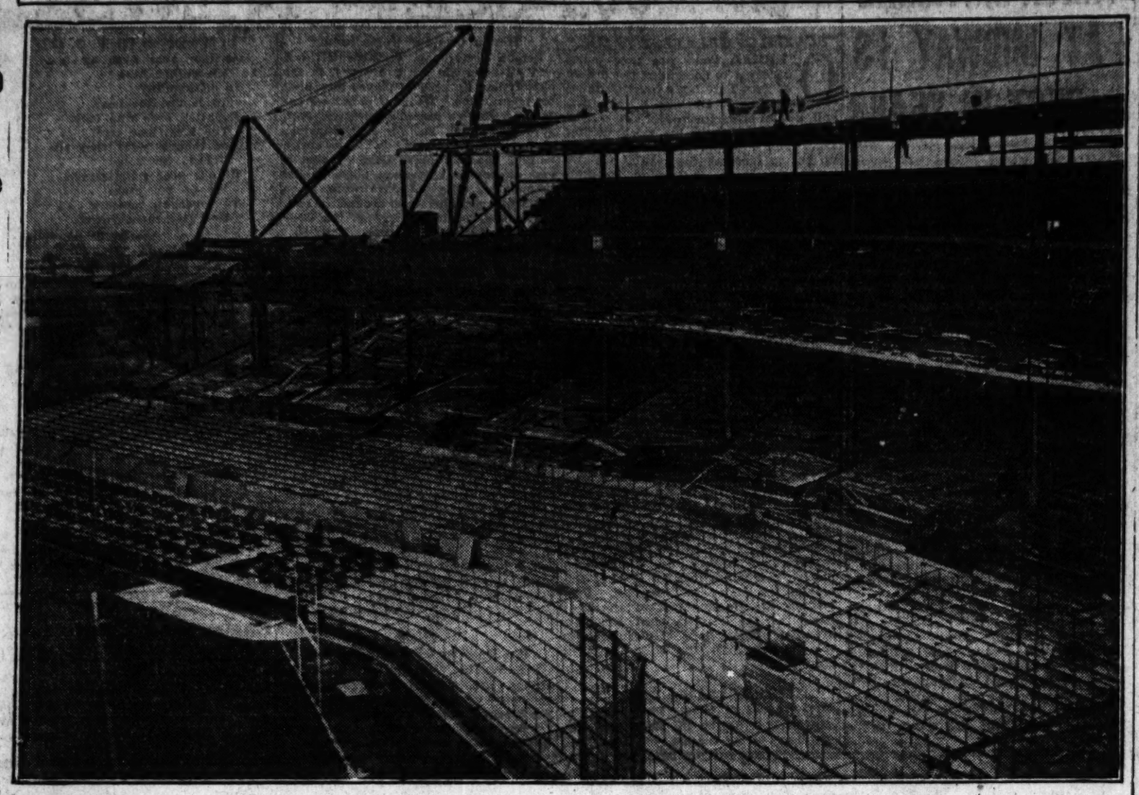
UPPER TIER OF CUBS' PARK NEARS COMPLETION



When the Chicago Cubs open the National league season at Wrigley field next spring they scarcely will recognize the old homestead. Immediately after the close of the season this fall workmen started the task of completing the second deck of the grandstand. The upper deck horseshoe now extends practically the length of the stands, and will be completed before another season gets under way. The upper deck will increase the seating capacity of the park by 5,500. [TRIBUNE Photo.]

BREWERS TRADE ORWALL TO MACKS FOR 3 PLAYERS

Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Chick Galloway, veteran shortstop, and two other Athletics players were traded to Milwaukee today for Ossie Orwall, outfielder and pitcher.

Charley Bates, south Philadelphia boy who alternated between catching and playing the outfield, also goes to Milwaukee. Another player yet to be named completes the deal announced by Connie Mack.

The Athletics obtained Orwall after spirited bidding with the New York Giants. Last summer Connie Mack watched the pitcher in action and immediately started negotiations toward acquiring him.

Orwall is 25 years old and a college graduate. He bats and throws left handed and was considered one of the most valuable players in the American association last season. As a pitcher he won 17 games and lost 6.

FERET'S PLEA FOR AMATEUR TENNIS RANKING REFUSED

PARIS, Dec. 3.—(AP)—Paul Feret, who turned professional lawn tennis player to go barnstorming with Mlle. Suzanne Lenglen, was denied reinstatement in the amateur tennis ranks by the French federation tonight. The executive committee of the federation, instead of passing directly on the problem, turned the issue into a question of referring Feret's application to the rules committee, which it refused to do.

If the request had been referred to the rules committee, it was understood that body would have been expected to find some way out, either by changing the rules, or "interpreting" them to admit Feret.

When is a Cooling System not a Cooling System?

Automotive engineers tell us that an automobile engine runs most efficiently when the temperature of its cooling medium is maintained at approximately 180° F.

In Summer driving this presents no difficulty. On the contrary, the cooling system has to be "on the job" all the time in order not to exceed this temperature. But in freezing weather it's a different story. Then your problem is how to raise the temperature of your motor to its efficient point.

Suppose your radiator is filled with a volatile anti-freeze solution—one in which the anti-freeze element boils at a low temperature—considerably lower in fact than the boiling point of water. What's going to happen to your protection when your motor is properly warmed up? Obviously it will evaporate rapidly or boil away.

Contrast this with a cooling system filled with Ivo Radiator Glycerine. Ivo does not evaporate, for glycerine, the anti-freeze element, has a boiling point slightly higher than water and much higher than that of a volatile anti-freeze. No matter how cold it becomes—even 30° below zero—Ivo will protect your cooling system against freezing. In addition, you run no chance of boiling away your protection if a warm spell arrives, as it frequently does during the Winter months.

Under all varying Winter temperature conditions Ivo will enable you to run your car more efficiently and economically. It has many other advantages over volatile anti-freeze solutions. For example: it is odorless; it will not harm the finish of your car; it will not burn or explode.

Ask your dealer about this permanent anti-freeze which has brought new pleasure and satisfaction to Winter driving. Any of the dealers listed below are prepared to service your car with Ivo.

Look for this label on "IVO" cans and drums

A Procter & Gamble Product

IVO RADIATOR Glycerine ANTI-FREEZE SOLUTION

CAUTION: Before filling with IVO, or any other anti-freeze, it will pay you to make sure that the cooling system is leak-proof. Tighten—and renew if necessary—all hose connections, cylinder head gaskets and pump packings.

Winter Tourist Vanguard Fills Roads to Dixie

Route Through Nashville Most Popular for Florida Trip.

THE annual outpouring of northerners for Florida and the gulf winter resorts is under way. Early evidences of winter in the middle northern states started the winter tourists off somewhat earlier than usual, and reports from mid-south points on the main highways tell of the passage of constant streams of motorists aimed toward Dixie. Previous to the first sharp cold spell hardly an inquiry had been made at THE TRIBUNE Public Service Bureau for road information, but immediately after it, and considerably more so after the first snowstorm, inquiries began to pour in and the search for reliable travel reports is still increasing.

The trip from Chicago to Florida points offers the best highway conditions in automobile history for this journey. The route that is receiving the travel burden, by way of Nashville, is almost a complete pavement. Road conditions in Kentucky and Tennessee, which, for a number of years, have been a nightmare to southbound tourists in the early winter months, are now reported in excellent shape. The last of the rough and pitted roadways and the heaving detours in the neighborhood of Hopkinsville, Ky., have been cleared away. Speed and smooth riding are practical from the Ohio river to Chattanooga.

Highway No. 1 out of Chicago is now without detour and a straight run without interruption exists to Lawrenceville, where the route crosses into Indiana and on to Evansville. All traffic ferries cross the Ohio to Henderson, Ky., but from that point there are no other ferries on the main line of travel, even through to Miami. The average tourist will sleep at Chattanooga the second night out from Chicago, without pressing unreasonably in the matter of speed. From Chattanooga south the best travel is reported as by way of Rome and Atlanta.

From Atlanta through Macon and to Lake City, Fla., there are few miles of unpaved road. In dry weather the clay roads of Georgia are wonderful going, but during rains it is advisable to rest and wait for the sunshine. In Florida the central route down the state is practically all good pavement, but the east coast roads are a trial to travelers south of Jacksonville and for some distance below St. Augustine.

In all directions from Chicago the highways offer encouragement to northern winter motor travel. The Lincoln highway through Iowa is reported with a single detour, and the roads through Indiana, Michigan, and Ohio on main lines are reported with few bad spots. Latest bulletins show:

U. S. 41—Between Evansville and Nashville is now in good condition. Trouble north of Hopkinsville, Ky., has been cleared.

The following report affecting area not exceeding 50 miles from Chicago is issued by George N. Lamb, district engineer:

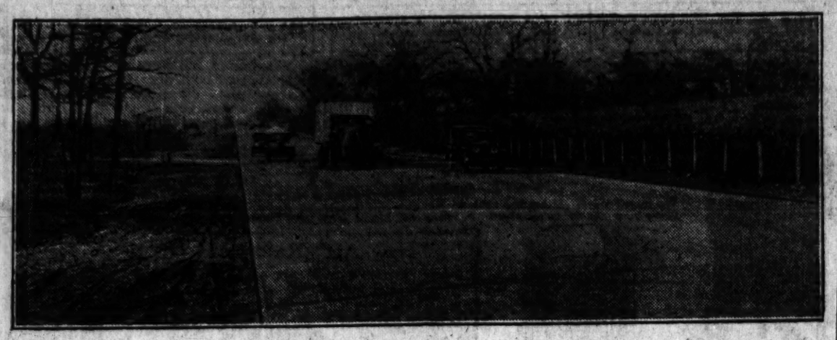
SPEED WITH SAFETY ON 40 FOOT ROADS



ROOSEVELT ROAD, recently widened for several miles to 40 feet, offers a vivid illustration of the superiority of four lane highways in both the matter of speed and safety. The accompanying pictures show something of the manner in which traffic maintains its pace on the wider road and in which it slows up and congests on the narrower roads. The highway, known as state route No. 6, now extends, in improved condition, nearly to Wheaton, Du Page county. From the Butterfield road to Des Plaines avenue all the pavement will be 40 feet wide when finally completed in the spring. From Butterfield road west the roadway is 20 feet wide, but ten foot shoulders have been constructed on each side so that this also may be widened to 40 feet when the state highway department decides upon the necessity. Driving tests on the wider road showed that the passing of heavy, slow going trucks by lighter and faster vehicles involved no hazard, as clear vision ahead is permitted upon the 40 foot pavement. If trucks keep to the center it is possible to pass safely outside, but if the trucks keep to the outside, as undoubtedly practice will dictate, full view of the road ahead is constant. Four lines of traffic can pass upon the new pavement with considerable room to spare.

Business Men Act to Speed Up Work on Devon Avenue

DEVON AVENUE is another proposed 100 foot artery for the north side, which is receiving attention from community business organizations. With the organization of the Greater Devon Avenue association last week, the first steps were taken to develop this thoroughfare as a motor traffic street from Sheridan road to the Cook county line.

The association was organized by representatives of the communities lying along the street and the following directors were elected: William Zelosky, Thomas H. Hulbert, Axel Lonnquist, Fred I. Gillick, Henry Rasmussen, Paul J. Paulenake, H. Roy Berry, Ald. Thomas J. Bowler, Harry Brown, Louis A. Kinsey, William H. Malone, William C. McLennan, Marshall Anda, and George J. Eckhoff. Mr. Eckhoff was chosen president.

It was disclosed at the first meeting that paving work by the county is being retarded on the project extending from Mannheim road to Caldwell avenue, at the westerly end, because of the necessity of condemning the right of way within the city limits from Milwaukee avenue to Canfield road.

"Construction of pavement from the West River road to Western avenue in Park Ridge," it was reported, "is under way and the bridge over the Des Plaines river is nearly completed. Inside the Chicago city limits, with the exception of a few hundred feet east of Canfield road, Devon avenue has been dedicated as a 100 foot street as far as Avondale avenue and the Northwest highway.

"From the Northwest highway east to Milwaukee avenue, about a mile, the avenue has not been dedicated uniformly, though for a portion of the distance it exists as a 66 foot road.

"The primary object of the association is to secure immediate action by the city authorities in the acquisition of this right of way, so that the county paving may not be delayed."

In 1923 the plan commission recommended opening Devon avenue from Western avenue to the city limits as a 100 foot road; the recommendation went to the board of local improvements. In 1926 Ald. Bowler introduced an order for opening Devon from Milwaukee avenue to the city limits, but lack of funds interfered with action.

Dunes Route Detour Is Reported in Poor Condition for Traffic

THE regularly marked detour on the Dunes highway is reported rough, crowded and dangerous to traffic, according to Chicago Motor club bulletins. The road, it is said, is so narrow at points that two cars cannot pass and attempts to do so have resulted in wrecks.

It is pointed out that the marked detour is being used by busses and these vehicles have crowded a number of passenger cars into the ditch in the last few days. During the last week towing cars have been stationed at a number of points along the detour.

The club recommends that east bound travel from Chicago go by way of the Lincoln highway, which is U. S. 20 in Lincoln, Indiana, to Westville, thence to La Porte and Rolling Prairie. Around the lake traffic is directed via Westville and thence north on Indiana No. 42 through Otis to Michigan City. The Dunes highway will be reopened, it is said, about Dec. 15.

Gaps in Pavement Through Cook Gradually Closed

CRAWFORD avenue, which under construction from Lincoln highway north to 147th street, a distance of has been opened from the highway north two and to the Flossmoor road. Traffic toured at this point east to avenue, then north on Kedzie to 147th street, or west on the moor road to Cicero avenue and on Cicero avenue to 147th

The filling-in of the old tracks on Western avenue from the south limits of Blue Island the north limits of Spaulding stone and tarvia has made a improvement and will be of great fit to the public in that section.

In last week's report Crawford avenue, which is a new road ing Park boulevard south as far Indian boundary line, was open to traffic. Since the Chicago Milwaukee and St. Paul railroad stoned its crossing, it is now far south as Grand avenue. stretch of Cumberland avenue ment connects with Thatcher at Grand avenue.

One Hundred and Fifty-first which is to be paved from Pulaski street west to Cicero avenue, closed from Halsted street west Dixie highway.

Traffic is detoured at Halsted north to 155th street, then west Dixie highway. That portion of street between the Dixie highway Kedzie avenue has not been tion for the public to travel. contractor will probably have west as Kedzie avenue on 153d next week.

Why Gamble?

To expose yourself to "Social" Diseases is to risk life-long disability or death

Before you deliberately expose yourself to "Social" Diseases, consider the possible consequences . . . not alone to yourself but to others.

Dr. Herman N. Bundesen, Health Commissioner of Chicago, says: "'Social' Diseases not only infect the guilty, but contaminate the innocent wife and child. They leave in their wake sterility, insanity, paralysis, maimed women, the blinded eyes of babies, the twisted limbs of deformed children, degradation, physical rot and mental decay."

And U. S. Senator Royal S. Copeland, former Health Commissioner of New York City, adds: "'Social' Diseases ravage and wreck the constitution, debilitate every vital force in a man's body, and leave him in a condition that is likely to put him on the scrap heap while still young."

In view of authoritative statements such as these, will YOU risk contracting a disease that may make you a walking pestilence and doom you to life-long disability or an early death?

If already infected, will you permit another day to pass without securing reliable medical treatment?

The answer emphatically is "NO!". No thinking man will allow a "Social" Disease to impair him in body and mind, and bring misery and suffering to those he loves.

Women and Children

A special department exclusively for women and children, with women assisting as nurses and attendants, is located at 72 East Randolph Street. Every facility is provided here for effective treatment, and the utmost privacy with the highest degree of comfort is assured.

That is why "Social" Diseases now are on the decline, and why those who have had the misfortune to become infected are turning to reputable physicians and clinics for relief.

For seven years the Public Health Institute has been helping local physicians to stamp out "Social" Diseases in Chicago. Organized NOT FOR PROFIT, it has put the best of medical treatment within the reach of the smallest wage earner.

Open from 10 A. M. to 8 P. M. daily except Sunday, the Public Health Institute enables the sufferer to secure treatment during his lunch hour, after work or in the evening. Its 30 registered physicians administer treatment privately to as many as 1,500 men, women and children every day.

If YOU know or even suspect yourself to be infected, come at once to the Public Health Institute. A visit now may save you from permanent disability . . . perhaps from a premature death!

Plan to Rebuild Crawford Avenue Hundred Feet Wide

Active Steps Under Way to Develop Sixty Mile Continuous Way.

BY PUTNEY HAIGHT.

THE impulse for traffic freedom in Chicago which has been struggling for expression in plans to provide means to facilitate urban transportation latterly has been concerned principally with the problem of through north and south continuous arteries, none of which exist in practical form. Development of Harlem avenue, of Mannheim road and of the Forest way, the latter a 600 foot mall encircling the city, as continuous arteries, have received much attention. Western avenue and Ashland avenue also figure in studies of this problem. None thus far have received individually what might be termed a concentrated effort.

Interest is attached, therefore, to a newly concerted effort for the widening of Crawford avenue to 100 feet through the city and its extension as a continuous highway from the Wisconsin line to the Will county line. The plan of an organization recently incorporated for the sole purpose of developing this thoroughfare is to concentrate the necessary efforts now scattered over the 60-odd miles of the route. The Crawford Avenue Improvement association was formed.

The association is made up of such men as Martin K. Northam, H. B. Henry, A. Glenn Picket, Roman I. Smook and H. Y. Curry, who are officers, and Ralph G. Crandall, Paul E. Green, Robert A. Ilg, A. A. Lewis, Harry A. Both and John G. Wittbold of the directors.

"Important steps have already been taken," Mr. Northam states, "to make this one of the most important north and south arteries of traffic in Chicago. Court proceedings are in progress for widening between the drainage canal and 67th street to 100 feet, and for paving between 43d and 71st streets at a 52 foot roadway width.

"The sanitary district has let contracts for the substructure for the $2,000,000 bridge, which will have a 52 foot roadway.

"In Evanston provision has been made for its opening at 100 feet from Simpson street to Glenview road and 40 foot pavement has been ordered from Central to Simpson street. Through Niles Center and Tessville dedications have been received for opening up the street to a width of 80 feet and condemnation proceedings are under way for a few pieces not dedicated.

"The gradual improvement is anticipating heavy travel, which is certain to be attracted to the street as soon as the sections are connected into a continuous highway. The proposed Governor's highway, now under contract as a 40 foot road from Kankakee to Chicago, will connect with Crawford avenue at Matteson. From that point, when the remaining sections are connected up and paved, it will extend due north for 40 miles to Glenview road in Evanston.

"From Glenview road north the plans of the regional commission call for connecting Crawford avenue with the Skokie valley road to be built by the county in 1928. Surveys have been completed from the Cook county line through Lake county to the Wisconsin line, and that portion will come in for the necessary promotion at the proper time.

"The association will urge the widening of the avenue to 100 feet through Chicago, with the exception of the portion between 31st street at the south and Ainslie avenue on the north. Through this section it is possible the problem will be handled by substituting a nearby street such as Springfield avenue or Keystone avenue, in the widening program, if the property owners of the district insist. Such a jog would be connected at either end with Crawford avenue and serve the purpose of a continuous unit.

"The widening, extending and improving of this artery will not only be a decided factor in relieving traffic congestion now a burden on highways further east but will result in great benefit to property in the immediate vicinity of the street and communities through which it passes, as well as the entire west side as such. It will mean business development in the west division of the city and greatly increased real estate values of the region."

Crawford avenue is the first full section line artery susceptible of continuous development through the metropolitan area, calculating from the east. To the west there are other possibilities. James Simpson, chairman of the Chicago plan commission, has written his approval of the enterprise, and Mayor Charles H. Bartlett of Evanston, President John E. Brown of Niles Center and President W. C. Herbster of Tessville are on record in support of the project. H. E. Poronto, trustee of the Central Manufacturing district, is also of record as offering cooperation.

The next important step involves the development of the section between 31st street and 4600 north. Surveys and investigation of property owners' sentiment have been instituted. The association aims to arrive at a definite decision upon the route shortly. Whether the artery will be a widened Crawford avenue or one of the parallelling streets is opened up to 100 feet in width will depend upon the views of the owners of Crawford avenue frontage.

County Reopens Four New Concrete Sections for Public Travel

FOUR new sections of concrete roadway were opened to traffic last week by the county highway department. They are:

Willow Springs road from the Joliet road south to German Church road. Traffic may then proceed over Archer road, over 104th avenue, and on to 95th street.

From the Michigan City road to Greenwood avenue, in the town of Thornton, 154th street has been concreted for the distance of a mile. It is now open to the public.

In Leyden township 25th avenue is now open between Grand avenue and Lake street. Concrete has been completed half the distance between Grand and North avenues, and stone has been applied the rest of the distance.

In Lyons township, 47th street south of La Grange is now open from Maple to 5th avenue. Between Lawndale and Maple avenues, however, 47th street is closed because of sewer construction.

Ford Car Showing Relieves Tension of Automobile Trade

BY WHITCOMB WILLIAMS.

DETROIT, Mich., Dec. 3.—The week's headline in the automotive industry was the public exhibition of the new Ford cars, which took place in Convention hall. Known as the model A, the car is vastly different from the well known Fords of the last fifteen years, showing a remarkable improvement in practically ever detail. It is larger with a more sturdy appearance, and, according to Mr. Ford, the best low price he knows how to build.

The model A is appearing at a time when it can assume a big part in what now promises to be the biggest year the automobile industry ever experienced. Mr. Ford last week stated that before 1929 he will have spent approximately $800,000,000 for labor and material for the news cars. His Detroit plants and the various assembly concerns throughout the country will have a capacity of 12,000 cars every twenty-four hours, and Ford is firm in his belief that before the end of 1928 that number will be the daily output.

Cars now being assembled are more for dealers' display than for public distribution. It is said the daily output will speedily arise from present production of 200 a day to 2,000 by the middle of December, and 4,000 to 5,000 early in January.

At the present time Ford plants in Detroit alone are giving employment to more than 80,000 men, and this number will be steadily increased along with production. When running at capacity, 140,000 men will be on Detroit pay rolls.

Ford is now preparing to become absolutely independent of other manufacturers of automobile units and materials, and the time is not far distant when he will produce every unit entering into the makeup of his automotive products. This will bring to Detroit millions upon millions of dollars that heretofore have been going to several other cities.

Merger talk is one of the chief indoor sports in automobile circles just at present. A meeting of executives of half a dozen well known companies last week was held in Detroit, but no one present had any desire to talk on the subject. All the companies which were mentioned in the possible combination are now competing against one another and the other producers as well, and in time one or more is sure to drop out of the race which is continually growing harder for many of the individual concerns.

The present number of passenger car makers now operating is thirty-two, with good reasons to believe that before another twelve months ends the number will be still further reduced by a combination under one management. Such a combination would be forced into the open by stress of competition. Quite often one or more of the so-called "independents" is mentioned in a rumored merger, but generally it is followed with a flat denial.

This class has not as yet felt the weight pressure of competition and is jealous of individual prestige, but there are still a large number of smaller producers who must fight for existence and must continue to fight for public favor.

News and Views of the Auto Trade

THE current belief that automobile buyers receive a great deal of attention before they complete their purchase and very little afterwards was taken as a text by C. W. Nash of Nash Motors at a meeting of Nash service and parts managers last week at Kenosha. "I feel that service rendered by our dealers generally is good," he said, "but it is always dangerous to be entirely satisfied. If we expect to progress we must continually strive for further improvement. No department in our institution is more important to continued success of business than service to the owner."

A new eight cylinder car is to be placed on the market within thirty days by the Studebaker corporation, it was announced by A. R. Erskine last week. The car is to be assembled at Detroit.

The increasing use of mechanical front for motor radiators is reported by practically all makers of shutter equipment. According to Ed Blumenthal of the Pines winterfront, nearly one-fifth more cars have been equipped to resist freezing weather this winter. The equipment is responsible for more general winter use of cars, it is said.

"Traffic accidents can be reduced to a negative figure by increase in width of streets," E. L. Cord of the Auburn Automobile company declares. "Street planning for 25 years hence is a rational policy, for present expenditures will effect economies for the future generation which may be counted in millions of dollars. Grade separation and the orderly procedure of vehicle drivers are two other essential factors in safety."

Among the simple things to remember in winter, if one's car is to survive, are never to race a cold motor, never forget the anti-freeze treatment of the radiator and never take chances on icy pavement. Use the choke sparingly and check the battery often. These are hints by George H. Bird, president of Bird-Sykes company, Paige distributors.

CLEAR CANADIAN HIGHWAYS.

American motor visitors to Canada in 1927 have exceeded all records. Pleasant weather has taken practically as many cars across the border to Montreal as are usually seen at the height of the travel season. It is planned to keep some of the main highways open for winter travel, especially those that connect with the transcontinental arteries.

Lake Shore Drive Opens Tomorrow to Montrose Ave.

THE new section of Lake Shore drive between Irving Park boulevard and Montrose avenue will be opened for traffic tomorrow. The last of the surfacing of the new pavement was completed yesterday. This includes the ramps by which traffic from ground level streets may ascend to the drive at grade separation points, which are located at Montrose avenue and Irving Park boulevard.

The opening of the new section will be marked formally by a noonday banquet at the Edgewater Beach hotel, which is being arranged by business men of the uptown district.

Something less than a half mile of tortuous travel will be eliminated for northbound traffic between Irving Park boulevard at Sheridan road and Sheridan road at Lakeside place, it is estimated, by use of the new half mile section, Montrose avenue and Clarendon avenue. The drive will do away with much traffic confusion which has existed on the lower portion of Clarendon avenue. Several minutes in time may be saved by through traffic.

Federal Road Aid.

With $510,000,000, expended up to June 30, the United States government is aiding in the construction of 170,000 miles of highway for nearly 21,000,000 owners of automobiles now registered. At the close of the fiscal year, 60,957 miles had been completed.

U. S. Motor Roads in Illinois Remain Unmarked by State

ILLINOIS bears the distinction of being one of two states in the Union which decline to mark the United States through highways with federal insignia. When the federal highways enter upon the soil of Illinois they lose their identity as such and hundreds and hundreds of cross country tourists, as a result have cursed and sworn in helplessness while trying to find their way out of the inadequately marked maze of the $160,000,000 system.

Instead of exhibiting markers indicating relative locations even on its own roads, the state of Illinois has erected large black and white, undoubtedly expensive, signboards bearing the image of the outline map of the state, a highway number, and the legend that the highway so marked was built with funds paid as automobile license fees.

While these are read markers appear by the thousands along the 5,005 miles of state highway, it is a sad fact that this mass of sign writing is not legible to the uninitiated. They simply record the allegation that license fees build Illinois roads. Where the roads lead to, where they come from and where the motorist then may be, remain a mystery so far as the signboards are concerned.

Officials of the state highway department appeared to be uncertain as to why the federal roads are not indicated by the conventional marker, as well as why the state roads are without adequate direction signs.

According to J. T. Boschelle, federal representative in charge of government highways in the central region, he has been unable to get at the explanation.

"The original understanding was that the United States markers were to be erected by the state highway departments having membership in the American Association of State Highway Departments," he said. "Perhaps some of the state officials may know what the policy of Illinois was and is to be, but I have not been able to find out."

Hold Your Wheel.

Usually the snowy or icy road is filled with ruts, and ruts have a notorious habit of twisting the steering wheel out of the driver's hands. Thus, a firmer grip on the wheel is necessary for winter driving.

Check-up Shows Who Uses Chicago Roads

AN interesting count of traffic recently made on radial roads leading into Chicago indicated that fifteen cars from points in the state entered Chicago for every Chicago car which left the city for points in the state. The results of the count were made public by Anton J. Cermak, president of the board of county commissioners.

"We in Cook county had been under the impression," he said, "that Gov. Small's theory that Chicago ought to pay a third or more of the cost of the roadbuilding down the state was based on the belief that Chicago automobiles were heavy users of state roads.

"It now develops that the number of Chicago cars using downstate roads is a very small per cent of the traffic. Further, it is shown that when one car leaves Chicago for any state highway sytem fifteen downstate cars come to the city and use our highways.

"Possibly Cook county may get back some returns from these visitors by way of the gasoline tax, but generally speaking, the population of the Chicago area would be much better satisfied if the state did a proper share of roadbuilding in Cook county on the basis of the contribution to state road funds by the county and city."

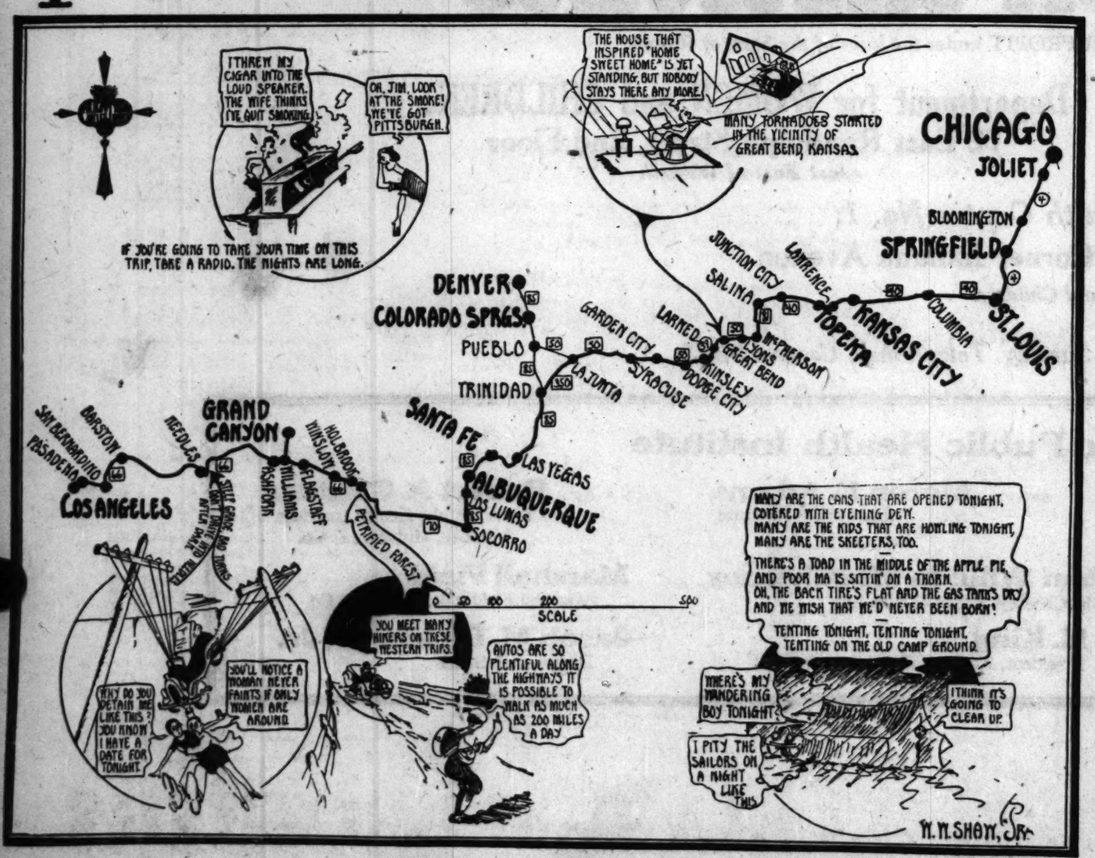
TRIBUNE TOURS

XXXVIII.—TO THE BALMY WARMTH OF SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA



EVERY season there is a little more continuous improved road on the tour to California. This year some changes in the route through Kansas will help the 'cross continent traveler. Also some care is needed to assure safety points such as the Needles, where night driving is dangerous. The route shown today has been tested as a six day journey. It will lead the traveler to the Petrified Forest and to the Grand Canyon, and other show places on the way. Once in California the tourist will have unrolled before him the tremendous mileage of paved highways, over which a season of travel can be negotiated without exhausting the possibilities of novelty.

LARGER DEMAND BOOSTS PRICES OF CHIEF GRAINS

BY CHARLES MICHAELS.

Broadening in general speculative interest in the grain markets was reflected in an advance in prices to a new high on the present movement with May oats and rye at a new high on the crop. Buying was of a general character with selling against daily and weekly offers a factor in checking the bulge. Wheat gained ½@¾c with December, $1.29¾@1.30¼ and May, $1.33½. Corn was ¾@¾c higher with December $1.03¾@1.03¼ and May 99¼@¾c. Oats were ¼@¾c higher and rye ½@¾c lower.

While grain prices were slightly lower earlier in the week, as the result of liquidation by scattered holders of the December delivery, the markets reversed their decline later and the highest figures of the week were made toward the close, with wheat 1¼@2c, corn 4¼@5c, oats 2¼@4¼c, and rye 3@6½c higher than the finish of the previous week. Lard was 7½@22½c and bellies 37½@70c higher, while ribs were 15c lower to 20c higher as compared with a week ago.

Liverpool Wheat Weakens.

Relative weakness in wheat in Liverpool, with the close there the same as on Friday, was responsible for scattered selling of futures here early, but there was persistent buying of December by strong commission houses, which gradually absorbed the surplus in the pit, and other deliveries firmed up quickly. The December-May spread narrowed materially, although 642,000 bu were delivered on contracts during the day. Buenos Aires closed unchanged and Rosario ½@1¼c lower. Winnipeg showed a strong undertone and gained ¾@1¼c, with decidedly low temperatures delaying movement in the interior and also shipments to eastern ports.

There was some selling of wheat futures here against purchases at Winnipeg which helped to widen the difference between the two markets. No export demand of consequence was reported on the seaboard, although there were further sales of hard winter by St. Louis handlers to the gulf for export. Spot wheat premiums here were steady to 1c higher, with red winter leading the advance.

Bull Market in Corn.

Leading commission houses and local professionals were active on the buying side of corn, and, while there was heavy profit taking, prices were on the upgrade the greater part of the day and the close was within a fraction of the top. Despite the sharp advance which has taken place during the last week there was no increase in the offerings of grain to arrive from the country and the trade looks for a good reduction in the visible supply to be shown in Monday's statement. Buenos Aires and Rosario closed unchanged and the advance in American prices put export bids out of line.

Oats were active and prices averaged higher with good commission house buying. There was a sharp recession at one time on profit taking, but the close was about the top. Rye was firm early, but eased later on profit taking and closed slightly lower for the day. Export demand at the seaboard was slow.

COTTON TRADE SLOW

Light trading within a comparative narrow range, and an easier finish featured the cotton market. Sentiment is moderately bullish but the trade has been evening up for several days. Average of the private crop reports issued is 12,681,000 bales, the highest being 13,275,000 bales and the lowest 12,-043,000 bales.

The market is not expected to do much until after the government report is issued on Dec. 8.

Liverpool cables were disappointing and showed a small decline. American markets closed with losses of 1628 points on futures with Chicago off 2627 points. Spots in New York were 5 points higher at 19.95c; New Orleans unchanged at 19.55c; Houston and Galveston were 19.75c, the latter being unchanged and the former up 15 points.

There were rains over the eastern belt and in the New Orleans district with cool weather. Prices follow:

WORLD'S GRAIN MARKET NEWS

Grain prices finished well toward the highest of the week with a decidedly better feeling. Board of Trade memberships are practically $3,000 higher than a week ago.

Corn trade is bullish in the main, although there is a difference in the degrees of bullish sentiment. There are conservative interests that consider the market in the most healthy position it has been for months.

Corn receivers are predicting a moderate increase in the movement from the middle west and from the Missouri river, and expect the demand to improve with larger offerings. Low grades of corn are selling in some instances at premiums over the December for old crop.

Estimates on the visible supply of wheat changes for the week cover a wide range. As this is the close of navigation there is no certainty as to what the figures will show. Last week there was an increase of 1,062,000 bu, and last year 3,522,000 bu. Corn visible should show a good reduction. The previous week there was a decrease of 1,967,000 bu and last year 1,366,000.

RAILWAY EMPIRE BUILDERS TURN TOWARD CANADA

BY HARPER LEECH.

Are we going to drive our future railroad geniuses to Canada?

In America's muster roll of empire builders to date railroaders occupy a great part of the space.

The enterprise and efficiency of the American railroads and the transportation tribe, which have been raised on them, have heretofore had no equals, and no serious rivals, except in Canada, because the two great railroad countries of the world are the United States and Canada. But it looks as if Canada is stepping ahead of us.

One cannot fail to get that impression when looking over a bunch of tourist literature of the Canadian Pacific. Our own tourist advertising is well done, and it has unrivaled beauties to picture, but laid down alongside the travel promotion stuff of the Canadian Pacific, it at once appears landlocked. The Canadian shows not only lakes, mountains, "cities great with towers and turret crowned," but also ports "where, laughing at the storm, rich navies ride." And the navies are railroad navies. The pictures of great hounds of the sea, of luxurious saloons and cabins, the maps showing routes across the two great oceans—show what an inspiration pertains to the maintenance of a great marine service by a railroad—an inspiration that cannot but have an effect on the up and coming young men of the system.

A Milwaukee and Chicago boy—he's a lord now—is the boss of that world embracing system of transport. He runs ships across the seas and lakes; he runs railroads through many states of this Union; his bills of lading are good to any port on the seven seas. The United States can hardly be said today to have within its gift the imperial place in railroading.

The Canadian Pacific has recently ordered a number of new ships. They are among the largest motor ships ever designed and strive for the last word in luxury.

Already the Canadian Pacific operates on the Atlantic fourteen great passenger and freight ships and seven exclusive cargo vessels. They sail from Quebec in summer and from St. John in winter to Cherbourg, Southampton, Antwerp, Hamburg, Liverpool, London, and Glasgow. On the Pacific, where the Hill roads once ran two ships, before our lawmakers began squeezing the enthusiasm out of American railroading, the Canadian Pacific operates three passenger ships to Hongkong, Yokohama, Shanghai, Kobe, and Manila. What American railroad sends a boat to the Philippines—supposed to be an American possession?

The Canadian Pacific operates 18 vessels on the Pacific coast, making Seattle and Alaska. On the great lakes the road operates five ships.

The Canadian government is both the railroad and ship business—but the Canadian Pacific is not worried about competition with the government rails and boats. By the way, another American railroader runs that government owned sea and land combination.

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—(AP)—COTTON SEED OIL was less active and easier closing at net declines of 1 to 13 points under hedge selling by refiners, local liquidation inspired by each improvement in cash demand, and the upset of substitute markets. Recent losses in cattle values were quickly replaced on small receipts during last week, with selling in midsession establishing new high prices for nearly eight years. South Dakota steers averaging 1,440 lbs, soared to $19 Wednesday, highest since January, 1920, when $19.25 was top.

All classes of cattle were about at the highest point of the season, the general average for good beef cattle at $14.30 equaling the highest since October, 1920, standing $3.70 above a year ago and $4.35 above two years ago. Receipts are running below normal for the season. November receipts at Chicago at 268,516 were second smallest for the month in 12 years, comparing with 337,552 a year ago.

Closing Hog Prices Strong.

Hogs on the week-end session cleared quickly at strong prices, in spots showing 5@10c upturns. Top and general average prices were unchanged at $9.10 and $8.55, respectively, but show declines of 15@25c since the close of the previous week. Outsiders took 2,000 head, and with larger packers fairly liberal buyers few loads were available after the first rounds. Most of the 3,000 left at the close were held off of the market.

The greatest increase in receipts this season sent hog prices close to the lowest level for the last three years during last week, top falling from $9.55 to $9.10 in three days. Arrivals at 220,200 were largest since February, 1925, showing an increase of 66,500 over the previous week. The largest week during last year was 212,623 in January. Three years ago last week receipts at 384,295 established the record. Four years ago arrivals totaled 308,741. Weights were below normal for the time of year, the estimate at 226 lbs. being lighter than any corresponding period in over five years and 8 lbs. under the five year average. Market as a whole was within 5c of the lowest since November, 1924, the average at $8.65 comparing with $11.90 a year ago and with $11.15 two years ago.

Colorado Lambs Arrive.

The arrival of the first Colorado fed lambs this season attracted considerable attention last week. The initial band was earlier than in recent years and averaged unusually heavy at 95 lbs. They brought $13.40, against $15.50 for the first shipment last winter, when they arrived in March, 1927, about the latest on record for the first of the season. In 1925 first were here on Dec. 11 and averaged 87 lbs at $16.00. Receipts at Chicago last month averaged 80 lbs, equaling the heaviest November since 1915, against 77 lbs a year ago. Last week's receipts were only moderate and prices advanced 15@25c, averaging $14.05, highest since middle of August.

Receipts for Monday are estimated at 22,000 cattle, 55,000 hogs, and 20,000 sheep, against 19,229 cattle, 48,007 hogs, and 19,506 sheep a week ago and 24,670 cattle, 54,022 hogs, and 22,051 sheep the corresponding day a year ago. Next week's receipts are estimated at 63,000 cattle, 210,000 hogs, and 93,000 sheep, against 69,276 cattle, 180,472 hogs, and 100,495 sheep a year ago.

METAL MARKETS.

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—(AP)—COPPER—Prices advanced to 14c during the week for electrolytic delivered at Connecticut valley points. This was attributed largely to continued heavy export demand. Domestic sales have been comparatively moderate recently. Most sales both foreign and domestic, are confined to nearby shipments. Wire drawers advanced bare copper wire ¼c a pound and other products advanced accordingly. TIN—Irregular, with moderate reaction toward close. LEAD—Strong, advancing $5 a ton. Demand brisk with bulk for January delivery. Strength abroad largely responsible. ZINC—Steadier; consuming demand was disappointing, especially in view of the activity in other metals. Ore slightly higher. ANTIMONY was steady for spot material, with the demand continuing moderate. More inquiry prevailed for futures and the market was slightly higher.

ST. LOUIS, Mo.—LEAD—Firm at $6.20. ZINC—Slab, quiet at $5.85.

Use Same Care in Investing as in Business.

The business of investment is full of hazards for the amateur investor.

Investing is a business—the business of putting one's money to work where it will earn him an income.

It is strange, however, how many investors fail to carry ordinary business prudence into this field.

They will work hard at their own business, constantly using their brains to devise means to build it up along sound lines and to safeguard its future.

When, however, as a result of this care and foresight, they have made their business profitable and it has brought them some surplus funds which they are ready to invest, it is a different story.

A great many here forget all about business principles, throw caution to the winds, and plunge blindly into some kind of an investment that they know nothing about, hoping it will prove profitable.

If one used such slipshod, haphazard methods in his business he would never have any money to invest.

Some smooth-tongued salesman or some high-sounding promotion literature comes along promising wonderful returns on his money and he allows himself to be persuaded into investing his savings in a proposition of which he knows nothing and with nothing more tangible to go on than the promises or predictions of a stranger.

He has gone into the business of investing blindly.

This is one of the commonest reasons that such a tremendous number of investors lose.

Were ordinary business prudence carried into this field, these losses would be greatly reduced.

The business man investigates those with whom he deals and knows the materials he buys.

Nothing is left to chance, luck, or hope.

Why is it that caution and business acumen are discarded when that man comes to investing?

Why deal with strangers or unknown houses when purchasing securities?

Is it not just as important to know the character of the house through which you invest as to know that of the house through which you buy your supplies?

Is it not equally important to know the quality of the securities you purchase as of the materials you buy?

If, in business, you are offered a great deal for little money, are you not immediately suspicious of the quality?

Why, then, believe promises of extravagant returns on your investments?

One of the most important factors in investing is to deal only through reputable investment houses—those which have built up reputations through years of fair and honorable dealing.

Such houses depend for their continued existence on the maintenance of such dealing.

Their biggest asset is the confidence which they have earned and they cannot afford to lower their standards.

They are in business to stay and will not disappear overnight as frequently happens with unknown houses or strangers.

Moreover, well established reputable investment houses have staffs of experts and statistical departments, the services of which are at the disposal of the investor.

While they may handle securities of different grades, they can generally be pretty well relied upon to recommend those which are best suited to the individual with whom they deal, realizing that some require the highest degree of safety, while others may be in position to take more chances.

One is, at least, certain that in dealing with such houses, no fraud will be practiced, which cannot be said of dealings with strangers.

It costs no more to deal with a reputable house than with strangers—but it is worth a great deal more.

And it will pay much better in the long run.

If you would invest wisely, carry into your investment the same amount of prudence, caution, and foresight that you exercise in the conduct of your business.

New York, Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Trading interest in today's stock market continued at fever pitch, with the rails maintaining the leadership of the advance which they assumed yesterday. Today was the second largest Saturday in the history of the stock exchange, with sales of 1,499,800 shares. The largest was 1,682,300 on Oct. 17, 1925. Sales of 15,628,700 shares for the week broke all records by more than 200,000 shares.

The advance was more orderly than the previous ones of the week and there was not quite as much frenzied speculative activity as has been seen in the recent past. There was, however, a substantial run up of stocks in various departments of the market.

Loyal Cheerful Coolidge Speech.

The market seemed as indifferent as usual to the current news developments, a fact which brokerage houses emphasized today more than they ordinarily do. Much was said in Wall street about the likelihood of optimistic remarks in the forthcoming address of President Coolidge to congress. This, however, was based largely on surmise.

To inauguration of a new system of eliminating the quotations on the ticker of increased rather than diminished the confusion which it was designed to eliminate. The volume of trading was so heavy that the ticker did not stop until 12:29 p. m. It ran about nineteen minutes behind the market from the first hour.

Aside from the ticker experiment the market had its chief feature again in the railroad shares. Canadian Pacific common dropped from a new high of 129 to 211½ and closed at 212¼ for a net decline of 4¾ points.

The common stock of the Soo Lines, which is controlled by Canadian Pacific, fell off 1¾ net points, but the preferred attained a new high record for the year at 83½ and closed up 2½ points.

Down the railroad list the features of the half day were the net gains of 2½ for Atchison, 3¾ for Atlantic Coast Line, ½ for Baltimore and Ohio, 1¼ for Erie, 1 for Chesapeake and Ohio, 4⅞ for Delaware and Hudson, and 1½ for Wabash. Northern Pacific at 102¼ touched a new high for the year.

Specialties Are in Demand.

The demand for specialties remained broad and some of these were among the most active in the movement, with Commercial Solvents, Nash Motors, Coty, Nevada Copper, American Agricultural Chemical preferred, Congress Cigar, A. H. Kress, Case Threshing, and Air Reduction all up 2 to nearly 3 points.

General Motors closed at its high of 123⅞ for a net gain of 2¾ points. United States Steel was up 1⅝ points on the day, closing at 146¼.

Greene Cananea Copper, after rising to a high at 115, dropped back to 107½, closing the day with a net loss of 2¼ points. Continental Insurance closed at 248½ for a net loss of 3½ points. General Railway Signal and Devoe & Reynolds were conspicuously weak.

The sale of a New York stock exchange membership has been arranged, subject to approval by the exchange, at $305,000. This is up $5,000 from the last previous sale and a new high record.

TRACTION ISSUES UP ON ACTIVE TRADING IN CHICAGO MARKET

Chicago stocks were actively traded in yesterday's week-end session. The price movement was irregular, although trending upward. A strong demand for some of the traction issues was a feature. Chicago City and Connecting preferred moved up more than a point and the bonds rose to 70.

In the motor group Auburn Auto advanced 2 points, Bendix gained 2½, and Pines Winterfront added a fraction. Stewart-Warner declined fractionally. The mail order issues were weak, with Montgomery Ward selling down a point and Sears-Roebuck losing a small fraction. U. S. Gypsum jumped 3½ points, Middle West Utilities gained a point, and Club Aluminum was about steady. On light trading Great Lakes Dredge and Fitzsimmons-Connell declined 2 points each, while Chicago-North Shore preferred was off a point.

A new high price for membership on the Chicago exchange was set when a New York Stock exchange firm bought the seat of John F. Barrett for $20,000.

THIS startling offer is made to draw the attention of motorists to the advantage of acting now! To help avoid the crush of orders for this clear-across wiper that always follows the first heavy snow.

Most Mohawk dealers handle 40 installations a day with ease and promptness. But 100 requests a day sometimes bring delay to a few. To avoid that we offer FREE OF ANY CHARGE this $1000.00 Federal Accident Policy. It is paid up in full for ONE YEAR. Its features are excellent. To many it will be worth more than the cost of the wiper itself.

Remember that in RAIN, SLEET OR SNOW, the driver behind a Mohawk has the advantage of all other traffic. And the Federal Accident Policy offered FREE means double protection to any Mohawk owner.

You cannot afford to let the small cost of Mohawk stand between you and the $1000.00 protection of this policy—the superb safety of clear-across vision in rain, sleet or snow!

Federal Life Insurance Company
ISAAC MILLER HAMILTON, PRESIDENT CHICAGO

November 30, 1927.

TO THE MOTORING PUBLIC:

We are pleased to announce that a special arrangement has been consummated between the Federal Life Insurance Company and Brown & Caine, Inc., of Chicago whereby a Federal Super-Service Travel Accident Policy will be issued absolutely free by Brown & Caine, Inc., to every purchaser of a Mohawk Electric Clear-Across Windshield Wiper.

During the past three years nearly a million Federal Travel-Accident Policies have been issued to people in Chicago and its trading area. During this period the Federal has paid over $1,400,000.00 in claims to holders of its Travel Accident policies and their beneficiaries.

The Federal is well known, we believe, the country over—having been in business 28 years and holding assets of more than ten million dollars.

Wm. M. Bramhall, Special Agent.

CLEAR-ACROSS VISION IN RAIN, SLEET OR SNOW

Traffic Police don't have to be told who's to blame in most accidents. Without asking a question, they can usually spot the one at fault. He's the type that's been in accidents before.

It goes without saying that his windshield wiper, if any, is no better than the average windshield wiper. Which makes it a liability the minute the sun goes down.

When you drive behind a Mohawk Clear-Across Windshield Wiper you enjoy three singular protections:

1. You hold the advantage over the rest of the traffic because you can depend on perfect clear-across vision in RAIN, SLEET OR SNOW!
2. A clear-across wiper is the kind of equipment that stamps you as least likely to be at fault in an accident.
3. As a Mohawk owner you carry PAID UP FOR ONE YEAR a $1000.00 FEDERAL ACCIDENT INSURANCE POLICY.

It is plain that if all cars were Mohawk equipped there would be much less need for automobile accident insurance. Some day a clear-across wiper like this will even be required by law.

Perhaps this fact is responsible for present official endorsement: Mohawk is the one windshield wiper that does a man-sized job of keeping the windshield clean.

Its long life of perfect working order is the first thing that drivers notice if they've been used to the dinky little vacuum squeegee. It cleans 5 times the area of the swinging squeegee and takes up one-half the noticeable space. It gives more satisfaction after ten years of service than the swinging squeegee does when it's new

Unless you are an engineer, you probably won't understand how this 1000% improvement can be accomplished with 3 working parts. A tiny motor that scientists tell us is 40% more efficient than any other in the world. A worm drive of Duralumin—the metal that lasts so long against strain that they use it in aeroplanes. And a strong rubber squeegee that presses to the glass with a whole pound of force.

Second hand car dealers say this device adds 5 times its value to the resale price of a car. Certainly to motorist of 30 days' experience can deny the luxury and safety of complete, clear-across perfect driving vision—24 hours a day—365 days a year.

Stop at your Mohawk dealer's without delay. He'll make a quick neat installation and see that you get the $1000.00 Federal Accident Policy FREE!

Opera Subscriber Wants English Score

By Edward Moore.

"APROPOS of your most interesting comment on opera translated into English," writes Mrs. Orpha Hinton Dearbeyne, "I say 'Amen,' and please keep on saying it until the high and mighty at the Auditorium get 'hep' to the fact that we really do want just that.

"While they are translating the comedies you speak of, let's have a few others; say, as a beginning, 'Mme. Butterfly.'

"At the performance of that a few nights ago my husband, a sure enough opera fan, too, leaned over and said, 'An American naval officer singing in Italian! Ludicrous enough when we all know that whatever our navy men are noted for, it certainly is not linguistic ability.' Moreover, its story is essentially American, written by an American, and why in heaven's name can't we hear it in English once!

"It is a magnificent opera, thrillingly dramatic and with exquisite musical effects that could not be improved—at least as Mr. Polacco and the cast interpreted it—except to give it in English. It might not be so musical, but I'll wager three-fourths of that audience would have said the same thing I am saying. Anyway, here are two subscribers willing to be experimented on."

Secrecy Swathes Opera.

The only trouble is that such a step would probably be a blow to the owners of the performing rights of some of these operas that Mrs. Dearbeyne would like to hear in translations. It is quite true that the late John Luther Long wrote an American story, giving a typically American slant on the tale that, under the name of "Mme. Chrysantheme," had been given an equally typical French slant.

But that is not the point. The object is to keep all operatic proceedings as secret as possible. Every once in a while one picks up a program at the Auditorium, not for all operas but for some, and sees this announcement a page or so away from the pure reading matter of the list of characters: "Owing to copyright privileges, the printing of the story of—whatever it may chance to be—is not permitted in our program."

To the mere observer, the one not permitted within the inner mysteries, this idea of trying to make opera popular by allowing the smallest possible number to know what it is all about seems like logic gone to seed. But if the audience were let in through a translation there is no telling what would happen. Perhaps copyright privileges would prevent performance of the music. And this though there have been many performances of "Mme. Butterfly" with the four principal characters all Americans.

New Year's Eve Event Announced.

It is a pleasanter occupation to read the announcement that the Civic Opera company is preparing another English performance, and another comedy at that; or, perhaps more accurately, a farce. On New Year's eve, so runs the word, there will be a performance of Johann Strauss' operetta, "Die Fledermaus," in English and under the name of "The Bat."

The Civic Opera company has always made a point of extending itself for this holiday occasion. One remembers the exotic looking revival of "Don Giovanni" last year and the first American performance of "Resurrection" the year before, and the "Mefistofele" the year before that. This time there will be an amusing story—with the spoken dialogue included—and some of the best music the famous "Waltz King" ever wrote, and in the language we hope to understand.

Rosa Raisa, Irene Pavloska, Alice d'Hermanoy, Lucille Meusel, and Elinor Marlo will be the women of the cast, and Charles Hackett, Antonio Cortis, Giacomo Rimini, Chase Baromeo, Lodovico Oliviero, Virgilio Lazzari, and Jose Mojica the men. Henry G. Weber will conduct, and he and Charles Moor, that first class stage director of the organization, are now engaged in the business of rehearsals.

Apparently this performance will be a bit different in several details. There will be additions to the usual score. Tito Dal Monte will sing an interpolated number in Italian, and Mr. Mojica will likewise interpolate a group of Spanish songs. There is also word that the justly famous "Blue Danube" waltz will be borrowed as a basis for a number by the ballet.

It would seem as though the chief difficulty will be the finding of parking facilities inside the theater on that night.

The chief news of the coming week is the fact that Mary Garden, Fernand Ansseau, and Vanni-Marcoux have arrived, thus completing the roster of the company. All three will appear for the first time of the season on Tuesday night in "Thais Vanna." Miss Garden and Mr. Ansseau are likewise cast for the leading parts in a "Carmen" performance Friday night, with Elde Norena and Luigi Montesanto also in the cast. Mr. Moranzoni will conduct the first and Mr. Polacco the second of these operas.

Symphony Presents Its Concertmaster.

The other most important musical organization of Chicago, the Chicago Symphony orchestra, will present its second concertmaster, Remo Bolognini, as soloist on Friday afternoon and Saturday night. He has had hard luck so far. He came here with a splendid record of accomplishments as soloist and concertmaster in Buenos Aires, but the season had hardly begun before he fell ill. He is now back at his post, and will introduce himself to orchestral patrons with the Bruch Concerto in G minor. Mr. Stock will conduct Lalo's "Le Roi d'Ys" Overture, Clapp's "Summer," Brahms' Third Symphony, and the Dvorak Slavonic Dances, Opus 46, No. 8.

A popular concert will be played on Thursday evening, when Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony as the chief number. Mr. Stock and the orchestra are due for a lively time tomorrow, since they must go to Milwaukee to play two concerts, a matinee program in the afternoon when it is announced there will be an audience of 10,000, and a symphony program in the evening.

Past and Future.

Turning back to the Civic Opera for a moment, one is permitted to hope that some time there will be definite information about the new opera house. So far, all that can be learned is that the inauguration thereof is expected to take place Nov. 3, 1929, and that it will contain two theaters, a large and a small one.

The large auditorium was, of course, expected; the smaller one is on the face of it, an uncommonly fine idea. There are several works in the répertoire of the company as it stands today which lose a bit in a large opera house and would be much better for presentation in more intimate surroundings. It would make a place for ballet, which has come to be popular here. There might even be a chance for a special season of opera, and that would be the best news of all.

In the meantime, and until it is time to turn that page in operatic history, here is another chapter from the past, as supplied by the official historian at the Auditorium:

"'Mignon' was first sung in Chicago in 1873, with Pauline Lucca and Clara Louise Kellogg in the cast. In 1874 Christine Nilsson and Italo Campanini, the brother of the celebrated Campanini, who was later to rule the destinies of Chicago's own opera company, were heard as members of a company, which also boasted Annie Louise Cary and the Signor Del Puente. 'Aida' was the great revelation that year, but Nilsson gained personal triumphs as Marguerite in Faust and Mignon. Albani sang here in 1875, when 'Lohengrin' had its first local hearing. Two years later Chicago was given further taste of Richard Wagner's genius, when 'The Flying Dutchman' and 'Tannhäuser' were sung at Haverly's. But Meyerbeer was also a name to be reckoned with, and 'The Huguenots' and 'Robert the Devil' were 7TH HEAVEN. WILD GEESE.

UNDERWORLD. ROSE OF THE GOLDEN WEST.
DRESS PARADE. THE JAZZ SINGER.

By Mae Tinee.

GOOD Morning!

These have been busy days, what with football, Thanksgiving, getting set for Christmas shopping, etc., and I wonder if you've seen any or all of the pictures listed above? If you haven't, better try to sandwich them in some time or other, for they're all excellent.

JANET GAYNOR was delightful in "7th Heaven."

"7TH HEAVEN" is a charming thing and clings closely to the play of the same name from which it was adapted. An unusual production, full of a number of things, with an appeal for both high and low brows. Its text is Courage—the ladder that can lead from the sewer to the stars. It has "a quaint and heady bouquet, sparkles with thought and whimsy, and its direction and acting are potent." Charles Farrell and Janet Gaynor make a fascinating team and David Butler is also there with honors.

The film holds your interest unswervingly from start to finish—and the climax is a crashing one.

I sure do want you to see "7th Heaven."

"UNDERWORLD," is an honest, fearless, and gripping picture made from a story by Ben Hecht which holds the mirror up to Chicago's gangland and gangsters—and gives you an eyeful of the real thing. His tale was based upon the records of Chicago gunmen and . . . "it is sensational, sordid, terrifying, but never incredible, as how could it be when it bears the undeniable stamp of authenticity? . . . Its characters, excepting the police, are all folks without the law. It reeks with the odors of the badlands. It is peppered with whizzing machine gun bullets and sickening suspense hangs low, like an ominous cloud, over the action. . . . This is the picture that introduced George Bancroft to the world as a star . . . " and so on—I've been quoting from the original review.

While on the subject of "Underworld" . . . a knowing bird has told me that the theater showing it is haunted by gangsters.

"How can you tell a gangster?" I asked. He said that as a rule they all wear dress suits and are the ONLY ones who do at the Roosevelt's evening performances.

And, still gossiping—another bird twitters as to the reason Ben Hecht split with Paramount.

I am informed that, in the original story, Mr. Hecht had his hero blown to smithereens as a finale. In the picture he lives to be hung. Because of this change in arrangements for the passing on of the great Bull Weed Mr. Hecht is said to have gone quite berserker and refused to play longer in Paramount's back yard.

"DRESS PARADE" is a swell West Point movie featuring William Boyd. There've been a lot of the kind, but I thought this one especially "imbued with the spirit of the great institution that takes the flower of America's young manhood and seasons and hardens and polishes till it turns out the soldiers—and gentlemen—the nation points to with such pride.

"The story 'Dress Parade' was written by two graduates of West Point. Naturally they would write with a surer knowledge of tradition, spirit, and procedure than could a civilian. It was directed by a military man. . . . Then—after the film had been photographed in and around West Point (I'm told there's not a studio shot in it)—officials of the military academy worked it over . . . packs many a punch . . . has heart interest, beauty, and general appeal. . . . William Boyd makes his Vic Donovan a new and distinct character. Smart aleck, yes. But a new sort of smart aleck."

You'll like "Dress Parade." I KNOW you will.

"WILD GEESE" is a feature splendidly filmed from a fine novel—the prize winner by Martha Ostenso, you know. It retains to a surprising degree the compelling vigor of the original. The screened story is forceful and the characters sharply drawn . . . will never be a best seller because there is too much misery too vividly portrayed in it . . . a portrait of unhappiness too well done to be popular with the sidewalk crowds.

Belle Bennett does the best work in this film that she has done since her memorable appearance in "Stella Dallas." Russell Simpson clicks poignantly as cruel, mercenary Caleb Gare, the outstanding figure in the production.

You will not particularly enjoy "Wild Geese"—but you will never forget it.

"ROSE OF THE GOLDEN WEST" is lovely! Colorful. Romantic. Flashing with valor, love, patriotism, and adventure. Staged in the period when Spain ruled California, the action starting in 1846. Mary Astor and Gilbert Roland are the lovers in the piece, and they are perfectly charming. The film was made, so one who should know tells me, before she had bobbed her gorgeous hair—and certainly no maiden of earlier days was ever more exquisite in hoop skirts and mantilla than this pretty lady. Mr. Roland is much, much better here than he was in "Camille" with Nora Talmadge. Montagu Love, too, is splendid in his rôle.

"Rose of the Golden West" is for beauty lovers. It is for those who are not afraid to close their eyes and dream a little. For the folks who would LIKE to believe in fairies. (Not that there ARE any fairies in "Rose of the Golden West"—but if you would LIKE to believe in fairies you will be fond of this film.)

"THE JAZZ SINGER" may not be the picture the world is waiting for but it sure is a picture the world is beating a trail to see! Al Jolson, you know, in the rôle played on the stage last year by George Jessel. AND Al Jolson, large as life and twice as natural! So good is he that it's hard to believe he isn't before you in person.

The film has great appeal because he is in it. Then, he is supported by a splendid cast. Then, he has been smartly directed. Then, the vitaphone steps in and, presto, permits you to HEAR him sing his beloved songs for you. AND it's Al Jolson singing—not just a record. The illusion is perfect.

Warner Brothers can well congratulate themselves on their picture. It will turn their box offices into gold mines.

All of the productions mentioned are worth your while and I do hope you'll take time to see them. You are let in for so many punk films I feel personally cheated when any good ones slip by you unheeded.

Bits aBOUTem.

WOULD YOU LIKE to have Emil Jannings read your mind? They say he can analyze your character while he shakes your hand and looks into your eyes, which—if they lie and lie—will immediately give you away to him and put you on his black list. That he was able to do this came to the notice of the Paramount folks while he was making "The Last Command." Handicapped by the language barrier, he brought his perceptive qualities to the fore when introduced to the score of strangers who daily came to the studio. If he liked them—fine! If he didn't—confusion!

PEARL WHITE is back in this country after five years in Paris, and Photoplay tells this little yarn on her: "Between scenes of a serial some years ago she was busily studying a French dictionary in preparation for her visit to Paris. Warner Oland asked her how she was coming on.

"'Rotten!' answered the candid Pearl.

"'Why don't you try learning English?' ventured Mr Oland.

"Whereupon Pearl looked him in the eye and told him straight where he could go."

See you tomorrow!

On Home Life

By H. L. Mencken.

THE other day, getting news that the charming wife of a friend had presented him with a son and heir, I waited upon her in hospital, seeking to pay my respects. To my astonishment I found that the infant was not with her, but lay confined with a dozen others of its kind in a remote ward, perhaps a block away. Having been brought up in Victorian days, when it was thought to be next to mayhem, simony or piracy on the high seas for a mother to let her new born jewel out of her sight for an instant, I was naturally somewhat shocked, but a friendly nurse, of considerable pulchritude, quickly reassured me.

"The most rigid scientific inquiry," she said, "has revealed the fact that the little devils are far better off away from their mothers than with them. We haul them in at intervals to be fed, but the rest of the time they snooze in their ward. They are never pawed, and hence they seldom bawl. The most serious menace that confronts a baby in its first months, next to earthquakes and Calvinism, is its mother's love. Let her have it to cherish and play with, and she at once makes a mess of it, physically and spiritually. The safest and happiest child is that one which sees little of its mother until it is old enough to distinguish clearly between her face and her complexion."

These strange words gave me pause and set me to pondering. Are the happiest children those who are tied to their mothers' apron strings or those who are turned over to hirelings? Do rich children have a better time than poor children, or a worse time? The answer is not easy—not nearly so easy as sentimental legend would have it. Nor is it easy to say whether close and unbroken propinquity binds or looses a tie that human sentiment regards unanimously as laudable. Some of the most devoted sons that I have known saw little of their mothers in childhood. And some of the daughters who hated their mothers most were with them every day.

In all such matters we are apt to be somewhat misled by the indignation of moralists, who convert every change in the folk-ways of man into grist for their gloomy science. Today they tell us that the old fashioned home is disintegrating, and that its disintegration is a calamity. But the predecessors of these same moralists, let us remember, thought that it was a calamity when society first stepped in between parent and child, and forbade the exploitation of the latter by the former, and that it was another and even worse calamity when married women ceased to be the chattels of their husbands, and took to facing the world on their own accounts.

The changes now going on, indeed, may turn out, in the long run, to be vastly for the good. They seem anarchistic and immoral today simply because it is hard for human beings to throw off old ways of thinking. Those of us who are of middle age were brought up to believe, for example, that a girl in her later teens was at her best when she was a shy and trusting creature, untutored in the ways of the world; it thus shocks us to see her starting out on her own, and defying her parents. But is she herself really worse off than her mother was a generation ago, or better? The best opinion of the future, I incline to think, will hold that she is better off. If she faces new perils, she at least sees them clearly. And if she occasionally embraces them, it is at least rationally, and not as a mere fool.

What is too often overlooked is the fact that the home life mourned by the current Jeremiahs was developed and standardized under conditions that prevail in the world today only in the remotest backwaters. The American home of pious legend was essentially a farmer's home; the home of today must adapt itself to city life. Why should a city mother, with all the aids and arts of a complex civilization at her command, make a virtue of a farm wife's dire necessities? Why should she play valet to her children when professional nurses know how to do it so much better? She no longer schoolma'ms them herself, and she no longer doses them when they are ill. Why, then, should she dress them and undress them, or supervise their play, or act as policeman over them? It is conceivable, of course, that she may have a great natural talent for these arts, but it is equally conceivable that she may have none. If, in the latter case, she recognizes the fact frankly, is she to be blamed for neglect or praised for sense?

The moralists allege that the alternative to the orthodox home is anarchy and crime, but that is simply buncombe. Whatever we are headed toward is quite as apt to be better as it is to be worse. The fact that the transition is disconcerting and painful means nothing. The transition from polygamy to monogamy, among the Mormons, was also painful, and many old Mormons still believe that it was, therefore, immoral. The transition from Europe to America was painful to all the people whose descendants now constitute the American nation. The transition from country life to city life was perhaps more painful still: there are yet yokels who contemplate it shudderingly, as they contemplate taking a bath.

But such pains go with all human progress. There was a wrench when the old view [still prevailing on the farms] of children as slaves had to be abandoned, and another when the old view of wives as chattels had to follow it. The world is taking the present one rather more philosophically. Its ancients protest against the increasing liberation of the young, but they say relatively little about the correlative liberation of parents. Yet the latter, it seems to me, must feel the change more, and by the same token they are the greater gainers. When a mother who failed to make herself a slave to her children was regarded as unnatural and immoral, motherhood must have been an appalling business. But today it grows bearable, and on some near tomorrow it may actually become agreeable.

And with the old time penned up mother will go the old time penned up housewife. Keeping house, up to a few years ago, was an enterprise that had been little changed since the middle ages. It was full of dull witless drudgery. It meant working interminable hours, and at almost intolerable tasks. It made the average woman old at thirty. Today the immemorial burden eases. Of a sudden the house becomes a machine, as the office has become a machine. Many of its old drudgeries are abandoned altogether, as gratuitous and useless. And the rest yield rapidly to human ingenuity.

Here, it seems to me, at least one great reform remains to be achieved. The coal hole has gone and the wash tub is fast going, but the kitchen remains. How long will it last? In the cities, probably not very long. For of all the survivors of the infancy of humanity it is unquestionably the most burdensome and irrational. In the average American household its business makes no less than three-fourths of all the work that is done. It is dirty, expensive, time wasting, and an endless nuisance. The only genuinely happy days, in many an American home, are those on which the kitchen is cookless and shut down, and the family has to forage in one arm lunch rooms.

That American inventiveness has not devised a satisfactory means of getting rid of it is really most amazing. What stands in the way, no doubt, is a sentimentality—to wit, the belief that there is something mysteriously elevating and ennobling about eating meals cooked on the premises—that the family would disintegrate completely if it began to devour boughten victuals. But all this is folly. No American home meal is genuinely home made—if the family can afford and find a cook. And home cooking probably causes more sanguinary battles at the domestic hearth, year in and year out, than all other grievances and atrocities combined.

That it will be abolished, soon or late, is as plain as that prohibition will be abolished. Far, far better schemes for feeding Homo Americanus could be imagined by a schoolboy of ten, or even by a school teacher. It survives for the same illogical, nonsensical reason that Respecting the President survives, and taking blood purifiers, and fearing Friday as an unlucky day, and all other such heirlooms from the childhood of the race. On some fair tomorrow a couple of competent inventors will throw themselves upon the business of getting rid of it, and half a century later it will seem as silly, in retrospect, as keeping a cow in the back yard or trying to cure bunions with incantations.

Here's Another Cross Section of Chicago

By Burns Mantle.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Chicago is in for another ride in the drama. "The Racket," the newest of the police-gangster plays, and one of the most exciting, is one of those dramas that names names and cross-sections gangster life with a cleaver, using but precious little hokum as an anesthetic. It has little of the satirical comedy of "Chicago," and less color, but it is, I am bound to believe, a truer story.

"The Racket," written by Bartlett Cormack, sometime dramatic critic of a Chicago newspaper, tells of the McQuigg-Scarsi feud, McQuigg being an honest police captain and Scarsi the leader of a beer running gang.

These two come to grips when the police captain refuses to react amiably to the political influence Scarsi is able to bring to bear upon him. McQuigg is transferred to an outlying district but keeps up the fight.

One day his men bring in Scarsi's younger brother, caught crashing through the suburb in a stolen automobile with one of Scarsi's girls as a companion. Immediately the Scarsi influence, which reaches as high as the district attorney's office, and higher still to the organization that put the district attorney in office, is brought into action. Still McQuigg refuses to yield.

Then Scarsi himself appears and, finding Patrolman Johnson, an honest copper who knows too much, alone in the office, shoots him dead.

McQuigg holds Scarsi for the murder and tears up the habeas corpus that is immediately produced to effect his release. Then the gangster becomes threatening, snarling like a coyote in a trap. He'll fix 'em! There is to be an election Tuesday, he reminds them, and he'll drown their whole ticket by throwing the river wards against the organization. He can do business with the reformers just as easily as he can with the organization.

The Gangman Threatens to Squeal.

"I'll get the Tribune in here and give 'em a story with names and dates and figures that'll raise such a stink you won't have any prominent people left to handshake queens. . . . I'll give 'em one o' their exposés of politics and business and crime that'll rip this town wide open. . . . I got it on paper. . . . How you made that special grand jury o' prominent high-hats fold up last month by condemnin' the elevators in a couple o' million dollar department stores. Yeah! And by remindin' some o' our leading citizens o' the extra apartments they keep. . . . How the Old Man has that kid in the county treasurer's office accidentally killed by a train because his wife made him promise to squeal about the public funds grabbed there. . . . How they framed the school board to get their own hogs in there because that board's got seventy-five million to spend next year. . . . I'll talk the whole state into court—makin' me pay ten grand for pardons and paroles. I'll talk your Republicans in the Federal building into committin' suicide over the liquor dope I got. Who do you suppose I pay for the breweries I own? Who do you suppose I pay for the alcohol I get? . . . I'll talk the Old Man into flyin' the country if I even whisper about what happened to that friend o' yours, State's Attorney Higgins. Who the hell do you suppose ordered him out o' the way—my guns had to do the job—your Old Man!"

All this he threatens to the assistant state's attorney, who, apparently bluffed down, fixes the window so Scarsi can escape. Now the gangster, holding McQuigg and the others at bay with a revolver, leaps for the window. And a plain clothes man shoots him twice as he is going through!

It is an exciting moment and the end of the play. The audience, moved to the edges of its seats now, settles back with a sigh of relief, a little too stunned to applaud.

"The Racket" is perfectly cast as to types. John Cromwell plays the honest McQuigg and Edward G. Robinson the gangster. There is a touch of romance. The tough girl, played by Marion Coakley, becomes maternally interested in a cub reporter come from the school of journalism of the University of Nebraska to work for the City Press. But it is only an incidental romance. Which may not please the women.

The Irish Players Are Here.

The Irish Players are here with Sean O'Casey's "The Plough and the Stars," a drama of the Dublin revolution in 1915-'16, which has had success with the English, but is not altogether to the liking of the Irish.

It is a sordid story of tenement types drawn unhappily, sometimes a little resentfully and never quite understandingly into the defense of that misty freedom for which the Irish have fought through the centuries.

Honest types they are, and never arbitrarily moved through artificial situations. If they are not representative of a people they may be safely accepted as characteristic of a neighborhood and there is the drama and comedy of life in their adventures and their reactions. Thus "The Plough and the Stars" becomes as tragic as a wake and almost as funny.

The nearest approach to a demonstration here was during a second act scene in a pub. Several of the noncombatant and wastrel stay-at-homes were drinking with a lady of scarlet ways to whom one young intellectual applied the characterization of her profession. Thereupon she loosed the vials of her indignation upon them and set them down with the information that they were lice. At which word from the mouth of even an Irish lady on the loose there was hissing in the gallery and sounds of protest and a promising fight.

But it came to nothing. No one shied a potato at the actress, as happened the first year the Irish players were here. Which leads me to fear business will not be so good for "The Plough and the Stars."

The acting is splendid in the principal rôles, the company being headed by those two veterans of the old Abbey theater, Arthur Sinclair and Sara Allgood.

Theater Guild on Its Native Heath.

The Theater Guild's first company is home from its season in Chicago and has revived "The Doctor's Dilemma." There was not much cheering the opening night, which surprised me a little. The organization is so exceptionally capable and its members, particularly Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne, so popular locally I thought we might rise up and welcome them as most towns do their favorite stock companies. But we didn't.

The Shaw comedy has been played here once before, by Granville Barker in 1914, when the English producer brought his company over to get it away from war torn England. It is a more entertaining play as the Guild has cast it than it was then. Wordy, but amusingly argumentative in the Shaw manner, and soupdily reasoned. It is G. B. S. indulging in a field day of dissertations and giving all his anti-drug, anti-vivisectionist, anti-sacred tradition theories an airing.

His chief protagonist, an eminent London surgeon, having invented a serum for the cure of tuberculosis, is faced by the dilemma of saving the life of either an old classmate whose lungs are affected or that of a gifted young artist touched with genius but morally a waster. The fact that he is not unmindful of the charms of the artist's wife, who would make a most alluring widow, adds dramatically to his problem.

He gives the classmate the one chance he has to give, and suffers the humiliation of the widow's contempt. Shaw is one of the few modern dramatists who has succeeded in surrounding a death scene with an underlying vein of

This Thing and That Thing of the Theater

By Frederick Donaghey.

SINCE Chicago's supply of plays for next season derives from the Manhattan successes of this season, I'm far from alien in my curiosity concerning what happens or is likely to happen to the new things in the theaters there, and also to the new things in the try-out communities tributary to Manhattan. . . . What to me was the most interesting of last week's ventures in New-York, "The Plough and the Stars," appears to have had mixed reactions from the populace and the play-reporters. One reporter places it at the top of the slim list of "great plays" with the World-War as background; and another implies that the "sensitive Irish" were to be commended for behaving themselves at the opening, although policemen were in-and-about the theater, and others were within easy call. Five-fifty was the price of a ticket that night: three-thirty is the charge for other performances. The galleries were full all week, and the floor was not. . . .

M'KAY MORRIS He's Hannibal with Miss George in "The Road to Rome."

The reporters cared little or nothing for "Fallen Angels," by Noël Coward; and "Storm-Center" is reported to me as "without a chance." Mr. Hammerstein's new show, "Golden Dawn," is said to be regarded by the multitude as "just swell," although the reviewers who are literate in matters of operetta report that parts of it are tepid and boring. Well, most of "Rose-Marie" bored me; and the multitude still talks of it as having been just swell. . . . And the new revue, Harry Delmar's Revels, doesn't appear to matter as an item of commerce, although it was the subject of what performers call "great notices."

Among the plays we shall not see in Chicago are "Spellbound," "Take My Advice!" and "People Don't Do Such Things!": the three, after brief exhibition in or near Broadway, were carted at midnight to the burning-ghat. . . . Miss Pauline Lord was in "Spellbound"; and the play-critics are uttering shrieks of rage because somebody doesn't write a "play worthy of her," whatever that may mean. Lynne Overman was in "People Don't Do Such Things!"; and it might be unfair to infer that that is why the play has ceased to exist as entertainment.

Hopes and Fears.

Kenyon Nicholson, author of "The Barker," has had his piece about Uncle Tom actors tried out. It reached the public as "Poor Little Eva!" after having been known, first, as "The Fly-by-Nights" and, then, "Town Hall Tonight!" A report on it is that it needs recasting for New-York.

As to "The Barker," the cast headed by Walter Houston is to be disbanded; while that headed by Richard Bennett and Miss Morjorie Wood is to carry the piece into Philadelphia. . . . Mr. Houston, it is told, will return to the two-a-day, out of which he emerged four years ago to make a hit in the title-rôle of Zona Gale's flivver named "Mister Pitt," based on her tale of "Birth."

Miss Cathleen Nesbitt, who was in Chicago in 1912 with the Irish Players; Richard Bird, an English performer as yet unknown here; and Guy Standing, who has been with Miss Barrymore in "The Constant Wife," are named for "Diversion," by John Van Druten, author of "Young Woodley." . . . A quaint notion of the producer is to have Miss Jane Cowl direct rehearsals.

"Celebrity," to be shown this week in Washington, has to do with a prize-fighter who, finding little or no satisfaction in the worship elicited by his prowess in the ring, goes in for culture; and the idea should be pleasing to Mr. Tunney, who now seems to be of even less popular interest than he was before he and Mr. Dempsey arrived at an understanding as to the best commercial outcome of their recent meeting in Soldiers' Field. . . . Which calls to mind a letter, signed T. R. Russell, asking why neither the Theater Guild of New-York nor Mrs. Insull makes a revival of Shaw's "Cashell Byron's Profession." One of the reasons is, I should say, that Mr. Shaw hasn't written a play named "Cashell Byron's Profession."

Miss June Walker passes from "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," which is or is about to be junked, to "The Bachelor Father," which is something concerning which Mr. Belasco has expectations; but she will pause on the way to take part in "The Love-Nest," the play made by Robert E. Sherwood on the basis of Ring Lardner's "The Love-Nest."

"The Small-Timer," the play about the variety-stage for which A. H. Woods tried to obtain Al Jolson, has been tried out, and is to be withdrawn—whether for keeps is not reported. . . . And Mr. Jolson, idle from the time he was vitaphoned in "The Jazz-Singer," has resumed performing in "Big Boy."

And More of Them.

Gilbert Miller, who imported Max Reinhardt, is said to think well of taking over the machinery, paraphernalia, and prestige of the German director's staging of "A Mid-Summer Night's Dream," and giving the fantasy with an English-speaking cast; and 'tis added that George Hassell is desired for Bottom, and that Miss Ina Claire has been asked to be Puck. . . . As to the Manhattan performances in German by Reinhardt's own actors, they are doing so much better at the gate that the play is continued through this week, although its finish was announced for last Wednesday, and again for last night.

The operetta based on "Trilby" has been withdrawn for repairs to text, tunes, and thespians.

Miss Helen Menken is expected to be the principal actress in "Congai," from the like-named tale.

The sale of tickets for Miss Marilyn Miller's new show in Boston meant, 'tis said, $21,000 in cash; so, Mr. Ziegfeld retorted by cutting the title from "Rah! Rah! Rosalie!" back to "Rosalie." . . . Frank Morgan and A. P. Kaye, performers not identified with song-and-dance shows, are in the cast.

The three authors of "Irene" have effected a reunion for their common good, and are turning out something in the song-and-dance line for which they desire the services of Miss Elizabeth Hines. . . . Miss Hines, who is now among the married, is reported to have developed since her George M. Cohan days a number of notions as to her gifts, the position due her in drama, and the vast undesirability of most of the persons with whom she must associate if she is to pursue her art.

Miss Madge Titheradge, who acted here in 1911 in "A Butterfly on the Wheel," and Leslie Faber, here in 1915 in "The White Father," have been brought from London to perform in "The Patriot," a German piece by which the American importers set high store.

Miss Fannie Brice, who took herself out of sight and mind after Mr. Belasco's failure to make an emotional star of her, is in the two-a-day. . . . Louis Calhern and Miss Julia Hoyt [Mrs. Calhern] also are in it with a sketch named "Every Half-Hour." . . . Mordkin, an idol in the far-off days when he was vis-à-vis with Pavlowa, is to have a go at it. . . . And Miss Ruth Elder, of the air, is said to be taking $5,000 weekly out of it.

given. 'Fidelio' was also heard that season.

Signs of Temperament.

"Even in those days, prima donnas were wont to regard their fame and their desserts with such one sided, perhaps, yet natural, sensitiveness as was later to lead Johanna Gadski and Olive Fremstad into a hand to hand encounter, or was to propel a most talented soprano, known here only as a concert artist, to make both sides of the Atlantic ring with her ability to feel herself slighted and to take the occasion valiantly.

"It happened that Etelka Gerster, opening a Mapleson season here in 1879, named her dressing room the prima donna's room. The next night 'The Marriage of Figaro' was to be sung, and, as all the world knows, there are three important rôles in Mozart's comedy. One of these was to be sung by Marie Roze, another by Minnie Hauk. Each of these charming artists laid claim to the dressing room Gerster had so fatally named as the prima donna's.

"Early in the day storm clouds gathered. Trunks were moved in, only to be ousted. Locksmiths had to be called to make continuation of the warfare possible, as one prima donna after another locked the others out. The result of the skirmish left Mme. Hauk sulking in her hotel room, like Achilles in his tent, until 'The Marriage of Figaro' was half through. Then inducements such as only operatic impresarii of the old school were accustomed to counting among their assets, finally persuaded the troubled singer to assume her rôle.

Patti Sang in 1883.

"Emma Juch, as well as Mme. Hauk, was heard in opera here in 1882, and in 1883 Adelina Patti's name shone brightly upon opera bills. 'The Huguenots' and 'La Traviata' were among her most favored rôles.

The Abbey company, rejoicing in such members as Nilsson, Scalchi, and Sembrich, came in 1884 to Haverly's, where the Adelphi theater now stands. 'La Gioconda,' in which Nilsson sang, was a feature of the stay. The Damrosch German Opera company sang 'The Jewess,' 'Le Prophete,' 'Lohengrin,' 'Tannhäuser,' and, for the first time here, 'Die Walküre.' The singers included Materna, Marianne Brandt, Schott, and Staudigl, and Walter Damrosch was a conductor. It was in this period that Chicago first made the acquaintance of Lilli Lehman, and of the Wagnerian comedy, 'The Mastersingers of Nuremberg.'"

Here and There in Music.

Seldom in the musical life of a community has there been more admiration and respect from associates and pupils than in the case of Dr. William Carver Williams, whose death occurred at his home in La Grange, Tuesday, Nov. 29. A graduate of Yale and the Western Reserve Medical school, he had for years abandoned the practice of medicine for that of music, and during that time he became well known here and elsewhere as a singer, though in recent years he had confined himself exclusively to instruction.

In the words of Henry Purmort Eames, a personal friend, Dr. Williams' educational influence and force extended far beyond the special training of music students. He made thinking men and women, and was an idealist who applied his high standards to life and work. His broad vision and sympathies coupled with a natural gift for imparting information gave him an unusual equipment which for thirty years he used unsparingly and unselfishly to build up character, mentality, and musicianship in the young men and women of the middle west who came within the circle of his influence.

Julia Claussen went from Ravinia to Europe this fall, and on Nov. 7 gave a recital in her native Stockholm, where she became a prophet with a good deal of honor. One paper there said that she is the same stately, radiant person as before, with the same voice, art and style, and that what she has added is musical depth and skill in lyric coloring. Another says, "A voice such as Julia Claussen's will never grow old; on the contrary it will gain a noble patina. Her tone is always sonorous, in the lower register the same velvety charm, and the upper more glorious than ever." All of which is somewhat the same idea expressed when she was at Ravinia.

The Chicago chapter of Pro-Musica, Inc., sends word that Eugene Goossens, English composer, will give a lecture-recital before members and their guests at the home of Mrs. William Lowenbach, 257 East Delaware place, tomorrow night. Other Pro-Musica, Inc., events will be the appearance of Maurice Ravel, French composer, with Lisa Roma and Jacques Gordon at the gold room of the Congress hotel Jan. 18, and of Bela Bartok, Hungarian composer, Feb. 27.

D. I. Nakhatovitsch writes the information that Aleksander Konstantinovitch Glazounoff is on the way to complete recovery from his recent attack of pneumonia, and that hopes are expressed that he will soon resume his duties as director of the Petrograd conservatory, the school of Zimbalist, Elman, Heifetz, Seidel, Piastro, and other violinists.

The annual young artist contest for appearances as soloists at the popular concerts of the Chicago Symphony orchestra takes place Friday evening at eight o'clock in Orchestra hall. The contest is under the auspices of the Society of American Musicians with the coöperation of the Orchestral association and Frederick Stock. Out of sixty-one contestants who entered this year, eleven have come through to the finals—two organists, three pianists, and six singers; three baritones, two sopranos, and one contralto. The contest is open to the public.

Maurice Rosenfeld, lecturer, teacher, and musical editor, will speak before the Friends of Opera at the Drake hotel Tuesday afternoon on "Tannhäuser." He will be assisted by Leone Kruse, Forrest Lamont, Alexander Kipnis, and other artists of the Civic Opera company.

The soloists for the remaining Friday noon concerts of the month at Kimball hall will be: The 9th, Lucy J. Hartman, contralto; 16th, Eugene Dressler, tenor; 23d, the Loring trio.

IN THE WEEK'S MUSIC.

RATA PRESENT. [Apeda Photo.] EDWARD JOHNSON.

BOTH are artists of recognized standing in the musical world. Miss Present, pianist, will make her first Chicago appearance in a recital at Kimball hall Tuesday night. Mr. Johnson, whom John McCormack calls the greatest tenor in the world, once of the Chicago Opera, now of the Metropolitan and Ravinia, will appear at Orchestra hall Wednesday night in a joint recital with Joseph Szigeti, the violinist.

comedy. And this scene is beautifully played by Mr. Lunt and Miss Fontanne.

"Too Sophisticated."

There is a new comedy called "People Don't Do Such Things," that is backed by a good idea, but is disappointing in performance, as so many of them are. The play is builded around one of those familiar first page situations in which a rich young man tries to solve his domestic problem by inducing his wife and his mistress to live in the same house with him. The wife catches him at breakfast with the mistress when she returns unexpectedly from a visit away from home. She divorces him and he marries the mistress.

A year later the divorced wife has become the mistress and the second wife is the surprise visitor at a second breakfast. Whereupon the young husband blandly suggests that so long as they all understand each other so well, why not all live together?

The arrangement is effected, the wives agreeing to decide the question of periodical preference by playing cards. When the luck runs too persistently in favor of one they change to dice. And are then made unhappy by the disappearance of the young man. He has taken up with a third charmer.

In the end all leave him and he is forced to start again at the top of his telephone list.

"I'll tell you what is the matter with you," suggests the show girl who is the third choice, "you are all too darned sophisticated." And they are. So is the play. A typical comedy for the Times square crowd. They like to imagine themselves as moving gracefully among the swell dressers and cheaper epigrammatists.

Two New Musical Shows.

There are two new musical comedies on show. One is called "Funny Face," and was written for Fred and Adele Astaire, the dancers, who have recently returned from successful engagements in London. It is being shown as the opening attraction at another new theater—the Seventy-fourth on Broadway—called the Alvin because "Al" Aarons and "Vin" Freedley built it, or induced some one to build it for them.

"Funny Face" is distinguished principally by its music, written by that leader of the jazzists, George Gershwin. The book does not amount to much. The comedians are Victor Moore and William Kent, and they have at least one joke that pleases the crowd. "Where is your chivalry?" Moore demands of Kent, in a burlesqued scene in which they both get hilariously tight. "O, that old thing," replies Kent. "I sold it and bought a Cadillac."

The other piece is "Take the Air," produced by Gene Buck to signalize his taking over the Waldorf theater as lessee. It is of average quality as entertainment, in which there is an amazing amount of clever dancing and not a great deal of clever talk. Will Mahoney, out of vaudeville, has charge of the comedy and does very well with it. Trini, a beauteous Spanish dancer of extremely limited talent as an actress, is co-starred with Mahoney.

Which is all I have to report at the moment, unless you would be interested in knowing that so far this season we have had 108 new plays and that not more than 35 of them have failed.

Now or Soon in the Theaters

THIS is the calendar for the Chicago theaters as indicated by the resident-managers down to midnight of Friday last. Change of plans since last Sunday's issue has been made with respect for some of the houses:

"Murray Hill," with Miss Genevieve Tobin, in the Princess: a merry and light farce by Leslie Howard. . . . Second week.

"A Night in Spain" in the Four Cohans: a show from the New-York Winter Garden, with Miss Marion Harris, Ted Healy, and Phil Baker heading the long roster of performers. The girls of the chorus and ballet are the prettiest of the season. . . . Second week.

"Outbreak" in the Goodman Memorial: a play by L. W. Vedrenne about how eight persons take the news that the end of the world will be in six days. . . . Third week.

"Heartbreak House" in the Studebaker: a play of Shaw's unacted in Chicago until now. . . . Fourth and final week: "Mr. Pim Passes By" is underlined for the 12th.

"The Play's the Thing!" with Holbrook Blinn in the Harris: a smart and mischievous comedy by Molnar that gives to Mr. Blinn a new opportunity to exhibit his talents as a comedian. This is something well worth an evening plus the cost of a seat. . . . Fourth week.

Fritz Leiber in the Eighth-Street Theater: an earnest and hardworking player of Shakspere in a répertoire. . . . Fourth and final week.

"Countess Maritza" in the Olympic: an operetta by Kalman, who has provided a lovely score. Walter Woolf, Miss Gladys Baxter, Miss Odette Myrtil, Harry K. Morton, and George Dobbs are of the cast. . . . Fifth week.

"Hit the Deck!" in the Woods: a song-and-dance comedy with tunes by Vincent Youmans, composer of "No! No, Nanette!" Miss Queenie Smith, Charles Purcell, and Miss Trixie Friganza are in the principal rôles. . . . Fifth week.

Miss Lenore Ulric in "Lulu Belle" in the Illinois: a piece about a Negress and her progress in seduction from Harlem to Paris. It is popular. . . . Eighth week.

"Broadway" in the Selwyn: a wow of a piece about bootleggers, joint-owners, ham hoofers, chorus-girls, murders, double-crossings, revenges, and other things. . . . Twelfth week.

"Rain" in the Central. . . . Twelfth week.

"The Desert Song" in the Great Northern. . . . Fourteenth week.

"Tommy" in the Cort. . . . Fifteenth week.

Impending.

"Two Girls Wanted" in the Cort. . . . Opens December 25.

"The Good Bad Woman" in the Central. . . . Opens December 25.

"The Squall" in the Adelphi. . . . Opens December 25.

Miss Ethel Barrymore in "The Constant Wife" in the Harris. . . . Opens December 26.

Fred and Dorothy Stone in "Criss Cross" in the Erlanger. . . . Opens December 26.

Mrs. Fiske, Otis Skinner, and Miss Henrietta Crosman in "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in the Illinois. . . . Opens December 26.

Glenn Hunter in "Behold This Dreamer!" in the Blackstone. . . . Opens December 26.

NEW THIS WEEK IN MANHATTAN

"Out of the Sea," by Don Marquis, with Lyn Harding, O. P. Heggie, Rollo Peters, Reginald Barlow, Miss Beatrix Thomon, and Claude Rains. . . . The author, who wrote "The Old Soak," is of New-York popularity as a columnist; and his yen for the theater is such that he even acts whenever he has the opportunity. Miss Thomon is a young actress brought from England for Tessa in "The Constant Nymph"; and Mr. Rains is her husband, and a bully actor.

"Brass Buttons," by John Hunter Booth, with Miss Beryl Mercer and Frank Shannon. . . . The author wrote "The Masquerader." Miss Mercer was in Chicago with the Theater Guild in "Pygmalion"; and Mr. Shannon has been here in "Anna Christie" and "Twelve Miles Out."

"Happy," by Vincent Lawrence and some verse-writers and composers, with Percy Helton, Fred Santley, and Miss Madeleine Fairbanks.

"Trigger," by Lula Vollmer, with Miss Claiborne Foster and Minor Watson. . . . The author is known here for "Sun-Up" and "The Shame-Woman." Miss Foster is among the actresses regarded by my colleagues as great; and Mr. Watson is the smug performer who performed in the La Salle last season in "Howdy, King!"

"The Banshee": an Irish piece carried over from last week.

F. D.

THEY'RE ADDING TO THE SUM OF LAUGHTER

MISS GRACE GEORGE MISS VALERIE VALAIRE

MISS GEORGE is pictured here from a new photograph—the most recent she has had taken in the seasons since, in the farce of "Mlle. Fifi," she first became a somebody of comic acting in the American theater. What Chicago's playgoers should regard as the best stage-news of last week was the announcement, Thursday, that she is to continue here in "The Road to Rome" until the 17th; for the play and her acting therein are among the things that ought to be seen by all who say they care for what is best in the theater.

Miss Valaire is to be observed in the merry, unpretentious, and diverting farce of "Murray Hill," in the Princess: her acting therein of a spinster with a sultry streak come to the surface is cleverly funny. . . . She was here in 1925 as the acid wife in "The Lady Next-Door," in the Cort.

Embarrassing Moments

The Tribune will pay $1 for every letter published on The Most Embarrassing Moment of My Life." Address Embarrassing Moment, The Tribune, Chicago. Write on one side of the paper. No manuscripts returned.

Flad Into the Night.

Having a bad cold, I decided to spend the evening reading, so I plastered my face with clay, pulled down the shades and arranged myself in the easiest chair the living room afforded.

The bell rang and I smiled merrily. As the rain was pelting down I felt sure no one would stand outside that hooked screen door very long.

"Well, Anna, why don't you open the door?" called Jim, the splendid young man who was pursued by the town girls. "You look queer," he added.

Dropping the hot water bag, I stared wildly out. He was staring at me through the vestibule window, which gave a good view of the picture I made. I'd forgotten that shade. Either the rain or my appearance daunted him for, after one wild look at my face, he disappeared. L. R. M.

Looking for the Baby.

I believe I have seldom been as embarrassed as I was a few days ago when I called on a boy friend in the hospital and took with me as chaperon my young niece, Betty.

Betty, it seems, had had previous experience in hospitals. She had been several times to see a friend of her mother's who had a small baby.

My boy friend was carefully inspected from every side of the bed and finally Betty looked at him in disgust.

"Where is the baby?" she asked.

Entertaining.

I was anticipating an invitation to a dance from a boy I was particularly anxious to please and had told mother I was going with him, basing the fact on my keen anticipation.

One evening, while entertaining this particular fellow, mother turned to him and said: "What night is it you two are going to the masquerade?"

In the rush that followed I lost my composure and, alas, the boy friend.

"Good Morning!" Mae Tinee gives you the "inside" every morning on Screenland's latest offerings.

The Voice of the Movie Fan

If you would like your letters printed in this column, please write on ONE SIDE of the paper ONLY. If you want a personal answer, send stamped, self-addressed envelope—please!

Not What It Appears to Be.

Miss Mae Tinée: Why, O, why, did they let them name a movie "Lightning" when we always will associate that name with our beloved Frank Bacon? When I saw the heading this morning I thought they had either revived that beloved classic, or done it again. I should think they could have given the picture some other name, or changed it a little. I don't believe there was ever an actor as universally liked as Frank Bacon and "Lightning" was his best known play. It is nothing against the picture, as a picture—simply against using that name.

I see that several disagreed with me about "The Big Parade." Well, I expected that, but one girl seemed to have gotten the idea that I like war and wanted it to be bad. It is not what I want, but what war is. If it is done as is, maybe a lot of people will be so anxious to get into another one.

I saw a good many boys who saw it (their folks when they got home, because they found it so horrible. I think it would have been fine if, in the midst of such a terrible thing, they could have had some good times, but I don't believe they did. Perhaps those in training camps did, or those who never got to the front, but I don't think it was possible for those who were in the thick of it.

One correspondent also said I would probably be bored to death with "Rookies." I didn't see that one, but did see "Behind the Front" and enjoyed it. That was a burlesque and wasn't intended to be taken seriously and that is something else again, but when a thing is advertised as a "great epic of the war" you expect something realistic. If it had been advertised as "a great love story," it would have titled the picture better. G. C. S.

Panning an Old One.

Dear Madam: You probably noticed the flagrant miscasting of "Nomads of the North." Lewis Stone, instead of the aristocratic or sophisticated rôle he usually plays, was a half comedy mounted policeman; one "who always gets his man," but in this case only gets the baby. Lon Chaney was the dead and handsome lover. Of course, Lon can play anything, but——. Worst of all, Betty Blythe was in a part that required her to wear a lot of clothes.

Thought while seeing "The Poor Nut":

Perhaps admiration of Rudolph Valentino was carried to the verge of hysteria. Yet, while fairly hard boiled, I would rather see him in one of his romantic rôles that called for the gorgeous costumes that he wore so well, than see an incredible nut prance around in his underwear—and less.

J. W. F.

EDITOR'S NOTE—The first picture you mention is an old one reissued; which accounts for a lot of things. Write again some time.

Music Notes

Two more orchestras will add their contributions to today's collection of music. The People's Symphony orchestra will play the first of a series of ten concerts at the Eighth Street theater under the direction of P. Marinus Paulsen. In the evening Ethel Leginska will wield a baton over the first of six programs by the Woman's Symphony orchestra at the Goodman theater. A featured number of the concert will be the first performance of a piano concerto composed and played by Theodora Troendle.

The Fannie Bloomfield Zeisler memorial program will take place at Orchestra hall Thursday afternoon at 4 o'clock. Prof. Graham Taylor will preside. The speakers will be Julia Lathrop, Charles H. Hamill, Karleton Hackett and Wallace Rice. The musical program will be given by Mrs. Olive Dux-Swift, soprano; Arthur Dunham, organist, and the Gordon string quartet.

BARTLETT SIMMONS

He's a familiar figure in the shows sent hither by the Messrs. Shubert as revues; and he's now in the one they call "A Night in Spain": 'tis in the Four Cohans.

Silent Film Doomed? Won't Be Long Now - - - - - - - -

By Rosalind Shaffer

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

HOLLYWOOD, Cal.—[Special Correspondence.]—The Vitaphone, now that it has been in use for several months, has got to the place where a little can be told about the future of talking movie contrivances in the industry.

Hailed as revolutionary by its backers, the Warner Brothers, the Vitaphone patent was considered a dubious proposition by many. With the passing of the months and the success of "The Jazz Singer," with Al Jolson, together with the popularization of Movietone and other devices, several things have been learned about the possible future, present uses, and needs of the "talking movies."

It is conceded by Anthony Coldeway, who has written the bulk of the Vitaphone scenario material since the first voice movie became workable, that a complete production of talking motion pictures is unlikely to be made. This because, by its nature, a motion picture has a more condensed story and action than a stage drama, which relies for effect so much on voice instead of action.

Not Practical for Long Film.

Most movie men, like Coldeway, express conviction that the speaking parts cannot possibly run through an entire film, for the simple reason that they would extend a story to a tedious length and rob it of punch. To the audience a whole film of talking movies would become tedious and unpopular.

A big field for combining sound and pictures has been discovered, and that San Francisco" this was first tried with the Vitaphone intensifying the quake scenes with crashes and screams. In "Glorious Betsy" the dominant motif of the story is introduced at intervals with the use of the opera singer, Andres de Segurola, doing the Marseillaise.

In mystery and fantasy plays and, as one might imagine, with such plays as Maeterlinck's "Blue Bird," or "Peer Gynt," sound effects would aid in developing the story to its climax or would convey atmospheric background suitable for the scenes. In such respects the scientists employed by the movies predict that voice and picture films have a limitless future.

Scenario writers are being obliged to allow for a new factor in their stories. One sequence that will allow for Vitaphone interpretation is desirable.

Actors with stage experience are being sought for Vitaphone work. For instance, John Miljan, for several years a popular "heavy" in pictures, is being made a leading man as the reward for his usefulness in Vitaphone short skits. Miljan was a leading man on the stage for several years in the east.

Dialect actors, such as Charlie Murray or the old Weber and Fields type, often go over better in Vitaphone numbers than in regular screen work. Many a stage comedian has gone flat on the screen when his funny stuff involved dialect. Talking films should be a haven for such.

American Actors Rebel.

Resentment of native born American film actors against the "foreign invasion" reached a climax in Hollywood with the introduction of resolutions at an actors' mass meeting seeking to deport some and exclude others from entering the United States. Feeling ran so high that an exclusion effort was the nub of an argument at the recent Actors' Equity meeting. Many were in favor of resolutions being sent to the state department at Washington asking for enforcement of the laws on immigration in regard to actors and actresses from foreign countries.

There are many such in Hollywood who entered originally on a six months' visitor's leave and who have illegally remained because the immigration authorities were unable to keep up with their changes of names or addresses.

The Yarn of the Vest.

Still another chapter may be added to the superstitions of actors. Bernard Gorcey, the famous Isaac Cohen in "Abie's Irish Rose" when it played its long run on Broadway, has a good luck vest. Now that he is playing in the film version of the play, he has brought the vest with him to Hollywood.

It's all that is left of a suit that was left forty years ago in the cleaning establishment of his father on the east side. The owner was killed in a runaway accident before he could recover the garment from Gorcey's tailor shop. That day the baby Bernard was born and Papa Gorcey kept the suit, as it seemed an omen.

When Gorcey grew up his dad gave it to him and it brought him good luck, he says, and he wore it in some way in every rôle he played for years, till finally in "Abie" the suit gave out and the vest alone remains.

Except for the unholy appetites of New York moths, the black and white checks stand forth as of old. It will be in his screen costume.

Bustles Are Back.

Ladies who find the adipose tissue collects in places where it seems impossible to remove it by any means short of starvation may take hope. On top of the repeated rumors that the curves are swelling into the foreground of fashion comes the definite announcement that the bustle is the last word in women's fashions.

Colleen Moore has a new ball gown of shaded light green, peach, and mauve chiffon with a long V-pointed basque waist, the V outlined in rhinestones and a beautiful voluminous and puffy bustle in the back. This is particularly interesting on Colleen, who evidently is trying to counteract the boyish effect she has made such a vogue in the last couple of years.

On the Screen Again.

Estelle Taylor, who was absent from the screen for a year, though under contract, now has completed a picture for First National that bids fair to be a wow, according to Director Alan Dwan's possibly optimistic ideas. Antonio Moreno plays opposite Estelle. The picture is "The Whip Woman."

As the village virago, armed with a huge whip, Estelle defends herself against forcible admirers in the war-racked Hungarian village, hence the title. Living alone, she makes her living doing a man's work on her tiny farm and as a waitress in the village inn. Moreno, as a nobleman hunted by bolsheviki, is saved and hadden by her.

A love story develops which carries the pair into strong drama. In one scene the whip woman, in rage and disappointment because her lover loses faith in her, offers herself to the crowd in the village inn, to be taken by the victor in a fight. The fight with knives is real excitement.

Another scene is more idyllic, showing the happy lovers in the midst of the grape festival with the villagers dancing. It affords Miss Taylor opportunity for the fiery and tempestuous rôles in which she exults. Estelle appears fragile since her recent illness.

News of Films and Players.

Consideration never afforded the aviators during the world war is being given the pilots flying the airplanes for "Hell's Angels," in which Greta Nissen and Ben Lyon are co-featured at United Artists. Each pilot is fitted with a parachute to carry strapped to his back. In addition, much modernizing has been done to the planes assembled. More than seventy planes are being used, including old war planes totaling in wartime valuation $518,100.

A pawnshop transaction takes Hazel Deane into court as a plaintiff, the actress suing her erstwhile friend, Florence Engstrom, for $5,185. Miss Deane's court papers accuse Miss Engstrom of withholding the proceeds of three diamond rings which Hazel left with Florence in order to raise money. A pawn ticket for other jewelry also holds a place in the young women's financial tangle.

Raymond Hatton is getting a great break. After flying to Chicago to attend a convention, and a wedding, and so on, he gets news that oil has been discovered under the land he bought for a beach house at Muscle rock, near Santa Barbara.

When Stuart Harding Schulberg, 5 year old son of the Paramount executive, celebrated his birthday last week he had eighteen movie kids as guests and each of the eighteen was completely garbed in cowboy regalia. Mamas and papas of the movie colony had been tagged for the child size Bill Hart regalia for weeks.

A few rodeo stunts which could be crammed into the Schulberg back yard on Lorraine boulevard entertained the kids in the afternoon, with Paramount cameramen shooting film of it all.

D. W. Griffith was trying to give some instructions for "Drums of Love" retakes to Don Alvarado, Mary Philbin, and Lionel Barrymore. Every time D. W. opened his mouth one studio carpenter aloft on the sets began pounding industriously. The actors failed to hear Griffith. This was repeated several times, until the hammering completely silenced the megaphoning. Finally came a lull from the carpenter. Shooting his voice at the workman, Griffith yelled, "Start your hammering, boy; you forgot your cue."

STRIKINGLY SUPERIOR STAGE SHOW AT MARBRO TOMORROW

Benny Meroff's "WOODLAND FANTASY" is a prodigious production with not one but many stars. It has singularly beautiful settings and an unsurpassable cast. Marks Bros. are proud to give West Siders a show so markedly superior to anything to be found in Chicago. Margaret White, the latest sensational "blues" singer and dancer, a star of today, heads the list of stage celebrities. In "WOODLAND FANTASY" Marks Bros. have set another mark in stage presentations, enormously superior to "canned" entertainment, and a triumph of stagecraft.

10 YEARS AGO in Chicago's THEATERS

From The Sunday Tribune of Dec. 3, 1917:

MR. ZIEGFELD is not among those gaunt and hungry showmen who, with ample reasons, vent their complainings in time of famine. His "Follies" prospers, and, although the increased revenues are insufficient to offset enlarged taxation and expenses, he is content.

Urged by his diffident outrunner, Mr. Friedman, to print nothing about the receipts of the "Follies," one yet may say that its current ramblings, according to Variety, draw an average of $25,000 each week. In Pittsburgh, a munitions center, the intake was just under $35,000, and in Cleveland and Detroit, other favored war marts, earnings similarly gross are expected. "The Passing Show" flourishes likewise.

Since it is not realized generally how important are the contributions of these enterprises to the cost of the war, a moment's calculation may be forgiven. Without counting the income, corporation, railroad, excess, supper, and other taxes of the owners of the shows and performers, the extra bit paid at the ticket window cuts a considerable figure. For instance, if the "Follies" maintains its average income during its nine weeks at the Illinois, the ticket tax alone will buy all the food for a company of 200 soldiers for nearly a year—321 days, to be more or less exact.

Mrs. Castle's dancing in "Miss 1917," at the Century theater in New York, displeased the management so much that she is now devoting all her time to the manufacture of nickel shows. Other artists who have been separated from the same revue are Adolf Bohm, a Russian dancer; Mlle. Flora Revelles, another Russian dancer, and George White, a dancer.

Another worthy drama nipped by the untimely frost of nonattendance is Shaw's "Messalliance," which subsided somewhere in the suburbs the other night. It was one of William Faversham's ambitious enterprises. Miss Grace George's production of "L'Elevation" has also laid the burden down.

Harry Lauder, abhorring the indifference of the French Canadians to the war, told them what he thought of them last week at a banquet in Montreal. The mayor of the city says that Mr. Lauder's aspersions were "infamous," and that all the French Canadians "want to do is live in peace and harmony."

Henry W. Savage, having chosen "Tut-Tut" as the title of one of his new entertainments, resents, with asperity, the intention of Messrs. Comstock and Elliott to christen one of theirs "Toot-Toot." On the eve of the presentation of a new farce Mr. Frazee, the producer, changes its caption from "Oh, John," to "Oh, James."

20 YEARS AGO

From the Sunday Tribune of Dec 1, 1907.

"The Merry Widow," the musical sensation of the day, now being sung simultaneously in Vienna, Berlin, Rome, St. Petersburg, Copenhagen, London, and several other European capitals, as well as in New York, will be revealed to Chicago theatergoers tomorrow evening at the Colonial. Manager Henry W. Savage, with his usual forethought and consideration, has organized a special company to present the operetta here, knowing that the New York engagement is likely to be of such long duration that at least another season would pass before the eastern cast could be brought here.

It is promised that the Chicago organization in general excellence will surpass that of Gotham, and with this aim in view Mme. Lina Abarbanell has been engaged to sing the rôle of the widow, Sonia. George Damerell, a Chicago singer, will have the rôle of Prince Danilo, and Fred Frear, as Nish, doubtless will duplicate his New York success in the same comedy part. Among the others in the company will be Percy F. Ames, Miss Reba Dale, Carl Haydn, Dwight Williams, Stanley Jessup, and Miss Doris Meek.

It is fitting that E. M. Holland, around whose stage career are entwined so many pleasant memories and whose life for many years has been associated so closely with much that has been among the best and finest in American dramatic art, at last should be brought forward as a lone star. Tonight Mr. Holland will accomplish his debut, in this connection, at the Garrick, when he will appear in the dramatization of the Meredith Nicholson novel, "The House of a Thousand Candles," arranged by George Middleton.

Kellar and Thurston, magicians and illusionists, come to McVicker's theater tonight for an engagement of one week. Their joint program will include a number of novelties, the principal features of which will be "The Specter Cabinet," "The Phantom Bridal Chamber," "The Prisoner of Canton," and "Princess Kiyo." Mr. Kellar announces his present tour as positively his farewell, and to emphasize this statement he is bringing Mr. Thurston forward as his successor.

PUT IN TO BETTER IT

MISS HELEN LA VONNE

SHE'S newly in "Hit the Deck!" in the part of the girl with money and position who has a weakness for sailors, and marries one in time to pair off with him in the line-up for the finale. . . . The writer of these words hasn't seen Miss La Vonne in her employment; and he is without knowledge of her Chicago past. But he goes so far as to say that she simply must be better than the incumbent of the part in the Chicago opening.

My Greatest Thrill

Write and tell us about the greatest thrill you ever experienced, and if we print your letter we'll pay you $1. Make your letters short and snappy. Address them to "Greatest Thrill" Editor The Chicago Tribune.

In Colorado.

After it had rained torrents all night long at Manitou, Colo., word came that no trains were running, so we spent the day tramping the streets, watching Roxton creek getting blacker and angrier.

Soon the merchants began to remove their stock to safety and late in the afternoon three houses were washed away. After supper, as we were talking over the excitement of the day, a blue coat walked in.

"They've just telephoned the Pike's pear reservoir is leaking and the cog road went out about dark," he announced.

"We'll all be drowned," one woman screamed.

"The Navajo hotel is the safest place in Manitou," the policeman told her. "If the reservoir breaks the watchman will telephone and the fire whistle will blow. There'll be plenty of time to get up on the hill out of the way—but I would not go to sleep."

Can you imagine the night we had? With our travelers' checks and tickets pinned inside our clothes, we waited—years it seemed. Just at daybreak the shrill siren made our blood run cold. Strange, but no one screamed. Every one took his belongings and climbed the hill in safety.

When we later learned that the reservoir had been saved, that the whistle brought out extra workers to pile sacks of sand in dangerous places and that the city of Pueblo had been wiped out and hundreds of lives lost, we knew we had had the greatest thrill of our lives. M. L. B.

Art Notes

Among the sales which have been made from the exhibition of American paintings and sculpture current at the Art institute are: "Devotion," a wood block carving by Carl Hallstammer, whose work is always clever and unusual; "A Gift of Fruit," by Carl Schmitt; "Summer Day," by Carl Wuermer; "Still Life," by William Meyerowitz; "Study," by Karl Obert-teuffer; and "Valencia," by Arthur G. Rider.

"What's in a name?" Four of these six artists who have sold their work have the given name of Carl, one of the meaningless coincidences which lends humor to workaday fact.

The Friends of American Art have recently given to the Art institute permanent collection a beautiful painting by Thomas Eakins, called "Music." Eakins was born in Philadelphia in 1844 and died in 1916. He received his training in art chiefly in America and France. In France he studied under Gerome. As a matter of information, Thomas Eakins is usually classed as a painter of the Hudson River school, one of the most important of the early groups in the development of American art.

This week on Tuesday afternoon in Fullerton hall there will be a concert given by the Little Symphony ensemble, George Dasch, conductor. Next week the lecture will be given by Dr. Arthur Upham Pope, advisory curator of Mohammedan art of the Chicago Art institute. The following two weeks there will be no lecture, as Dec. 20 and Dec. 27 fall within the Christmas recess.

DANCES

PEGGY

She's called just that in the playbills, although, doubtless, Peggy is merely part of her rightful name—or it may be that it is no part of it. . . . And Peggy, with Cortez, is doing her dancing at present in "A Night in Spain," in the Four Cohans.

New York Is Impressed by Roman Polyphonic Singers

By Alfred Frankenstein.

NEW YORK, Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Another Italian choir has hit these shores. On the heels of the Florentines come the Roman Polyphonic Singers, a band picked organization taken from the choirs of Roman basilicas, and directed by Mons. Raffaele Casimiri, canon of St. John Lateran.

Casimiri is the man to whom all musical scholars turn for the final word on the music of Palestine. Thus it was not surprising to hear his choir sing a program half made up of the works of this composer. They were sung not only with the well oiled balance expected in such an illustrious groups of singers; qualities of spiritual conviction came over with the voices. Choral singing, one felt, was no relaxation for these men and boys. It is their most important work, and sounds all about them, and soaks through their skins.

Violinists keep coming along. Yelly d'Aranyi, the Hungarian fiddler, made her American debut. It was an event that recalled to mind the debut of another Hungarian violinist, Erika Morini, the fire eater and sword swallower who swept through our concert halls a few years ago. D'Aranyi is an older, soberer Morini. Her performances remind you less of the Fourth of July and you remember her more strongly on Thanksgiving day.

They have revived Bellini's "Norma" at the Metropolitan, after a silence of thirty years. It was a big hit, and should prove one of the big attractions of future years. It is due entirely and completely to Bellini's score.

There has been plenty of [illegible] stuff about this revival. [illegible] selle and Lauri-Volpi have had a hand in the press and the opera. But if personality put over "Turandot" should be a success instead of a dud. It is the music, nothing but the music, that sells tickets for "Norma."

There are, it may be said, two kinds of composers. Those who revise, and those who don't revise, and [illegible] oughtn't ever to start. Bellini seems, was of the second type.

"Norma" is an endless [illegible] of tunes, almost any one of which, properly handled, could have made the work in which it appears. Indeed most of these melodies are among the things one finds at the top of books of scale and chord exercises. the clarinet is slightly beside the point. For Bellini was not César Franck, accepting the premise of Bellini one can find genius and delight.

Of new music there has been little. The Musical Forum presented Mme. Kurenko, soprano, and Ivan Ivantzoff, tenor, formerly with the Chicago Civic opera, in a program of arias and duets from opera of Rimsky-Korsakoff, which are unknown here. These things, like "Tsar Saltan," "Sadko," and "Christmas Eve" somehow rang a little false. Perhaps it was because they were sung by the Russian orchestra to last year's up.

DELEGATES TAKE NEW RADIO PACT TO 79 COUNTRIES

Treaty Goes Into Effect on Jan. 1, 1929.

Delegates from 79 nations of the world employing radio for international communications are on their way to their home governments bearing the draft of the Washington convention of 1927, the first treaty covering all of the international uses of radio, which was completed in Washington after nearly two months of effort.

The original treaty will be retained by the state department at Washington, where the exchange of ratifications will also take place.

The Washington convention of 1927, adopted under the leadership of the president of the conference, Herbert Hoover, represents the concurrence of diplomatic and technical opinion of nearly every country in the world that uses radio in one form or another with one exception.

Russia Not Invited.

Soviet Russia was not invited to the Washington conference because of the absence of diplomatic relations with America. The document must be ratified separately by each of the countries represented in Washington before it becomes the law of the land.

The major accomplishments of the international Radiotelegraph conference were these: [1] The allocation of frequency bands to the various international radio services; [2] regulation for the first time in history of the use of radio within a country whenever it affects radio in other countries; [3] assignment for the first time in history of exclusive call signals to the various countries that would be recognized internationally; [4] fixing of standard rates on all ship to shore and shore to ship radio telegrams; [5] rigid sules, supplementing the allocations, and including the classification of wave emissions, and types of apparatus and the certification of wave emissions, and types of apparatus and the certification of qualified operators, designed to prevent interference between the various services.

United States Agrees.

The document covered these and other subjects in technical and exhaustive detail, and while itself becoming international and hence national law, was designed also to serve as a basis for further domestic legislation in each country to carry out its intents and purposes. In so far as the United States is concerned, this country, upon ratification of the treaty by congress, adheres to all provisions save those which apply rules for government operation of stations to private commercial stations.

The treaty takes on a dual nature for the United States, whose delegation at the ouset reserved the right to divide the regulations into two annexes, only one of which it would sign. This was for the purpose of saving private enterprise, which operates the American radio service, from the rigid rules that characterize government operated commercial enterprises.

The American program band is unaffected either by the allocation scale or by the regulations. The treaty provides a new basis for regulated marine radio, which is by far the most important form of radio. Definite recognition of the application of radio to the aeronautic service is contained in liberal provisions for communications with aircraft throughout the treaty.

Inside the Loud Speaker

By Quin A. Ryan, W-G-N Announcer

GEORGE, the porter, was shining our shoes in the office while Frank Dahm was quietly reading the stock quotations into a microphone on the desk before him. George looked up, and rolled his eyes, and whispered, "Mister Ryan, do you mean to say dat man's actually broadcasting right now?"

And we said, yes, he was.

"Gracious," said George, "I thought all dis broadcasting was jes' hollerin'."

George doesn't know how near right he was!

RADIO entertainment may be at its pleasantest when the listener is engaged in reading or playing cards or chatting across a room or half dozing on a davenport. Passively, it may be enjoyed equally in a crowd or alone. The automatic element in radio—running for hours without adjustments, windings, or mechanical attention—heightens this enjoyment. And it is then that orchestra music, leisurely or lively, is most appreciated. It is good to see more and more stations adding a string trio to the offerings that may be enjoyed in this manner.

Then is the time when portions of a program that demand definite attention, such as addresses, playlets, readings, advertisements, and bulletins bound in on this audience as something hard on the ears, and when wordy announcements bring a positive jar.

But it is not to be expected that we must eliminate all matter from radio programs that requires conscious listening in the reception. The passive listeners constitute a goodly chunk of the radio audience. The best radio program, then, must be the one that will please both the audience that pays conscious attention and the passive audience that doesn't.

THE NUMBER OF folks who are desirous of taking piano lessons via the radio is phenomenal. Last year Edward Barry, pianist and instructor on the staff of W-G-N, inaugurated a practice of broadcasting piano lessons. The idea took on and applications for enrollment in the class poured in.

A month ago, the new season's class was announced. To date four thousand pupils have written their desires of enrolling and following the weekly lessons. They represent thirty states of the union and four provinces of Canada.

That they are sincere and assiduous students, never playing hookey or losing interest after entering the class, is proven by their continuous comments. Their ages range from six to seventy.

They receive from Mr. Barry printed lessons in advance, and they follow these with him, each one seated at the piano and repeating the notes he instructs them to sound.

It is astonishing—this widespread desire on the part of the public to learn to play the piano, and this faculty of the radio to offer such public service!

WE HAVE received so many requests for the poem on George Gipp, read during the Notre Dame-Southern California game, that the only thing we can do is reprint here:

GEORGE GIPP

(George Gipp died on Dec. 13, 1920, after playing his last game against Northwestern some three weeks previous. Probably no football hero at Cartier field, Notre Dame, had been so idolized and beloved by the Notre Dame student body. In the years of his playing at Notre Dame his position at half back on the All-American honor teams was never challenged. During his final illness two thousand students knelt daily in tears and prayer for his recovery. He was buried during a blinding snowstorm on the shore of Lake Superior, in his native town of Laurium, Mich., a mining village.)

The little town in Michigan
  Is tucked beneath the snows.
A norther from Superior
  Is calling as it blows.
Full many a hundred yards or more
  Lie down the village street
And seem to wait the darting pass
  Of famous clested feet.

The mining shafts of Laurium
  Are goal posts in the gloaming,
And the treetops sound a whistle
  To the copper miner's homing.
A murmur's in the wind today
  To all the native hearers,
And whirling gusts from far Canuck
  Are twenty thousand cheerers.

The game is on! And through the snow
  The northers sweep and dip,
The wind is calling signals
  To its brother half back, Gipp!

The Indiana prairie lands
  Are blanketed with snow;
The golden dome of Notre Dame
  Regilds the sundown glow.
On the medieval campus,
  In the early frosty flurry,
Two thousand men are barking
  To the wind's uneasy scurry.

A rat-a-tat of flying feet
  Is borne from Cartier,
Tho' the gridiron now is barren
  And the dusk is in the air.
Is it Army, Purple, Georgia?
  Is it scores they now remember?
Or classic catches, leaps and runs,
  This evening in December?

The game is on! And o'er the field,
  The word on every lip,
The wind is calling signals
  To its brother half back, Gipp!

1927 GRID YEAR TO BE HONORED AT FAMILY PARTY

An hour of collegiate music and frolic, celebrating the close of the football season, will be broadcast in the family party program put on the air each Monday night by W-G-N, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel, and a chain of 26 other stations.

Robert C. Benchley, popular humorist and dramatic editor of Life, will be at the microphone as master of ceremonies, with pertinent reports on his own, specially selected and patented "All-American" team from "Benchley College," satirically presented as a contender for honors against Grantland Rice's regular All-American squad of 1927. A Harvard man himself, still in his thirties, with wide experience in light theatricals, Benchley promises to crowd into the hour of entertainment a stirring 60 minutes of undergraduate fun and sentiment.

Benchley's comment will be supplemented by the popular songs of the leading colleges throughout the country for the enjoyment of their alumni and others listening in over the wide area covered by the chain—the biggest used for any regular entertainment series. An augmented and specially drilled band will provide the music, with instrumentation particularly arranged for college airs.

CAPITAL HOTEL INSTALLS RADIO FOR ITS GUESTS

Just as they have music rooms and concert halls, one of the large apartment hotels in Washington has a radio room. Here chairs are arranged row upon row as in an ordinary assembly hall.

On the platform in front is a receiving set and a loud speaker, usually tuned in on the principal local broadcasting station. Guests drop in of an afternoon or evening to hear the program, much the same as they used to sit around the lobby listening to the orchestra.

Europe to Hear Radio Talks Delivered from Air

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

LONDON, Dec. 3.—Highly successful broadcasting from an airplane has just been carried out over Vienna. The voice of the announcer who was sent up with the plane, was so distinctly heard in the city below that it is planned to have a series of short lectures delivered from airplanes.

Werrenrath, One of Radio's Favorites, Sings Tonight

Old English lyrics and ballads and old time concert favorites will feature the program of Reinald Werrenrath, America's premier baritone, in the Atwater Kent hour, broadcast tonight through W-G-N, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE station, and a nation-wide hookup.

The high spot of the program, however, will be Wagner's "Song to the Evening Star," from Tannhauser, in which critics regard Werrenrath as at his best. This is the opera in which Werrenrath's father frequently sang in Wiesbaden and London.

Werrenrath has proved so unmistakably a favorite with radio audiences that his appearance "on the air" has become almost a gala event. His last two appearances before the "mike" were on the occasion of the Lindbergh reception in Washington, last summer, and as featured singer at the Radio Industries banquet in New York, in September.

His singing of "Danny Deever" during the Lindbergh reception received such high praise from the nation-wide audience on that occasion that it will be sung again, as will another favorite with Werrenrath's audience, Tosti's "Good-by."

Werrenrath's long and successful career on the concert stage has practically eclipsed his operatic career and few now recall that he was for three seasons a member of the Metropolitan Opera company, having been surprised with an invitation to join that supreme organization in the early days of his concert work.

Ford and Glenn Coming Back to Station WLS

Ford and Glenn, popular radio entertainers, known as the Lullaby Boys, are coming back to WLS. They will be heard again on WLS programs starting Dec. 23. Ford Rush and Glenn Rowell were on the first program broadcast by WLS on April 12, 1924, and boardcast steadily until about a year ago when they left Chicago to fill special theatrical engagements in the east.

DR. N. M. BUTLER TALKS ON PEACE AT KOA, DENVER

Denver, Colo. Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia university and among the world's leading authorities on international relations, will speak on "The Path to Peace" over radio station KOA Thursday, Dec. 15.

His talk will begin at 12:45 p. m., mountain time. High schools, colleges and clubs throughout the west are planning special radio meetings to hear Dr. Butler's opinions from his own lips.

His address will be notable at this time because of his part in drafting a proposed treaty between the United States and France, outlawing war, which will be considered by the next congress.

Dr. Butler is being brought to Denver by the foundation for the advancement of the social sciences of the University of Denver.

$2,000,000 FOR PROGRAMS.

It has been estimated that more than $2,000,000 will be spent for radio talent alone in sponsored programs during 1928.

Ask the Man Who Owns a HOWARD!

FOUR years ago the manager of the Tatch-A-Radio Shop noticed an advertisement regarding a Packard Automobile which read: "Ask the man who owns one." He being in the market for a new car, not only asked one, but several. Every one he asked gave him the same answer, which was, "Nothing but a Packard for me." . . . He bought one. Today ask him. He has driven that car ninety-one thousand miles without taking up a bearing, and can still say, "Excuse my dust." Why? Because it was quality built, like a Howard radio. A Howard radio will bring you ninety-one thousand miles of distance. Ask the man who owns a Howard, then buy one and tell the rest to "Excuse your dust." You will get all you expect in radio from a Howard—tone quality—selectivity—distance.

MORE THAN HALF OF WORLD'S RADIO STATIONS IN U. S.

685 Here; 431 in 57 Other Countries.

The United States has more radio broadcasting stations than all the rest of the world combined. The department of commerce, through its electrical equipment division, has prepared a new list of broadcasting stations and this report shows that programs for the public are now provided by 431 stations in 57 foreign countries, as against 685 now operating in the United States and its territories. Europe has 196; North America, outside the United States, 128; South America, 52; Asia, 18; Oceania, 28, and Africa, 9.

This country also continues to hold front rank with its high powered broadcasting stations at Schenectady, Pittsburgh, Boundbrook, N. J., and Bellmore, L. I., all 50,000 watt transmitters. Outside the United States, the most poweful broacasting stations are those at Motala, Sweden, and Moscow, Russia, each using 40,000 watts. Russia also has a 20,000 watt station at Moscow and one using 10,000 watts at Leningrad. The Netherlands is said to be planning a station which will use more than 40,000 watts. Daventry, England, operates on 16,000 watts.

Big Soviet Station?

Not long ago it was rumored that an agent of the Russian soviet government, who pretended to be representing private interests, succeeded in purchasing a 100,000 watt transmitter from the General Electric. It is also said that he wanted at first to purchase a station of 500,000 watts power, but the manufacturer would not or could not undertake a job of such magnitude. If this be true, that station is not yet in operation, according to the new list.

Stations in England, which number 20, are controlled by an independent government broadcasting commission, which differs from our federal radio commission in that the government actually operates all British stations. Governments own and operate 77 stations abroad, associations and institutions, 87; commercial and industrial establishments, 69; broadcasting companies, 127, and private citizens, 33. Of the government stations, two are municipal, sixteen provincial, and 59 national. Radio organizations are reported to operate 65 of the 87 stations in the organization group, church organizations 6, and educational institutions 5.

Ones U. S. May Hear.

The following is a list of the high powered stations across Europe which American listeners with exceptional receivers may at least hope to receive:

Vienna, Austria, no call signals given, using 7,000 watts power and a wave length of 517.2 meters; OKP, Prague, Czechoslovakia, 5,000 watts, 384.9 meters; Warsaw, Poland, 8,000 watts, 1,111.1 meters; RA42, Leningrad, Russia, 10,000 watts, 1,000 meters; RA1, Moscow, Russia, 40,000 watts, 1,500 meters, and RA3, also in Moscow, 20,000 watts, 675 meters. Neither Paris nor Berlin have high powered stations.

Motala, Sweden, no call letters, 40,000 watts, 1,304.5 meters, and Station 5XX at Daventry, England, 16,000 watts, 1,600 meters.

Station CFCF, Montreal, frequently heard in the United States, operates on 410.7 meters, using 1,650 watts, the highest in all the provinces. Cuba and Mexico have not yet felt the need of high powered stations. Outside of a 2,000 watt station in Mexico, CYJ at Mexico City, 500 watts seems to be high, with 100 and 200 watt stations prevailing.

As summed up, the division of stations by countries gives Canada 59; Cuba, 47; Russia, 38; Sweden, 30; Australia and Germany each 24; Argentina, 22; United Kingdom, 20; France and Mexico each 18; Spain, 15; Brazil, 12; Chile, 9; Finland, 7; Switzerland, 6, and Austria, 5. There are 4 each in Belgium, Czecho-Slovakia, Uruguay, India, Netherlands, East Indies, and New Zealand; 3 each in Italy, Poland, China, Japan, and South Africa; 2 each in Denmark, Esthonia, Hungary, Irish Free State, Norway, Portugal, Bolivia, and Algeria, and 1 each in Iceland, Latvia, Lithuania, Luxemburg, Netherlands, Turkey, Jugo-Slavia, Costa Rica, Haiti, Paraguay, Peru, Venezuela, Ceylon, Chosen, Kwangtung, Etraits Settlements, Canary islands, Egypt, Morocco, and Tunisia.

WEEKLY BRIDGE LESSON FROM W-G-N

THE sixth of a series of twenty radio auction bridge games will be broadcast from W-G-N, The Chicago Tribune station on the Drake hotel, on Tuesday at 9 p. m.

Each game of the series features Milton C. Work and Wilbur C. Whitehead, New York experts, in association with players from other cities in America and Canada. The listeners in are urged to have four players ready with cards and to follow the game bid by bid and play by play with the experts.

The contestants in the sixth game are Joseph W. Evans of Houston, Tex., who plays with Mr. Work against Mrs. E. L. Bradbury of Dallas, Tex., well known in the south as an expert player and successful teacher of auction bridge, and Mr. Whitehead.

Following are the advance hands for game six:

MR. WORK.
Spades—J, 9, 8, 3
Hearts—Q, 2
Diamonds—10, 7, 6, 5, 2
Clubs—9, 8

MR. WHITEHEAD. Spades—K, Q, 10, 5, 4 Hearts—9, 7, 6 Diamonds—Q, 8 Clubs—K, 10, 5

MRS. BRADBURY. Spades—2 Hearts—K, 10, 4 Diamonds—A, K, J, 4, 3 Clubs—A, Q, 7 4

MR. EVANS, Dealer. Spades—A, 7, 6 Hearts—A, J, 8, 5, 3 Diamonds—9 Clubs—J, 6, 3, 2

Keen defensive playing by Mr. Whitehead was perhaps the outstanding feature of the fifth of this season's radio bridge games broadcast last Tuesday from station W-G-N, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE station. Mr. Whitehead had for his partner one of the leading players and writers of the northwest, Miss Annie B. Shelby of Portland, Ore., while Mr. Work's partner was a Californian of note in the bridge world, Mrs. Catherine A. Streeter of Los Angeles.

Mrs. Streeter, the dealer (south), had no choice but to pass with these cards: Spades, 6, 5, 3; hearts, A, 9; diamonds, 8, 5, 2; clubs, J, 10, 9, 7, 6. Miss Shelby, west, also held a worthless hand: Spades, K, J, 8, 7, 2; hearts, 5, 4, 3; diamonds, 7, 4, 3; clubs, 3, 2.

Mr. Work (north) opened the bidding, third hand, with one no trump, on these cards: Spades, A, Q, 10; hearts, Q, 10, 7, 6; diamonds, A, Q, 6; clubs, K, 8, 5. In connection with this bid, Mr. Work gave his test for deciding whether a hand is strong enough for an original third hand no trump, which requires an ace or its equivalent better than average strength, with three suits stopped. In valuing a hand, count an ace as 4, a king as 3, a queen as 2, and a jack as 1; and if you have three suits stopped and a count of 14 you have the equivalent of an ace better than average and the strength for an original third hand no trump. Mr. Work's hand counted 17 and he had all four suits stopped, so there was no question about his bid.

Mr. Whitehead (east) was tempted to make an informatory double. He held: Spades, 9, 4; hearts, K, J, 8, 3; diamonds, K, J, 10, 9; Clubs, A, Q, 4. However, he had only two worthless spades, so the chances were that his double would produce an answer of two spades from his partner. As that answer might be made with only four small spades, Mr. Whitehead, holding only two small, would have to go to two no trumps, in which there was small chance of making game in the face of his partner's weakness (shown by her initial pass) and of Mr. Work's strength (disclosed by his third hand bid). However, sitting over Mr. Work's no trump, Mr. Whitehead was confident he could stop opponents' game, therefore he elected to pass and play the hand defensively.

All passed and it was up to Mr. Whitehead to make an opening lead against Mr. Work's no trump. He selected the jack of diamonds from the stronger of his long suits. The jack is the correct lead from a king-jack-10 combination.

Mrs. Streeter spread her hand for dummy. Mr. Work played from it the 2 of diamonds; Miss Shelby played the 3 and Mr. Work won with the queen.

Mr. Work then took time to estimate the game going possibilities of his cards. He could count only four sure tricks—the one already won with the queen of diamonds, his own ace of diamonds and ace of spades, the dummy's ace of hearts. If he could take a double finesse in spades and win both finesses he could gain two more tricks. If the king of hearts were on his right he could win an additional trick with the queen of hearts. The two additional tricks needed for game would have to be made in clubs. However, these possibilities were far from being probabilities, as Mr. Work had only one entry in dummy, the ace of hearts, which he could use either to get to dummy's clubs, in case he should be able to establish the club suit, or to take one finesse in spades.

It seemed to him that the best chance lay in the establishment of the club suit. Having only the one entry in dummy, which he would need later to run the club suit should it be established, Mr. Work was obliged to lead clubs from his own hand. Making the best of a bad situation, Mr. Work led the king of clubs, choosing the king for two reasons: First, to avoid the possibility of blocking dummy in case the high clubs should fall and the club suit itself provide a reëntry to dummy; second, because if an adversary held the ace without the queen he might be expected to pass the first club trick, assuming Mr. Work to hold the queen. In this case a second club lead might result in dropping the ace and queen together, or, if not, might be won by an adversary who would continue with diamonds instead of driving out the ace of hearts entry in dummy.

On Mr. Work's king of clubs, Mr. Whitehead played the 4, holding back his toppers in order, if possible, to exhaust Mr. Work's clubs before the suit was established in dummy. Dummy played the 6; Miss Shelby the 2.

Mr. Work continued with the 5 of clubs; Mr. Whitehead played the queen; dummy the 7; Miss Shelby the 3.

Mr. Whitehead knew there was one club outstanding, held either by Miss Shelby or by Mr. Work. If Mr. Work held it and should lead it, two good clubs would be established in dummy. But to bring them in, Mr. Work would have to utilize dummy's only entry, the ace of hearts. To kill this entry while he still held command of the club suit, Mr. Whitehead deliberately led and sacrificed his king of hearts. Mr. Work had feared this play by an adversary. He was helpless, however, because if he played low from dummy on this heart, another heart lead would force the ace. Therefore he played the ace from dummy. Miss Shelby played the 3 of hearts; declarer the 6.

Having been thwarted in his attempt to make dummy's clubs, Mr. Work took advantage of the only opportunity open to him in the situation, by leading the 3 of spades from dummy, for the purpose of trying a double finesse. Although he knew he could take but one finesse himself, he hoped an adversary might be forced to give him the second. Miss Shelby played the 2 of spades; declarer finessed the 10; Mr. Whitehead played the 4.

Mr. Work then led the 8 of clubs; Mr. Whitehead played the ace; dummy the 9, and Miss Shelby discarded the 4 of hearts.

Mr. Whitehead led the king of diamonds; dummy played the 5; Miss Shelby the 4; Mr. Work the ace. Mr. Work returned the 6 of diamonds rather than lead away from his tenaces in spades and hearts. Mr. Whitehead played the 9; dummy the 8; Miss Shelby the 7.

Mr. Whitehead then led his good 10 of diamonds. Dummy discarded the 5 of spades; Miss Shelby the 7 of spades; declarer the 7 of hearts.

Then, in order to protect any possible honor in spades his partner might hold, Mr. Whitehead chose hearts for his next lead, laying down the jack instead of a lower one to make sure that dummy could not get the lead with the 9 of hearts. Dummy played the 9; Miss Shelby the 5; Mr. Work the queen.

Mr. Work returned the 10 of hearts; Mr. Whitehead played the 2; dummy discarded the 10 of clubs; Miss Shelby the 8 of spades.

Mr. Work led the ace of spades; Mr. Whitehead played the 9; dummy the 6; Miss Shelby the jack. Mr. Work's last card, the queen of spades, was lost to Miss Shelby's king, which left Mr. Work one trick short of game, although he made one more than his contract. He scored 20 for two tricks in no trump and 30 for aces, which was the utmost score possible against the splendid defense that Mr. Whitehead put up in the early stages of the play.

Two Leading Orchestras Supply WLIB's Jazz Music

Two of the best known orchestras in the country are supplying radio listeners with jazz music from WLIB, the Liberty Weekly station on the Drake hotel. One is led by Bobby Meeker, one of the younger of the country's present crop of sensational syncopators, and the other by Spike Hamilton. Bobby is the maestro of the Drake Hotel Dance orchestra, while Spike directs the Opera Club orchestra. These two bands are heard almost nightly during the Hoodlums' program and three times a week in a special half hour jazz session from midnight to 12:30 o'clock.

POWERFUL RADIO ON SARATOGA, U.S PLANE CARRIER

Considerable radio engineering skill has had to be exercised with regard to the antenna arrangements on the U. S. S. Saratoga, gigantic new airplane carrier of the navy, which was put into commission recently at Camden, N. J. Inasmuch as it carries 33 airplanes and its deck is virtually a floating flying field, there must be no stray wires around in which the planes may become entangled.

All transmitting antennas will be suspended on the starboard side of the smoke pipe, while the main transmitter antenna will run from the smoke pipe to the single topmast. Facilities will be provided to lower the latter when passing under Brooklyn bridge.

The Saratoga's main transmitter is more powerful than that of any other naval vessel except its sister ship, the airplane carrier Lexington, which is similarly equipped. Being plane carriers both ships will be used for scouting duty, necessitating long distance communication.

Several other transmitters of various power will have particular duties, and transmission and reception in several different channels without interference will be possible. Radio compasses for obtaining bearings of planes on scouting duty to guide their return to the carrier are included.

NOTED PREACHER TALKS AT SUNDAY CLUB TONIGHT

DR. C. WALLACE PETTY.

Dr. C. Wallace Petty, popular Baptist preacher of Pittsburgh and considered one of the best speakers in his denomination, will tell the Sunday Evening club audience tonight what, in his opinion, constitutes "A One Hundred Per Cent American Christian," and listeners over WMAQ will hear this address. Those who tune in at 7 o'clock will get the solo by Mabel Sharp Herdien and a talk by Dr. Charles Vernon Vickery, who has just completed a tour of the world. Mr. Vickery's subject is "Golden Rule Among Nations." He has been a close student of conditions in the Balkans, where so much trouble is brewing at this time.

Music scheduled for the 8 o'clock service includes "Praise the Lord" by Randegger and "Ho Everyone that Thirsteth" by Martin, the latter with Mark Love in the solo part, assisting the choir of 100 under the direction of Edgar Nelson. The women's voices will sing "Lift Thine Eyes" from Mendelssohn's "Elijah."

Stanley Martin, organist, will play at 7:40 Maitland's "Concert Overture in A," Dickinson's "Reverie," and Federlein's "Allergo Guibilante." Robert Yale Smith plays the piano accompaniments for the club's music numbers.

UNUSUAL VOCAL TREATS FOR WGN FANS THIS WEEK

Sascha Corado and Mark Love Will Be Heard.

One of the most pretentious series of vocal programs W-G-N, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel, has ever presented will be heard by radio listeners during the coming week. The program includes four half hour programs by three radio favorites, as well as a number of other appearances by singers who have won their way into listeners' hearts through their splendid work in the past.

SASCHA CORADO.

Outstanding among the programs will be those offered next Saturday night by Sascha Corado, the distinguished European baritone, and Mark Love, the popular W-G-N basso. Mr. Corado came to W-G-N last spring, after a brilliant American concert tour and years of service with the Berlin Civic opera.

Attracts Attention.

His excellent work immediately attracted widespread attention, and since his return to W-G-N several weeks ago listeners have been eagerly awaiting each concert by this artist. He is scheduled next Saturday night at 8 o'clock.

Mark Love is another W-G-N artist who in the last year has shown an amazing growth in popularity. His programs are among the best on the radio, and his splendid basso voice has shown immense improvement in the last year, particularly since he returned from a month of intensive coaching with Sir Henry Wood, the noted oratorio authority of England. Since his return Mr. Love has taken first rank among the oratorio singers in Chicago, and he will give an exhibit of his skill next Saturday night between 9 and 9:30 o'clock.

Mexican on Program.

Flavio Plasencia, the young Mexican baritone is onther popular artist who is to entertain next week. He will give a special recital Wednesday night between 9:30 and 10 o'clock. His voice has proved ideal for radio work, and in the last few months he has become a radio favorite of the first magnitude. Another baritone who will be heard from W-G-N this week is Bryn Talbot, known for his many programs from the works of Gilbert and Sullivan.

The soloist during the broadcast of the Arabian Nights' entertainment next week will be Edwin Kemp, a young tenor, who is also a popular entertainer with W-G-N listeners. Another youngster whom listeners like is Tommy Coats, the lyric baritone, who gives a twenty minute recital between 10:40 and 11 o'clock each Sunday night.

FAMOUS TRAVELER TALKS OF TRIPS ON W-G-N TUESDAY

Headlining the Tuesday p. m. program from W-G-N, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel, will be the travel talk by James Abbott, between 4 and 4:30 o'clock. Mr. Abbott has been lecturing on W-G-N for the last few months, and in his series of travelogues he has covered many of the most important cities in Europe. His most recent talks have dealt with Egypt. Mr. Abbott has a widespread reputation as a lecturer on foreign lands, and in his career he has encircled the globe more than a dozen times.

(Sunday, Dec. 4.)

RADIO PROGRAMS FOR TODAY

(Central standard time.)

In a program headlined by Richard Wagner's "Song to the Evening Star," Reinald Werrenrath, America's premier baritone, is to make another appearance tonight when he will be heard on W-G-N, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE station on the Drake hotel during the Atwater Kent hour of music starting at 8:15 o'clock. Among his other selections tonight Mr. Werrenrath will feature old English lyrics and ballads and old time concert favorites.

The life and works of Johann Sebastian Bach, one of the world's greatest composers, will be the subject of "Our Music Room," W-G-N's well known weekly feature which relates the story of one master musician each Sunday night. The program is to be offered by the Drake concert ensemble under the direction of Henry Selinger; Edward Barry, pianist, and Edwin Kemp, tenor.

Another professional football game is to be broadcast today by W-G-N, starting at 2 o'clock when listeners will be taken out to Wrigley field for the clash between the Chicago Bears and the Frankford Yellow Jackets.

The Mendelssohn Trio, numbering Berenice Yanecek, pianist; Elizabeth Roelk, cellist, and Rosalie Saalfeld, violinist, as its members will be heard this afternoon during the Lyon & Healy program between 4:15 and 5:15 o'clock. They are opening their program with Godard's second "Trio," and among their other selections are "Melodie," by Tschaikowsky; "Serenade," by Drdla, and "Old Refrain," by Kreisler. All of the artists composing the trio are well known Chicago musicians, and their program this afternoon promises to be one of the best string concerts heard from W-G-N in many a day.

Many other splendid musical features are scheduled from W-G-N during the day. Between 1 and 2 o'clock, Ambrose Larsen will be heard in his customary Sunday Wurlitzer organ recital, while between 6 and 6:20 the Million Sing is to be heard. Early evening music always includes several selections by the Drake concert ensemble and the Blackstone string quintet, between 7 and 7:30.

Correll and Gosden, the popular harmonizers, are to offer a half hour of songs between 7:30 and 8 o'clock, singing many of the latest popular successes. Between 8 and 8:15 o'clock listeners will hear the old Scotch character, "Auld Sandy," in Caledonian songs and stories. ROMANCE, ONE OF CZAR'S FAVORITES, ON AIR TUESDAY

A modern paraphrase of Rubinstein's "Romance," will be the principal offering of the New York program heard over W-G-N, THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE station on Tuesday night at 8 o'clock.

"Romance," in the heyday of the great Russian composer, was always a feature of the weekly concert at the czar's palace. Tradition has it that in its depths of passion and emotional flights a cousin of the ruling czar, infatuated with a concert singer who remained cold to his advances, found the gloomy inspiration that nerved him to suicide. For years thereafter, due probably to this sadly romantic association, the composition was a favorite with the younger members of the Muscovite nobility.

Irving Berlin Night Soon Over Columbia Chain

FIVE STATIONS IN TEXAS TO HOOK UP CHRISTMAS EVE

Dallas, Texas, Dec. 3.—[Special.]—Five Texas stations, broadcasting the first program ever put on from two nations and by remote control, will celebrate Christmas eve over the radio.

PART 3 | REAL ESTATE HOME BUILDERS

Plan 30 Story Drug and Chemical Building for North Side

REMODELING OF OLD BUILDINGS AID TO REALTY

Three Gold Coasts Undergo Change.

BY PHILIP HAMPSON.

Remodeling of buildings which have outlived the purpose for which they were originally erected is an operation now playing a most important part in the growth and development of the city. In most cases it is the old homes and apartment houses of the better residential districts that are undergoing changes.

Remodeling often comes to the rescue of districts where realty values apparently have come to a pause, with a tendency toward delline, injects new life into them and tides them over to a future date when development greater than the original sends them forward again.

It is especially interesting to note that three Gold Coast districts, just removed from the downtown section, on the north, south, and west sides, have undergone the most spectacular transformations. In general it might be said that the trend on the near north side is toward exclusive shops, studios, and de luxe living quarters; on the south side, toward publishing establishments, and on the west toward labor headquarters.

Appearance Improved.

At any rate, remodeling has often turned hideous, wornout structures into edifices that are distinguished architecturally. The uses to which the revamped buildings are put, whether for business or residential purposes, depends, of course, on their location.

Perhaps it might be well to make a hurried survey of the three parts of the city separately, with a scan of the north first, for there, perhaps, is the most interesting development.

Beginning at Ohio street and proceeding north along Michigan avenue, with inspection of the streets crossing the drive, one finds a vast number of old mansions which have been reconditioned mainly for small and exclusive shops having an especial appeal to women and to the decorative part of the home. Some residences have been given new fronts, while others have been changed just enough to smarten their appearance.

On Boul Mich.

For instance at the southeast corner of Michigan and Ontario is the Italian court building. This structure originally was an apartment building having a limestone front. It had deteriorated over the years until it finally presented a drab appearance. Slightly remodeled on the exterior it is now one of the most interesting buildings on the Boul. Mich. A bit further north on the same side of the street is the Malabry Court building, which also was an old apartment house structure, an eyesore. A new front was put on and it is now most attractive.

At 150 East Erie street is an erstwhile old building which now possesses an attractive exterior of quaint old English architecture. Next door at 152 is an old building now having a handsome front of Indiana limestone. At 154 East Chicago is an old building which now has an interesting exterior of Venetian design.

Further north along Walton place and Oak street east of Michigan, as well as along the other streets south to Ohio, are a number of buildings that have been remodeled into especially attractive structures, usually with exclusive shops on the first floors. Most of the remodeling done between Oak and Ohio has been for business purposes, although frequently a structure may have shops on the ground floor with studios above. In as much as many artists, interior decorators, musicians, and the like live in this section they combine their business and living quarters.

North of Oak Street.

North of Oak street, between Michigan and Clark and as far north as North avenue, there has been extensive remodeling, but mainly for residential purposes. In this section a fine old residence may have been allowed to fall to pieces; reconditioned, it presents a striking bit of architecture. An example of this is an old house at 1247 North Dearborn street which has been converted into a bit of Italy.

Many antiquated old residences in the district north of Oak were vacant for years because no one cared to move into them. Reconditioned at costs ranging from $6,000 to $10,000, they became attractive enough to be selected for homes by many of the city's foremost families.

A member of one of the city's leading real estate firms explained how an rich estate, which owned a great deal of near north side realty, became alarmed when it saw once valuable property headed toward occupancy by cheap boarding houses. It feared a decline in realty values would result.

Saves the Day.

In a move to avert this the estate reconditioned the old homes it owned and rented them to desirable tenants. The real estate man says the slump was not only headed off but values were enhanced.

Shopping farther to the north, almost every one is acquainted with the Wilson avenue district, where old residences and apartment houses along Sheridan road and on the cross streets have been remodeled into stores and offices. Many apartment houses have been converted into hotels and light housekeeping suites, but the change is not often apparent from the street. Lawrence avenue possibly has changed, almost all the

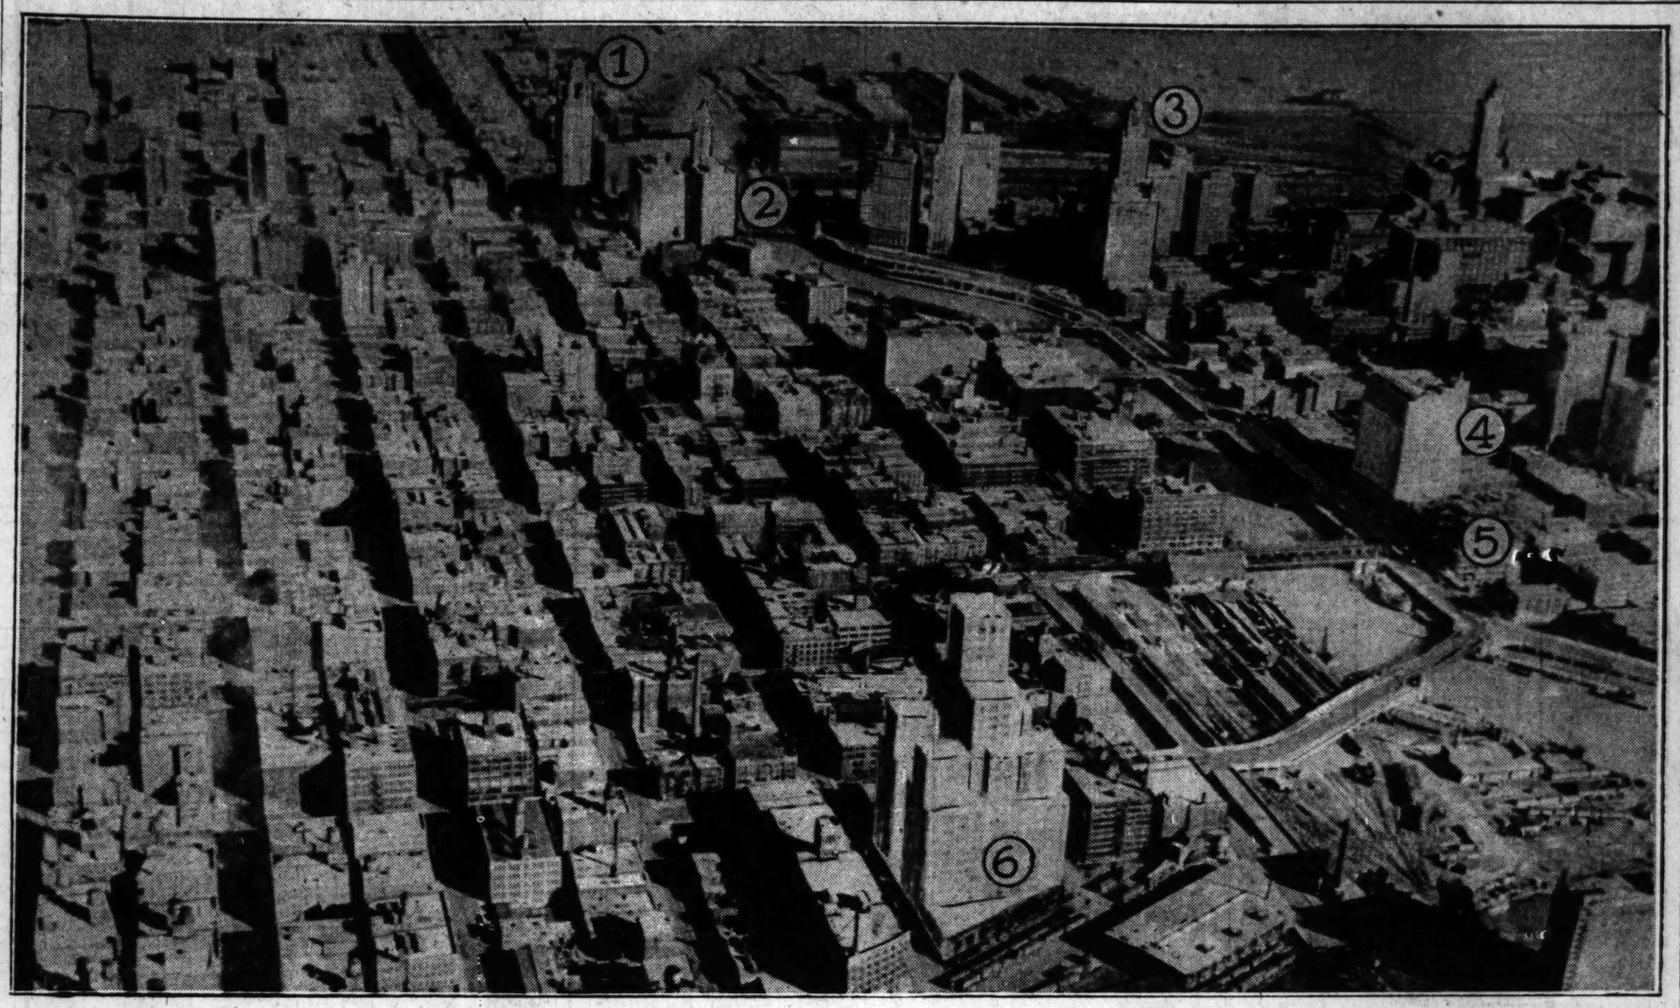
PROPOSED $3,000,000 ADDITION TO CHICAGO'S SKYLINE



Above is a sky view made by the Chicago Aerial Survey company, showing the site of the thirty story Drug and Chemical building, with the proposed structure sketched in. The building will stand on the block bounded by Orleans, Illinois, Austin, and Kingsbury, and was designed by S. Scott Joy.

The key numbers refer to the following buildings: 1—Tribune Tower; 2—Wrigley building; 3—Pure Oil building; 4—Builders' building; 5—Engineering and Post buildings; 6—Drug and Chemical building.

WILL COMBINE WAREHOUSE AND OFFICES-LOFTS

Cost Is Estimated at $3,000,000.

BY AL CHASE.
[Real Estate Editor.]

What will be the first really tall skyscraper in the western section of the near north side is promised for the block bounded by Austin avenue, Orleans, Illinois, and Kingsbury streets, in the shape of a thirty story $3,000,000 office, loft, and warehouse structure. As present plans indicate that a good portion of space will be taken by various drug and chemical associations and firms, the owners contemplate calling it the Drug and Chemical building.

GEORGE M. McCONNELL.

The Chicago Drug and Chemical association at a recent meeting at the Hamilton club indorsed the project. A few days later the Chicago Perfumery, Soap and Extract association, comprising 100 firms, also went on record as favoring it. The Chicago Chemical society may move its headquarters to the new building, where it will have club facilities as well as office accommodations.

The new Drug and Chemical building is to be built and owned by the McConnell Warehouse company, of which George M. McConnell is president. Mr. McConnell was a colonel during the war, being in charge of the operation of government warehouses. He is president of the Railway Terminal and Warehouse company, which owns and operates five big warehouses in various parts of the city.

Will Cover Nearly a Block.

The proposed Drug and Chemical building will cover practically all of the block, the site having been purchased in part from the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railway, which will have switch tracks into the building. It will be at the foot of the incline to the Orleans street bridge and is a block north of the proposed huge building to be built by Marshall Field & Co.

Although the plans for the new structure by S. Scott Joy call for thirty stories, only fifteen will be built as a starter. Following the modern trend in architecture, the roof line will be irregular, various sections of the building being of different heights. Work will start early next spring, according to Frank S. Baker, manager of the property.

The new structure will have all of the conveniences of the modern office building, such as a barber shop, telegraph offices, restaurant, rest rooms, etc. In addition there'll be space available both for samples and stocks of goods. Firms may have their goods stored in the building, thus doing away with trucking, as there'll be covered shipping platforms.

Provides for Expansion.

The public warehouse department of the new Drug and Chemical building will give a complete merchandise storage warehouse service with negotiable receipts, clerks and other service, it is stated.

"Expansion is usually difficult and expensive for a company to get in a building of its own even where a firm is located farther out where service can't be had," said President McConnell. "In a terminal, so organized, a tenant doesn't need to contract for more space than his present minimum requirements. If he has a seasonal expansion it can be provided for by the public warehouse department, or taking additional space temporarily. Additional space will always be available when business requires it."

New Type of Lease on Boul Mich Tower

With further details regarding the skyscraper which will replace the old Willoughby building at the southwest corner of Madison and Michigan, comes to light an interesting arranrgement in connection with the lease of the site. The lessor, the estate of Charles L. Willoughby, for which the Old Colony Trust Company of Boston is trustee, not only gets an annual rental, but shares in the profits a clause in the lease provides.

E. M. WILLOUGHBY.

This arrangement, it is stated, may be followed by other estate holding valuable property, opening the way to developments of various types.

The new building will be called Willoughby tower, and will occupy a site measuring 80.7 feet on Michigan and 109 ft 3 inches on Madison. Work is to start on it May 1, 1928, and it is hoped it will be completed in ten or eleven months.

It will be erected by the No. 2 South Michigan avenue Building corporation, which has taken a ninety-eight year lease on the site beginning May 1, 1928. The terms call for a net annual rental of $125,000 for the first five years, $150,000 for the next five years, $160,000 for the following five, and $175,000 for the remaining eighty-three years. The total rental for the term is $16,700,000, with an average net annual rental of $170,408.

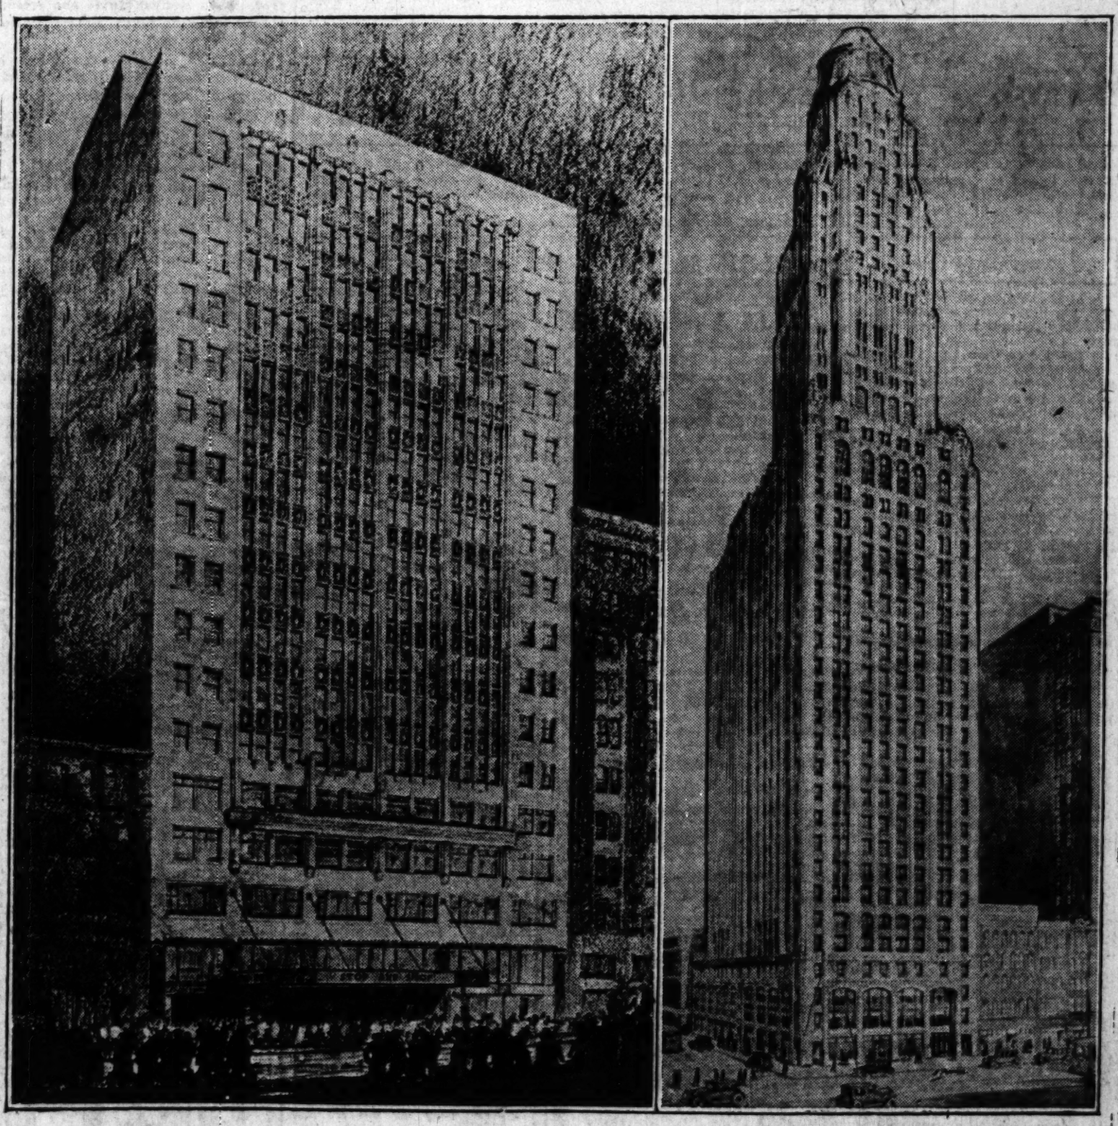
As told in a description of the building printed in THE TRIBUNE, together with a picture on Sept. 18, Willoughby tower will be of unique appearance, being constructed of black green glazed granite stone, brick and terra cotta. Designed by Samuel N. Crowen and associate, it will be of Gothic architecture.

36 Stories High.

It will tower thirty-six stories, with ornamentation giving it a height the equivalent of forty floors. The first floor will be rented for stores, and the second, third and fourth floors probably will be leased for shops. Construction will be of the same material on all sides that show.

Members of the building corporation are made up chiefly of Mahlon B. Wallace, Edward M. Willoughby, and S. N. Wallace, Edward M. Willoughby, and S. N. Crowen. Mr. Wallace, now investing in Chicago real estate, is said to be prominent in St. Louis financial circles. Willoughby & Co. represented all parties in arranging the lease and will manage the building. Chapman & Cutler were attorneys, and financing will be through Peabody, Houghteling & Co.

A PAIR OF NEW LOOP SKYSCRAPERS

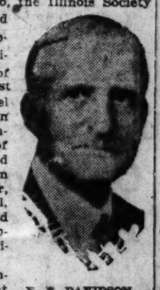


On the left is the new building now under construction at 16-30 West Washington street. As a result of a deal announced in Thursday's Tribune by which Hillman's grocery department is to be merged with the Stop and Shop grocery, now on Boul Mich, this building will house a combination of these two stores. The above picture is an entirely new perspective made by Schmidt, Garden & Erikson, now architects of the project.

The building on the left is the new design for the proposed Steuben Club building at the northeast corner of Randolph and Lake. It's by K. M. Vitzthum & Co. The project has been financed and is now going ahead shortly, it is stated. Details are given in another column.

Calls Outside Fire Escapes Public Menace

Agitation by the two architectural bodies of Chicago, the Illinois Society of Architects and the Chicago chapter of the American Institute of Architects, against the outside steel fire escape and in favor of the inside smokeproof stairway, received impetus when John G. Gamber, state fire marshal, recently addressed the Illinois Society of Architects.



F. E. DAVIDSON.
[Moffett Photo.]

Marshal Gamber declared that outside fire escapes are a positive menace, that they have never proven of any value, and that they should be forbidden by law, according to F. E. Davidson, editor of the monthly bulletin of the Illinois Society of Architects.

Earlier in the year Marshal Gamber sent a questionnaire to the leading fire chiefs of the country. Almost without exception they favored the smokeproof inside tower exits.

Not Permitted in Gotham.

"We in New York do not permit outside stairways on buildings over twelve stories in height," John Kenlon, chief of the Gotham fire department, wrote. "The inside fire tower, properly constructed, is superior to an outside stairway."

"Frank E. Doherty, former commissioner of buildings of the city of Chicago, frequently called attention to the hazard of fire escapes built in accordance with the requirements of the Chicago building code," states Editor Davidson in his bulletin.

"He maintained that no woman wearing the narrow heels now demanded by Dame Fashion could possibly walk down a standard fire escape. In addition to the fact that an outside fire escape is of doubtful value and may become a public menace, fire escapes are ugly. In Chicago but few fire escapes have been designed with the architecture of the building so as not to become an eyesore.

Points to Tribune Tower.

"If the new buildings of Northwestern university and the University of Chicago were equipped with outside fire escapes, would these notable buildings receive the praise that they do? There are no fire escapes on these buildings, nor are there any outside fire escapes on the Tribune Tower.

"If the city of Chicago should, by ordinance, forbid the erection of fire escapes over public property, there would be no fire escapes erected on any buildings, as it would be cheaper to build an interior fire shielded stairway, which by law is permitted to be counted as a fire escape as well as a stairway, than to set buildings back from the street line in order to permit the construction of outside fire escapes. If the law making bodies of all municipalities would enact such legislation, the question of the fire escape will solve itself."

MALIN TO HEAD REALTY BOARD OF EVANSTON

David C. Malin, a realtor living at 322 Main street, Evanston, with offices at 523 Main street, is to be the next president of the Evanston Real Estate board, succeeding Harper Payne, now head of that organization. Mr. Malin heads a ticket which will be voted on tomorrow. There is no other ticket in the field. William A. Sadler will be the new treasurer and Arthur H. Held secretary of the board. Nels M. Hokanson will be director for a three year term. The officers will be installed following the election.

HOME BUILDERS' DEPARTMENT

AN ITALIAN HOUSE OF QUAINT DESIGN YET CONVENIENT

Doorway and Balcony Are Two Features.

(A six room Tribune Competition Home, designed by Rudolf H. Blatter, architect, 503 West 121st street, New York City.)

BY LOUISE BARGELT.
[Home Builders' Editor.]

LOUISE BARGELT.
[Chambers Photo.]

An Italian home, with a delightful difference. What could be more charming than its gracefully fashioned exterior walls of pink and buff stucco left rough, with coins, base and trim around doors and windows troweled smooth?

What could be more alluring than the beckoning Italian doorway, the slender balcony with its wrought iron grille, or the provocatively curved window below the piquant gable?

The roof is of slate and includes a range of colors varying from blue gray to red, with the red slates predominating.

One enters a small hall with floor of marbelized tile, rubber, or linoleum. Through an archway the living room is reached.

Here one finds walls of rough plaster in soft pinkish tans, and sprinkled with bronze dust. Deeper values of ping and tan show in unexpected places and the ceiling is of light buff, smooth surfaced. The finish is of flat grain oak stained and varnished to a satiny effect. The floors are of chestnut boards of random widths, stained brown and varnished. The lighting fixtures are of wrought iron.

Fireplace in Alcove.

We find the fireplace recessed in an alcove with seats at each end. This fireplace naturally dominates the room and should be architecturally correct and furnished with andirons, tongs, brush, shovel, screen, fender wood basket, and coal scuttle in period accord. A period fireplace without appropriate and useful fireplace furnishings loses much of its charm. Here, where it is so emphasized by alcove and window seats, it should not only give out plenty of heat but should contribute to the esthetic beauty of the room.

A decorative screen of wrought iron mesh would be fitting in front of the grate. There are interesting screens appropriate for Italian living rooms made in imitation of old wrought iron grilles.

The kitchen, which is conveniently close to the front door and yet completely separated from the living room and porch, is well provisioned with cupboards and cabinets and laid out with a view to maximum working ease.

The kitchen trim is pine, painted a light gray, and the walls are of light lettuce green with a tile wainscoat five feet high and in buff gray. The floor is of inlaid linoleum.

Retreat from Dining Room.

Nor is the breakfast room missing from this compact American planned house. It offers a small retreat from the dining room on very informal occasions.

The dining room is conveniently sized for a house of this general overall and has windows on two sides as well as French doors leading to the porch.

On the second floor there is one large master bedroom with radiant gas or electric fireplace in one corner and an upper porch beyond it. The second bedroom opens on to the front balcony. The third bedroom is quite small but with its ample light and air provision is a sunny, suitable spot for a child's bedroom or nursery.

There is no stinting of closet space, with linen shelves and clothes chute in the hall.

The floors of this second story are of edge grain pine, and the trim is of pine painted a leaf green with satin finish. The walls are to be papered.

Oak doors are specified throughout and there are to be steel casement windows.

Basement Playroom.

Notice should be taken of the basement which offers a large area for a child's playroom, a fuel room, boiler room, vegetable room, and laundry.

The house is insulated. Mention should be made of the fact that the radiators have vanished from the house, enclosed as they are in radiator cabinets which show the Italian influence in their style and provide ample circulation for heating.

If the home owner desired these radiators might be completely concealed in the walls, with grilled fronts only in evidence.

This type of concealment requires planning in advance of the construction of the house and expert advice should be obtained from those skilled in technical building problems of this nature.

A house of this type, built along the general lines described here should cost between $12,000 and $13,000.

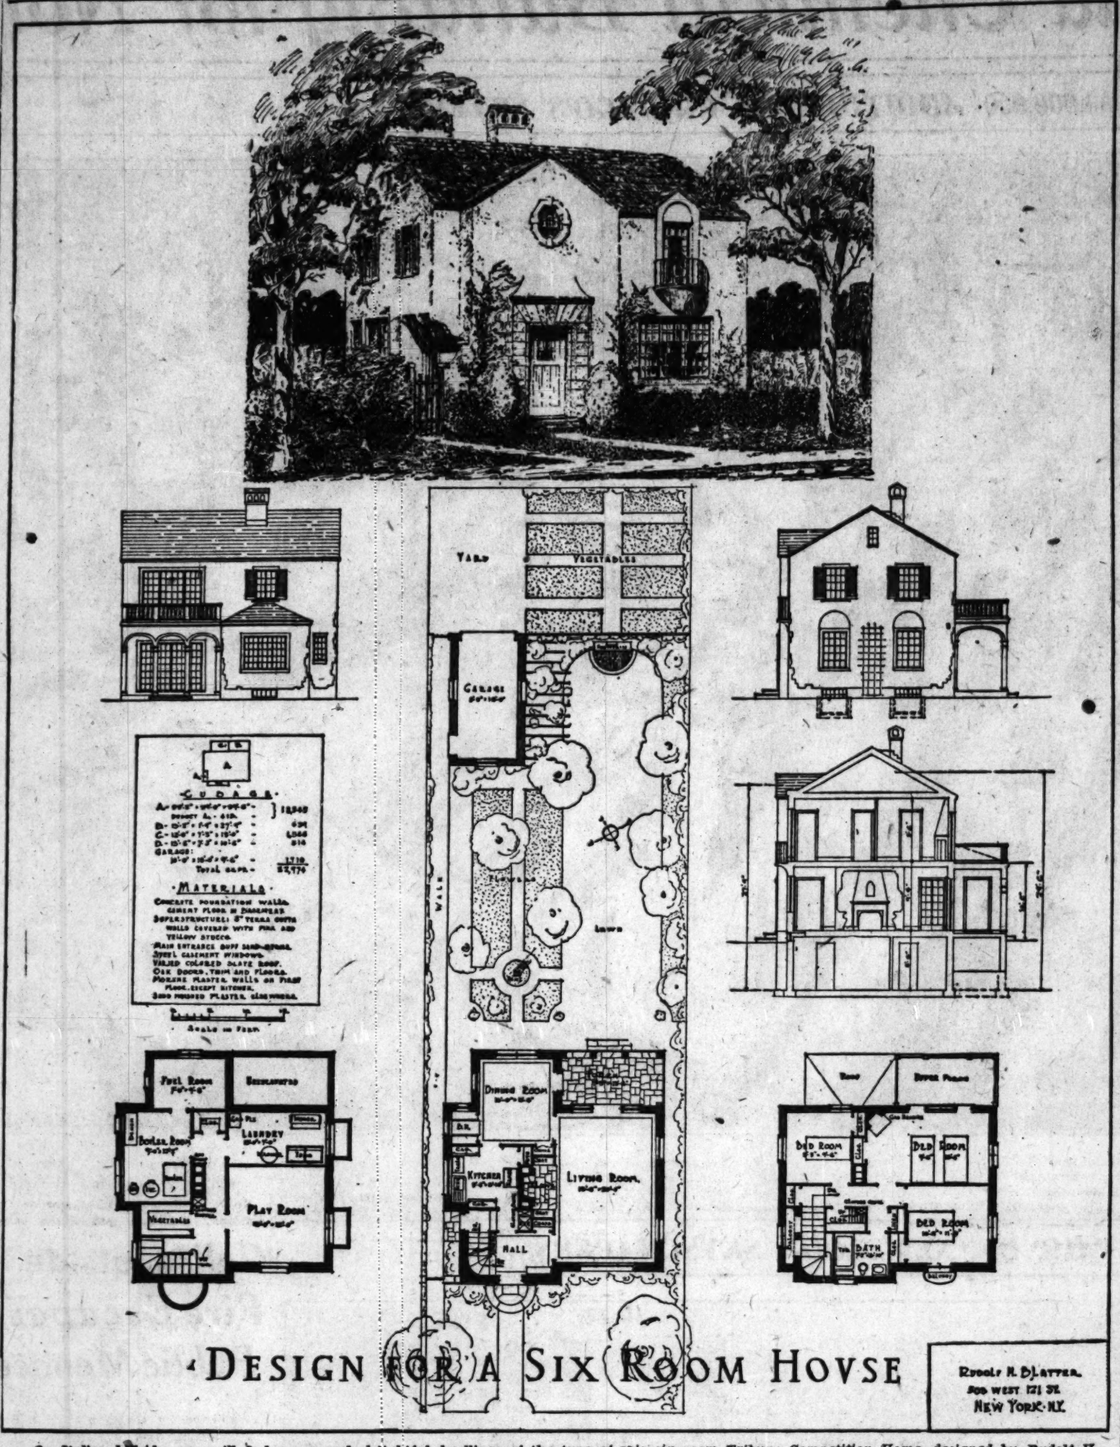
Possible to Install Wall Board by Oneself

Plastering and lathing are two home building jobs the home owner is not likely to attempt. With wall board, however, if he decides to use this, he can obtain many of the same results of lath and plaster and incidentally save the cost of hiring labor for the lathing and plastering work.

Interior Wall Finishes Must Be in Harmony

Avoid contrasts in your interior wall finishes between opening rooms. Never, for instance, will a Spanish plastered living room wall or one finished in Italian mottled effect harmonize with a hall where Colonial wall paper is seen.

FOREIGN ARCHITECTURE, AMERICAN FLOOR PLAN



DESIGN FOR A SIX ROOM HOUSE

Rudolf H. Blatter
503 West 121 St.
New York, N.Y.

On Italian hillsides you will find many such delightful dwellings of the type of this six room Tribune Competition Home, designed by Rudolf H. Blatter, architect, 503 West 121st street, New York City. Its exterior is of pink and buff colored stucco; its balcony grille of wrought iron; its roof of slate varying from blue gray to red, with the red slates predominating. The interior faithfully carries out the Italian spirit in its decorative finishings, but the floor plan is essentially "modern American."

RESIDENCE OF MRS. WAYNE CHATFIELD-TAYLOR

Mrs. Wayne Chatfield-Taylor's new home at Lake Forest, nearly completed, is an interesting example of Georgian architecture modified to meet the wishes of the owner. Rebori, Wentworth, Dewey & McCormick, Inc., are the architects. Mrs. Taylor laid out the floor plan and is largely responsible for the exterior design. The residence contains about thirty-two rooms and, exclusive of the grounds, garage, etc., cost about $[illegible]. Exterior construction is of colonial brick, laid in white mortar, with a trim of wood painted to match the limestone base and cap stones. The feature of the house is a large living room which possesses light on three sides as it faces north, south, and west. This room measures 26x38 feet. It has a library alcove to the east and a great bay window to the west, with a fireplace in the center.

SLATE NOW HAS HUNDRED USES IN HOME BUILDING

Great Possibilities for the Artistic.

BY HOMER GRANT.

Because slate is such a workable, enduring stone, it is adapted to many different uses at the present time. Early craftsmen appreciated its decorative and durable qualities as a roofing material and it embellishes many an old architectural masterpiece still standing today.

Many people consider it principally in the light of a roofing material, a "sheltering stone" to serve indefinitely. But there are many other purposes for which it is now employed.

Slate is now used for floors in entrance halls, sun rooms, dining rooms and living rooms. For this purpose, it may be obtained in one color or in a harmonious grouping of several colors; red, green, mottled purple and green, brown and buffs, purple and gray, blue black and black.

Possessing a tensile strength and elasticity, combined with density and endurance, it makes enduring hearths, mantels, thresholds and sills. It appears also in wainscoting and baseboards.

Impervious to Oils, Water.

Because it is impervious to oils and water, as well as velvet like underfoot, it is approviate for vestibule, bathroom and basement floors as well as for stair steps, risers and landings.

Besides being easily cleaned it is damp proof, and fireproof, insuring against damage by water, dirt, vermin and flame.

Sanitary in the extreme, it is seen in washrooms, laundries, garages and basements; adopted to laundry tubs, sinks, drain boards, shelving, table tops, work benches, dough boards, and even shower enclosures.

In homes which are not convenient to sewers, slate septic tanks provide an excellent private sewage disposal system.

Slate has been called the stone of a hundred uses, and in enumerating the purposes to which it has been adopted, it would almost seem as if this statement were literally as well as figuratively true. While it is dense and strong in quality, it may be split into sheets of any desired thickness, and these used either in their natural state or finished to a velvety softness.

For Walks and Floors.

Outdoors, as well as indoors and overhead, slate is brought into practical play.

Slate is seen in walks, in porch and terrace floors, in chimney caps, and paving for courts and areaways. Also for stepping stones and coping for walls and fountains and for garden seats.

Rich in color, if desired, it mingles harmoniously with nature's own coloring, embellishing lawn and landscape with its rustic charm. Whether one chooses a colored slate or a neutral toned blue slate and gray slate, is a matter for personal choice.

As a roofing material it is fire resistive and will not burn, durable, clean and economical when one considers its freedom from upkeep costs.

Four Types of Roofs.

There are four types of slate roofs, the standard, textural, graduated, and flat. With the textural roof, varying shades are frequently used to enhance the color effect. Its slates are usually of a rougher texture than the standard. The graduated roof combines the artistic features of the textural roof with additional variations in thickness, size, and exposure.

The history of slate as roofing material makes interesting reading. One of the earliest refereneces to this use of it is in the construction of the roof in the Saxon chapel at Stratford-on-Avon, Wiltshire, England. This was built during the 8th century. Some 1,100 years have passed, but it still stands, moss covered, though intact.

THIS WINDOW MAY BE WASHED FROM INSIDE

Window inserts are now made which are a decided step forward in solving window washing and window weathering problems. The glass in this type of window may be washed from the inside, and it is not necessary to remove the screens.

This inset strengthens the sash, and such a window insert can be placed in any window sash, new or old. It is made of aluminum alloy and will not rust ing metal. The inset frame of the sash is placed in the center of the ordinary window sash and through it insert the entire window may be washed from the inside.

There are a number of special features giving advantages to these inserts. Among them may be mentioned that they do not interfere with curtains or shades, that they are weatherproof, that they eliminate all draft in window washing and that they may be had with rod holding window in position.

GOOD SASH CORD IS AN ECONOMY IN THE LONG RUN

Not only should a sash cord of a window be tough and durable but also flexible, smooth and free from rough places.

Rehanging a window takes a certain amount of money—which might have been used in some other way around the house. This amount often more than the difference in price between installing good sash cord throughout the house and poor sash cord. In almost every home building products one could truthfully that there is a saving in the long run in using substantial, dependable, and uniformly good products.

Answers to Questions on Home Owning

Putting in Wall Board.

Dear Mrs. Bargelt:

Is it possible for an amateur in building to apply wall board himself? The walls of our old house need putting into condition. There are, I understand, fireproof wall boards on the market.—H. S.

Ans.—Yes, it is possible for an amateur in home construction to use the modern wall boards. There are a number of excellent fireproof wall boards on the market.

Regard Second Mortgage.

Dear Mrs. Bargelt: Do you believe in the second mortgage for home building? Why is it that a higher rate of interest is charged than for a first mortgage? We can have a home of our own next spring if we assume a first and second mortgage, but are doubtful whether or not to do it.

Ans.—The country is filled with home owners who would never be the possessors of their own houses and land if it were not for the second mortgage. The cost of this second mortgage is higher than a first mortgage because the risk to the party holding it is greater. Certainly I would go ahead, take possession of my home with a first and second mortgage on it and after a few years you will find that despite the fact that you have perhaps always found it hard to "get ahead" you have really saved something at last in spite of yourself!

Information on Masonry.

Dear Mrs. Bargelt: I would like some information on masonry construction. Where can I get this? Also on construction and building of houses, mostly small houses?—N. F.

Ans.—If you will go to the nearest public library you can probably get the following books or have them ordered for you: "Building Construction," by Beresford Pite [Longmans, Green & Co.]; "Masonry," by Marland A. Howe [John Wiley & Sons]. You may also find H. Vandervoort Walsh's "Construction of Small Houses" helpful.

Window in Clothes Closet Helps Keep Moths Away

Where it is possible a window placed in the outer wall of a clothes closet is one of the best precautions against moths. These pests do not thrive where air circulates.

Trim of Clothes Closets Omitted to Save Costs

Where cost must be carefully considered, doors and trim for clothes closets are often omitted. This means of course that curtains are substituted.

HOLLOW METAL WINDOW SASH IS A NOVELTY

An improved hollow metal window sash is offered to the interested person.

As the name suggests, the sash is made of rust resisting steel with sides, top and bottom members of a hollow steel tubing. All hardware is attached at the factory.

It is claimed for this new hollow metal sash that it in no way interferes with the screen, opening as it does on the inside with a sliding motion. Incidentally it might be mentioned that the frames and cross members are smaller than the average wooden sash and there is virtually no swelling or shrinking from the changing seasons.

Pattern Work Over French Windows Give Distinction

Arched patterns in brickwork over French windows or doorways are a decorative design effective on a home exterior. This pattern effect is of Italian influence, but is used on other than Italian home exteriors.

Broad Flooring Strips Popular in Newer Homes

In the new homes there is a distinct tendency to revert to the old, broad flooring strips. These are sometimes four inches wide, or wider. They present a handsome appearance.

Study Fireplace Position in Planning Main Bedroom

If one is considering a fireplace for the master bedroom, it is well to remember that a corner fireplace is practical from an arrangement standpoint. Often a bedroom fireplace is placed directly in the middle of one side of the bedroom. This means that a stretch of wall which might otherwise be utilized is broken into. Besides this the fireplace is often so near to other furniture that a hot fire is not possible.

Roof of Today Practically Fire and Weather Proof

The roof today is practically age-proof, stormproof, weather-proof, and fireproof. Consider this fact when you consider building a home—or reroofing your present home. It may influence your choice of a roofing material—and your peace and contentment for a good many years to come.

NEW BUILDING CODE TO AID CITY, ROSENTHAL SAYS

Council to Get Final Draft in Few Months.

BY THOMAS WREN.

Chicago will have the best building code of any city in America upon its completion within a few months, according to Oscar W. Rosenthal, head of the Builders' Association of Chicago.

OSCAR P. PASCHEN.

Work of revamping the city building code was started by Building Commissioner Christian P. Paschen immediately after he assumed office last spring. Since then the work of the various committees appointed by Mr. Paschen has progressed and the final draft of the city building code is expected to be presented to the city council within a few months.

The building code of the city was revised in 1911 and since then it has become antiquated, Mr. Paschen says.

"It is planned to have the new code sound in every respect," Mr. Rosenthal said in telling about the progress of work on it.

"It will be an orderly code—one that will be understood and permit complete interpretation and one that will do away with needless waste and restriction.

Will Safeguard City.

"The new code will make it possible to build economically and it will safeguard in every particular the health and safety of the people of Chicago. It will embody essential details in building which will contribute to the sound growth of the city.

"It is apparent that a code planned and arranged upon these lines will save the people of Chicago millions of dollars annually. It is obvious that an economic saving on building will ultimately benefit the families who rent apartments."

Mr. Rosenthal said the tremendous growth of Chicago during the last two decades necessitates new classifications of buildings to meet the changing conditions.

Zoning Brings Problems.

"The zoning ordinance of the city, passed in 1923, has also presented many problems which must be taken into consideration in connection with the revision of the code," said the Chicago builders' representative.

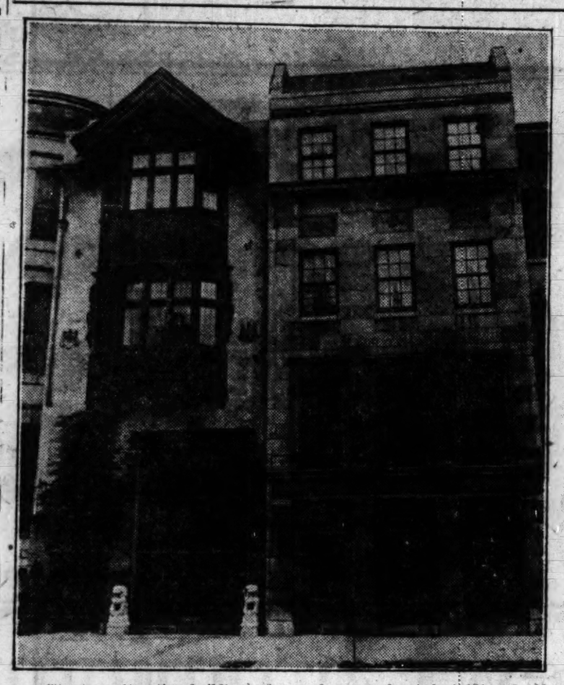
"Building Commissioner Paschen also plans to revise the method of taking out building permits and to change the cost of them. He believes a radical departure should be made from the old method. He estimates the change he plans will result in a definite cut in the cost of the permit and will aid the small home builder as well as the builders of the skyscrapers."

Building Commissioner Paschen's committee is called the committee on city ordinances and some of its members are Oscar W. Rosenthal, chairman; Frank M. Carroll, Paul Gerhart, John Christenson, Howard White, George Nimmons, Robert De Golyer, F. J. Theilhar, Peter Hein, A. R. Lord, J. A. Sutherland, Milton C. Hartman, George W. Dahl, Jacob Paschen, J. W. Wade, H. B. Barnard, Charles Fanning, John Flom, George Getchow, and R. W. Raftis.

FOR WESTERN SPORT ENTHUSIASTS

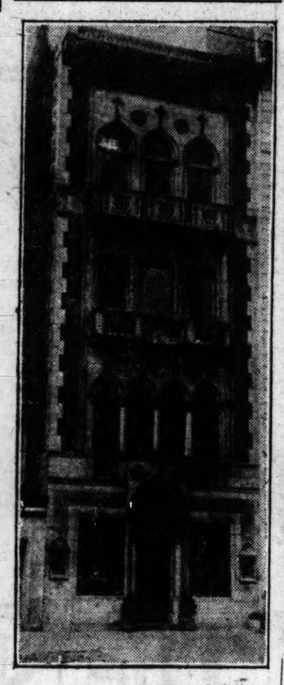
E. E. Roberts and Elmer Roberts are the architects for the clubhouse which members of the River Forest Country club propose to build on their property located on the north side of Grand avenue, just east of York road. It's to cost about $100,000, it is stated.

FROM UGLINESS TO BEAUTY



The two attractive buildings shown above are located at 150 and 152 East Ontario street. Formerly drab buildings like many of their present day neighbors, remodeling has made them both well worth a moment's inspection. The structure to the left is of old English architecture, while that to the right leans toward the French school.

VENETIAN

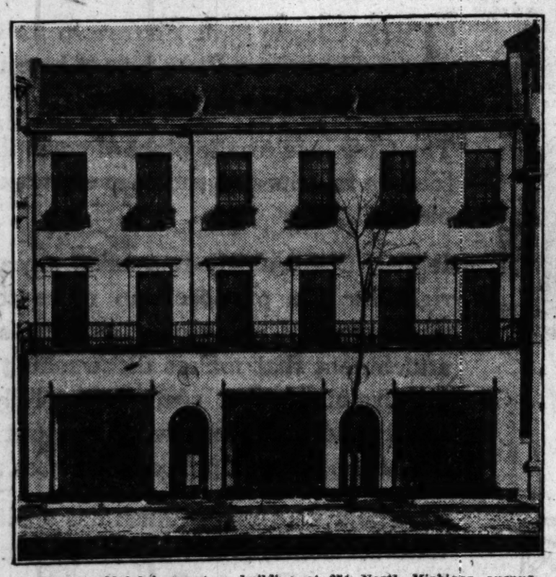


The above attractive building with a hint of the architecture of old Venice stands at 115 East Chicago avenue. A few years ago this structure would never have attracted the eye. Remodeled, it is one of the most attractive buildings on the near north side.

AN OLD STABLE

Above is the entrance to a charming residence in the rear of the remodeled home at 1247 North Dearborn street. Who would guess that the artistic Italian doorway leads to an interior that formerly was an old stable?

PLEASES THE EYE



Here is Malabry court, a building at 671 North Michigan avenue, which shows how remodeling of an antiquated old structure can bring forth something pleasing to the eye. The old front was removed and this one, of French design, substituted. Incidentally, the change won the structure a gold medal as being the best remodeled building for the year in the north central district.

REMODELING OF BUILDINGS HELPS REALTY VALUES

Three Gold Coast Areas Undergo Change.

apartment houses west to Broadway having been remodeled for business uses.

South and West.

But space is limited and we'll have to go south for a moment. There is the old Gold Coast section which included Prairie and Calumet avenues. Here the mansions of yore are being or have been reconditioned as headquarters for publishers. And along the south side's boulevards, not too far out, one finds any number of huge old mansions which have been remodeled for use by various kinds of trade and technical schools. Michigan avenue's metamorphosis into motor row needs no comment.

Perhaps the most interesting change on the west side is that of Ashland boulevard south from Madison toward Van Buren, where in the days of yesteryear many of Chicago's first families lived. Here many labor organizations have converted old mansions into their own headquarters.

LEWIS T. DODDS TO HEAD NORTH SHORE REALTORS

Lewis T. Dodds, a resident of Evanston, and a realtor of Winnetka, being in charge of the Quinlan & Tyson office in the latter suburb, is to be the next president of the North Shore Real Estate board, unless the unforeseen happens and a rival ticket is put in the field at the last moment. This is unexpected, however, according to H. D. Hill of Hill & Stone, chairman of the nominating committee.

Mr. Dodds will succeed Robert L. Wyatt, who will become a director for three years.

F. Coleman Burroughs of Wilmette, will be vice president; R. M. Vant of Deerfield, will be treasurer, and Robert H. Flaherty of Wilmette, secretary. Election will take place on Dec. 13. The board's annual banquet will be held on Wednesday evening, Dec. 14, at the North Shore hotel, Evanston, at which time the new officers will be installed.

RIVER FOREST CLUB PROPOSES $100,000 HOME

Plans have been prepared by E. E. Roberts and Elmer Roberts for a clubhouse for the River Forest Country club which was organized about a year ago. The club has a site of 140 acres on the north side of Grand avenue, just east of York road, about seventeen miles from the loop.

It is expected that work will start on the clubhouse early next spring with completion expected for some time in the fall. The design is to be early Norman English as typified by the use of half timber work. There will be accommodations for 350 members.

Included in the features will be a locker room, a large lounge with a big open fireplace and a dining room. The cost of the building is to be $100,000.

The club's grounds contain a grove, while the terrain is rolling. An eighteen hole golf course, 6,700 yards long, will be ready for play next spring. The club, which serves the residents of River Forest and other western suburbs, now has 150 members. Its goal is 350. George A. Chritton of River Forest is president and Alfred J. Parker of Oak Park is secretary.

The Congress Hotel company bought from Harris Whittemore of Naugatuck, Conn., the fee in 38½x173 feet comprising a part of the site of the Congress hotel, south of Congress street on Michigan avenue, for $200,000. The property is under lease to the hotel company for ninety-nine years from May, 1892, at an annual rental of about $8,000 net to the lessor. It was purchased in the early '60s by Elisha Whitehead, who improved it with a residence, where he resided about thirty years. In 1892 Ferdinand W. Peck purchased the property from Mr. Whitehead for $154,000, later selling it to John W. Whittemore, father of the present vendor.

Mr. McDonald gives in part payment the vacant lot at the northeast corner of Drexel boulevard and 43d street. This lot is valued at $60,000.

To Dec. 4, 1907; 20 Years Ago Today

Ogden the residence property at 111 Lake Shore drive, being 150 feet north of Schiller street, for $72,775. Mrs. Blackstone secured $36,000 of the purchase money by a trust deed, Orson Smith, trustee, five years, at five per cent. The lot is 45x179 feet and the residence is a three story stone house built by Frost & Cobb several years ago. V. C. Sanborn represented the Ogden estate in the transaction.

Steuben Club Building Will Be 40 Stories

Wreckers are scheduled to begin tearing down the historic old Briggs house at the northeast corner of Randolph and Wells on Jan. 18th, to make way for the new Steuben office building, which it was announced last night is to be forty stories instead of thirty-two as originally announced on June 27, 1926. The upper eighteen floors are to be occupied by the Steuben club, of which Henry J. Greune is president.

HENRY J. GREUNE.

The theater part of the project has been abandoned although negotiations were under way with the Shuberts for its lease. Twenty-one stories will be devoted to offices. There'll be ten stores on the first floor. The architects are K. M. Vitzthum & Co. and John J. Burns.

The building will represent a reported investment of approximately $7,000,000. Louis J. Krensky of A. M. Krensky & Brother is treasurer of the corporation and negotiated the financing of the $4,000,000 first mortgage 15 year 6 per cent bonds.

Hieatt, president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, will be the principal speaker at the forty-fifth annual banquet of the Chicago realtors, which will be held at the Stevens hotel on Dec. 15. The banquet committee states that Mr. Hieatt will speak on a subject regarding which realtors have probably more interest than anything else; nothing other than "Real Estate" itself.

James W. Belanger, a member of the Chicago Real Estate board, living at 639 Hillside avenue, Glen Ellyn, has been appointed a member of the Glen Ellyn plan commission by James H. Slawson, president of the village. The appointment has been confirmed by the village board. This gives the suburban plan commission two realtors, the other being Willis L. Irish of W. H. Wright & Co. Mr. Belanger is associated with Gordon Strong & Co. He is chairman of the transit committee of the Chicago Real Estate board.

SAYS BANKERS BROKE RECORD OF PITTSFIELD

Lorenzo C. Dilks, president of the Dilks Construction company, states that he believes the Bankers' building was erected faster than the Pittsfield building was. The latter, it was claimed recently, broke speed records in construction.

"In the construction of the Bankers' building, at the southwest corner of Clark and Adams, we made a much more rapid performance than that on the Pittsfield building," writes Mr. Dilks.

"We started wrecking in September, about the same time as that work was started for the Pittsfield building. The last tenants moved into the Bankers' building in July and since Oct. 1 the entire interior of the Bankers' building has been completed ready for occupancy, whereas even at this time the lower and other portions of the Pittsfield building are far from completion."

Beg Your Pardon

The thirteen apartments at 4327 North Sacramento avenue were sold by Albert B. Marcussen and Charles Perry Fralun to William and Bertha Kroll for $70,000 and not $50,000, as reported in this section last Sunday, according to the Logan Square Bond and Realty company, which negotiated the sale.

HILLMAN'S AND STOP AND SHOP DIVIDE SPACE

Further details of the merged Hillman's and Stop & Shop grocery stores were disclosed yesterday. It is stated that the Hillman section will occupy the west portion of the first floor and the entire basement of the seventeen story building now being erected at 16 to 30 West Washington street. The S. & S. store will have separate quarters in the east section of the first and second floors. Both will use part of the third and fourth floors.

The exterior will be of black and rose granite on the first floor. The remainder of the front elevation will be of white enameled terra cotta, with polychrome ornamentation. Schmidt, Garden & Erikson are architects.

The entire project when completed will represent a reported total valuation of approximately $3,750,000. Greenebaum Sons' Investment company has underwritten a $2,300,000 bond issue at 6 per cent.

Hiram Cody to Talk at Real Estate Board Round Table

Hiram Cody, vice president of the Cody Trust company, will give a talk on "Building a Mortgage Business" on Wednesday evening following the next regular monthly business meeting and buffet supper of the Chicago Real Estate board.

Trend in Champion Beef Cattle Toward Smaller Animals

Winner at the Stock Show Weighs 1,055 Pounds.

BY FRANK RIDGWAY.

CHANGING conditions in the beef cattle world are reflected in the International Live Stock exposition's grand champions. If all the twenty-six title holders of North America could be paraded in a solid line it would be easy to see that, in general, the grand champions are becoming smaller and younger, with production costs going lower and selling prices climbing higher.

These twenty-six patterns show breeders how to cut the "cloth" in the future in order to produce animals that will turn out steaks and roasts to fit the city consumers' pots and platters. About half the grand champions have been pure breds and the other half either grades or cross-breds. The heaviest one weighed 1,870 and the lightest one 960 pounds. Sixteen of them came from agricultural colleges and ten from private breeders and feeders.

Steers Favored.

Steers have always taken the honor excepting one year, in 1921, when Lulu Mayflower, a cross-bred Shorthorn and Aberdeen-Angus, was awarded the grand champion title. Cross-bred animals have only won three times, but in that fact lies a secret that breeders and feeders can well afford to study. All three cross-bred champions have been bred and fed by the University of California, Davis, Cal. California produced the title holder in 1916, 1921, and again this year.

At the 1927 exposition, which has just closed, California Stamp was awarded the grand prize for being the supreme beef animal, steer or heifer, out of 604 competing. The new grand champion was produced by crossing a Shorthorn sire with an Aberdeen-Angus dam, the same kind of a cross that produced Lulu Mayflower, the winner six years ago.

It is this kind of breeding that produces the blue roan cattle, the finest beef animals in all Scotland and England. This is the cross so highly prized by Walter Beggar of Dalbeattie, Scotland, the judge who awarded the grand championship honor to California Stamp. He is a breeder of pure bred Galloway cattle and is a breeder and feeder of the blue roans, produced by crossing a white Shorthorn sire with either an Aberdeen-Angus or Galloway cow, according to Prof. G. H. True, an animal breeding authority of the California university.

Finest of All.

It is significant to the future cattle men of this country that Judge Biggar found California Stamp to be the finest grand champion candidate he has ever run his hand over at this or previous Internationals. He has picked three of the twenty-six grand champions. While Stamp has a red coat of hair, with a sprinkling of white on his left hip, his veins are filled with blue roan blood.

Stamp and Lulu Mayflower were both from a Shorthorn-Angus cross, while the California Favorite, the first cross-bred animal to win the great title, was produced by crossing a Hereford sire with an Angus dam.

Prof. True points out the value of constructive breeding, which is shown in the California grand champions. He says that the Aberdeen-Angus blood in the 1916 and 1927 grand champions, Lulu Mayflower and California Stamp, can be traced back to Black Woodlawn, the greatest bull of that breed in America, while on the Shorthorn side the red, white, and roan blood of these two famous animals can be traced back to King Cumberland and White Hall Sultan. Prof. True says that White Hall Sultan is considered the greatest Shorthorn bull ever produced in this country.

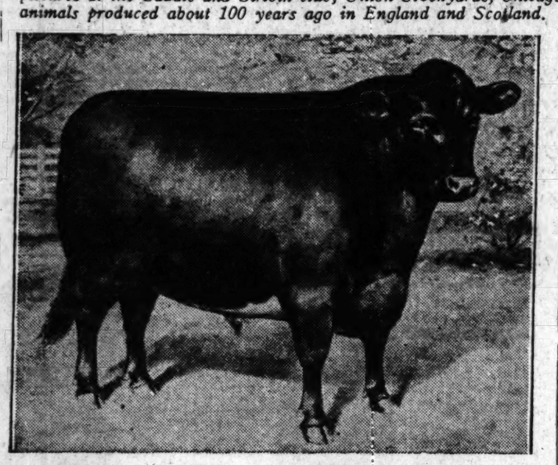
Grand champions twenty-two or three years ago weighed nearly twice as much as they do today. The day California Stamp was given the grand prize he weighed 1,055 pounds. He lacked only 375 pounds of weighing as much when he was thirteen months old as the first grand champion of 1900 weighed when he was twenty-five months old. Three of the early grand champions were more than three years old at the time they were exhibited.

Midwesterners, who make beef with corn as the basis of their fattening ration, were interested to find out that California Stamp has been produced without a grain of corn. His chief ration was made up of equal parts of barley, oats, and bran. He was also given alfalfa hay and stock beets.

Alex McDonald, who came over here from Scotland years ago, has fitted all three of the grand champions produced by the California university. As a veteran herdsman McDonald, who has been at the California station sixteen years, says it takes more than grain and hay and a currycomb to produce a grand champion. He gives full credit to the kind of breeding system followed by the California university's animal husbandry men.

CHANGING CATTLE WORLD

CENTURY AGO—A picture of this "Durham Ox" hangs in the rare collection of cattle pictures at the Saddle and Sirloin club, Union Stockyards, Chicago. It illustrates the kind of beef animals produced about 100 years ago in England and Scotland.



QUARTER CENTURY AGO—FIRST GRAND CHAMPION—Advance, the grand champion fat beef animal of the first International Live Stock exposition, held at Chicago in 1900. He weighed 1,430 pounds and was more than two years old, or about twice as old as this year's grand champion. Advance was only 375 pounds heavier than California Stamp, the 1927 grand champion. The first beef king was owned by Stanley R. Pierce, an old Illinois Aberdeen-Angus breeder.

TODAY—LAST GRAND CHAMPION—California Stamp is shown above a few minutes after he was recently declared the 1927 grand champion beef animal of the International Live Stock exposition, Chicago. He weighs 1,055 pounds—a half a ton of beef—and he is only thirteen months old. Stamp is built so low to the ground that his back comes slightly above the waistline of a six foot man. He is a cross bred Shorthorn-Aberdeen-Angus, produced by California university, Davis, Cal.

Popcorn Harvest Spreads Over More Land Every Year

AGRICULTURE has a comparatively new and specialized industry which has literally popped into existence within the last few years. Popcorn was a comparatively insignificant commercial crop twenty-five years ago when most of it was grown in a few rows planted in the farmer's truck patch. Today there are more than 40,000 acres raised in the four main popcorn states, Iowa, Nebraska, Michigan and Illinois where, in some cases, more than 200 acres are grown on a single farm.

Twenty years ago there were less than 9,000 acres grown in these four states. Iowa is now the leading popcorn state, growing from 25,000 to more than 30,000 acres a year. Most of the Iowa crop is grown in two counties, Ida and Sac, centering at Odebolt, Ia., where big curing and drying cribs are located.

This year it is roughly estimated that about 30,000 acres of popcorn were planted in Iowa. The planting was late and the crop suffered heavily from poor stands and floods, leaving something like 25,000 acres to harvest. Picking of the crop is now in full swing in most of the popcorn sections of the middle west.

Growers in Illinois' popcorn section, centering around Morris, Ill., in Grundy county, will have 200 to 300 acres more to harvest this winter than last. With the improvement in storing and drying facilities in this state Illinois popcorn acreage is likely to increase during the next few years. More than 1,000 acres are grown in Grundy county.

Despite the unfavorable seasons during the last few years there is apparently plenty of popcorn, which will be selling at a reasonable price for the Christmas holidays. The 1926 crop is the one that will be used this Christmas. Popcorn grown this year will not be fit to shell or pop until next June or July, according to J. A. Hafner, a popcorn expert at 512 South Peoria street, Chicago. In Kansas popcorn matures earlier and dries out more quickly and is ready to pop in January and February.

Mr. Hafner's reports from the popcorn sections of Iowa show that during the last six or seven weeks weather conditions have been favorable for the drying and curing of the crop, greatly improving the keeping and popping qualities of the corn. There has been a great improvement in the popcorn crop of Nebraska since the last of August and the first of September. The crop matured much better than growers had expected, and the quality is considered quite good.

The price of white rice popcorn in Nebraska is expected to be about $1.50 a hundred. This variety is used extensively by confectionaires. Baby rice popcorn is expected to sell at about $2 a hundred.

J. G. Willier, a popcorn expert of the Odebolt district and formerly with the United States government's staff of grain and crop specialists, says that today there are two leading varieties of popcorn—rice type with sharp beaked kernels and the pearl type with smooth or rounded kernels.

Wheat Pasture Excellent for Dairy Cows, Expert Says

R. H. Lush of the Kansas State Agricultural college says that wheat pasture is excellent for dairy cows, but some grain should be fed with it. He says that the following mixture is cheap and satisfactory: 100 pounds of wheat bran, 10 pounds of corn or some sorghum grain, and 25 pounds of cottonseed meal. Cheap, dry roughage, such as corn stover, sudan hay, or straw may be utilized by the cows at this time.

11.4 Bushels of Corn Equal 100 Pound Hog in Chicago

Figures worked out by the farm organization and management department of the College of Agriculture, University of Illinois, show that, as an average for a long period, it takes 11.4 bushels of No. 2 mixed corn to bring as much money as 100 pounds of medium to choice heavy hogs at Chicago.

ILLINOIS FARMERS WILL MEET AT ROCK ISLAND, ILL.

The Illinois Agricultural association will hold its annual thirteenth meeting at Rock Island, Ill., Jan. 18, 19 and 20, according to an announcement sent out from the organization's Chicago headquarters. The meeting is to be more than an annual meeting of the farmers and farm bureau workers of Illinois; Iowa, Indiana and Missouri farmers are to take part, giving it a corn belt flavor.

The chamber of commerce of Rock Island has reserved the governmental arsenal for Jan. 20, when a "giant luncheon" is to be attended by visitors from other states. Reservations for 500 farmers who will attend the luncheon already have been made through the Iowa Farm bureau, according to reports coming to the Illinois association.

NEWS OF CHICAGO SOCIETY

Assembly Heads Week's Activities

By Mildred Jaklon.

CHICAGO'S two assemblies, the first of which will be the crowning social event of this week's calendar, constitute the last rampart of the city's tradition of formality for formality's sake. Long white gloves, the receiving line, and elegant floral decorations are, however, the only evidences left of that formality. Whereas, it can be imagined that in days gone by, milady of fashion took a day in the afternoon to prepare her for the occasion, took several hours for the arrangement of her puffs and the variety of coiffure, the donning of her voluminous gown with the million hooks and eyes down the back, and regarded the ball as a formidable occasion, today's fashionable dame merely looks upon it as an incidental affair to be rushed to from the opera, and dinner, arriving at the stroke of midnight, garbed in the uncomplicated attire of today.

Even the title of the committee managing the affair, the board of governors, is reminiscent of the statesmen of former times. Arthur Meeker is chairman of the group, and serving with him are Donald M. Ryerson, Lester Armour, Watson F. Blair, William McCormick Blair, Augustus A. Carpenter, Joseph G. Coleman, Richard T. Crane Jr., Wayne Chatfield-Taylor, who is now abroad, Stanley Field, Robert A. Gardner, Howard F. Gillette, Morris L. Johnston, Charles G. King, Harold F. McCormick, Eames McVeagh, William R. Odell, Clive Runnells, A. A. Sprague, John A. Stevenson, and Bertram Winston. The wives of the older members of the governing body customarily receive for the first affair, which is to take place on Friday evening in the Gold ballroom of the Congress, and the younger women preside at the second, which is to be on Jan. 13, 1928.

Twice 400.

Discrediting the old "400" idea of society, the Assembly list, which is admittedly the most exclusive of all, last year contained the names of 340 married couples, 134 single men, and 59 unmarried maidens, making a total of 873 souls. Some of the unmarried women who are favored with bids to the august affair include Miss Anita Blair, Miss Harriet and Miss Beatrice Borland, Miss Nellie Carpenter, Miss Cornelia Conger, Miss Edith Cummings, Miss Sarah Hinde, Miss Edith Hoyt, Miss Angela Johnston, Miss Caroline Kirkland, Miss Judith Mabbatt, Miss Jane Linn, Miss Mabel Linn, Miss Elizabeth and Miss Muriel McCormick, the three McFadden sisters, Eleanor, Frances, and Marion; Miss Sarane Otis, Miss Marie Rozet, Miss Marousa Russell, Miss Mary Waller, Miss Rue Winterbotham, and Miss Jane Warner.

Affairs of the Week.

Other affairs of the week include a musical to be given this afternoon by Mr. and Mrs. William J. Chalmers at their apartment at 1100 Lake Shore drive, and a musical to be given by Mrs. Warren M. Salisbury and her son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Kimball Salisbury [Wilmot Eaton] on Friday at the Blackstone.

Mr. and Mrs. Laird Bell have invitations out for a dinner at the Arts club to precede the assembly on Friday evening.

The good parishioners of St. Chrysostom's church are to be on the job from 10 in the morning until 10 in the evening on Thursday staging their annual bazaar.

Old Landmarks Rapidly Disappear

By Mme. X.

THE present moment in Chicago might well be called the de-constructive era in the city's growth. So many old and familiar landmarks are being destroyed to make way for what is coming—a new skyscraping metropolis—that to the old resident the Chicago of yesterday seems to be crumbling before a blind, implacable force. The disheveled, untidy masses of the Victor Lawson house on the Lake Shore drive resemble the ruins of the palace of the Caesars on the Palatine hill in Rome before Prof. Lanciani cleaned up the place and gave it form and shape.

It does not seem so very long ago that the late Mr. Lawson built that house, to the admiration of his contemporaries. That he expected it to be of a truly permanent nature is proven by its solid construction. He sent to Holland for the bricks and they came over on a sailing vessel. When they arrived union workmen made some difficulty as to their unhallowed, nonunion character. They must have yielded their point, as the doubly cursed material from across the water was ultimately used and walls of unusual thickness were erected. Still further to secure the silence and remoteness the Lawsons desired, double windows which could not be opened were installed.

Within the mansion, for such it was, with its lofty ceilings, spacious rooms and general air of stately aloofness, heavy carpets and deep wooled oriental rugs further deadened any interior sound. To go inside from the roar of the outer traffic was like entering the secluded interior of one of the tombs of the pharaohs in the Egyptian pyramids. So impressive was the stillness that, involuntarily, the unaccustomed visitor spoke in whispers; at least, I know of two who did.

Still further to insure the permanence of his abode Mr. Lawson had his fine, imported bricks set, not in the customary mortar, but in imperishable cement. So when the destroyers thought to make some profit out of the old brick work [each brick was said to be worth twenty cents] they found it was impossible to detach them from their settings. The walls had to be blown up with dynamite to bring them down. They fell in mighty chunks which could serve no purpose and are being dumped in the nearby lake.

Verily, all is vanity, as the prophet said, and no man can build for futurity—at least, not here in Chicago.

Four Old Houses Go.

Further down the Lake Shore drive on the corner of Chestnut street other once well known abodes are yielding more swiftly and gracefully to the demands of the new era. Four houses that once sheltered well known families, are melting away. Probably by the time these lines appear a soaring structure will be well on the way, so swift are the methods of our de-constructors. The residence on that corner was for many years associated with that agreeable couple from New England's oldest aristocracy, the Barrett Wendells. Both belong to the Boston Brahmins, as Mrs. Wendell is a Higginson of Boston, than which not even the Biddles of Philadelphia are more exalted, while Barrett Wendell is a son and namesake of that distinguished scholar, the late Barrett Wendell, long associated with Harvard university.

Their next door neighbors were the Charles L. Strobels, noted for their pleasant hospitality. Next to them once lived the Herman Kohlsaats, among our most interesting and well known citizens in their time. Neighbors to the south of the Kohlsaats were the Alexander H. Revells, also of local renown. They have departed from Chicago and are making a leisurely tour of the globe. Thus closes the chapter in our local history connected with that block of houses and nothing that takes the place of these four abodes will ever have the personality and individuality each of these enjoyed. So goes, not old Chicago [that went long ago] but middle aged Chicago.

Plan to Visit Pau.

The de-construction of the Lawson house is driving its next door neighbor to the north, Edward Blair, away several months before he usually takes his departure. In January he and his daughter, Mrs. Howard Linn, are going to Pau, that gay French winter resort at the foot of the Pyrenees where lovers of the horse especially delight to gather from January to April. It is great country for riding, having beautiful trails in all directions. There is also a polo team and a hunting set with a pack of lively hounds. The place is not much visited by American tourists, but is beloved of smart English folk and of continental social lights.

Pretty much the same crowd frequents it as gathers in the summer season at Dinard, on the English channel, for cards, tennis and other pleasures. Among them are several Russian grand dukes and grand duchesses, who are still qualified to give that romantic atmosphere to society so enjoyed by many stanch democrats from this side of the water.

A So-Called Trial.

Apropos of our democracy, one of its curious phases, or manifestations, is the so-called trial now going on in the board rooms of the board of education at 650 South Dearborn street. It is not democracy's prettiest aspect. To the unitiated outsider it looks not unlike the famous trial scene in "Alice in Wonderland." Everything but the subject in hand seems to be presented by the attorney for the board, who, with his high, bent shoulders and somewhat beaklike nose, resembles not a little a somewhat dyspeptic or disgruntled bird of prey. Certainly none such ever had a more raucous note in his cry than the attacker of Mr. McAndrew. When Francis X. Busch, Mr. McAndrew's defender, offered to present a statement from the latter ten days ago, with a voice that must have torn any ordinary throat, the prosecuting attorney screeched—yes, he screeched:

"When we want Mr. McAndrew

NEWS OF CHICAGO SOCIETY

'll call him." This he repeated again and again.

A more ruffled, enraged raven never stretched wide his beak than did former Judge Righeimer as his prey escaped him by walking out. He was the judge who, a little over four years ago, intimated that he would jail Mrs. Kellogg Fairbank and her aids in a dispute as to election methods pursued by them. He also will be remembered as the judge who was successful in unseating Maj. Funkhouser from the morals commission.

What place has this present affair between the powers that be and the conduct of our public schools got in a p. p. p., do you ask? My friends, it is in place because it is the topic of fashionable dinner tables and because every one in the community, even the most light headed and foolish minded, is concerned in what is going on in Chicago today.

Society as a conglomeration of people on pleasure bent is not important to a community, but as a pretty solid and united contingent of citizens, with money for campaigns and with votes to be deposited at polling places, it has a value not to be overlooked. What counts in elections is united action. Arouse the seemingly frivolous and they can become serious. This col. would like to arouse the frivolous to a realization of what is going on. Take in one of those Wednesday afternoon seances at the board of education instead of playing contract bridge or going to a matinee. It's worth while and full of real drama and surprises.

It also helps one understand why that wise old guy, Socrates, preferred to take hemlock instead of renouncing his opposition to the rule of a democracy as carried on in the Athens of his time. In some ways Athens of the third century B. C. must have been a little, a very little, like Chicago today. A more intimate acquaintance with the workings of any modern city government will hurt no citizen. There's drama aplenty and mystery and excitement galore.

Plans for New Opera House.

Another and prettier outlook on Chicago today is afforded by a visit to Ernest Graham's offices, where the plans of the proposed new opera house can be seen. When completed it bids fair to be one of the most striking and wonderful of our national contributions to soaring architecture. It is to be forty-two stories in height. The great opera auditorium will be in the heart of the structure, almost level with the street. It will run from south to north and will have a colonnade on three sides which will afford a sheltered entrance to pedestrians as well as to motorists.

Thirty-five automobiles can land their passengers at a time at the east line of the building, which is on Market street. (Incidentally it is the fervent hope of this p. p. p. that this old name will be left on this wide and important thoroughfare. We are too prone to destroy records of the past by changing our street nomenclature.) The lines of the building are stately and impressive, shooting skyward in a joyous manner that carries the eye up from the river bank to Chicago's ever murky heavens.

The opera hall will seat 3,500. It will have forty-two boxes, which will serve considerably to diminish the present task of Mrs. Arthur Meeker's opera box committee which has seventy-three boxes to dispose of each season. I foresee the time when the competition will be as to who shall have the privilege of owning an opera box, not how such contribution to the cause of music can be avoided or sidestepped, as is sometimes the case nowadays.

Quick Elevator Service.

Four spacious elevators will be provided to carry such of the occupants of gallery seats as do not care to mount the stately double staircase that will lead up to those upper regions. These elevators will be adequate to transport 1,500 in an incredibly short time. The stage of the new opera house will be one of the striking features of the enterprise. Its width will be 100 feet and its height 150 feet. This is fifty feet higher than the present stage at the Auditorium and the added height will permit of greater scenic effects than any Chicagoans have yet seen on a local stage.

In addition to the large opera auditorium, there will be, in the building, a smaller hall for concerts and "opera intime." The whole undertaking is a masterpiece in practical conception. In it Samuel Insull has shown his genius as an organizer of great enterprises. When it arrives at its final goal it will be a musical foundation that will assure to Chicago a grand opera supported largely from the profits of the building.

Color Scheme Important.

It is to be hoped that it will not only be the practical that will be considered in the construction of the new opera house. Ever since the present Auditorium was built Chicago opera audiences have endured what probably was the ugliest interior, as far as color was concerned, to be found on this old globe of ours. As a background for handsome women and fine costumes it is a hopeless failure. As a well known former Chicago woman, now visiting here, asked: "Why is Chicago so fond of mustard color as a background for us? Both the Auditorium and Orchestra hall have always provided this hideous color for us women. Why not crimson and gold and white, such as has been long proven as becoming in European opera houses?" "Beauty pays," this wise woman added.

It certainly does, as evidenced by many things, including the Acropolis at Athens, the Alpine mountains, the Italian lakes, the Place de la Concorde at Paris, the mountains and coast line of southern California, the interior of the Metropolitan Opera house in New York, and other places that attract mankind.

Mr. Graham's plans present a handsome and spacious foyer and double, curving stairway. It is to be hoped, for the sake of our well dressed and bejeweled women, that he will provide a becoming background for their fine costumes. The musical are hoping that the fine acoustic properties of the present temple of opera can be copied in its new home. Much is expected of the new project. It is safe to predict that the master minds who have it in charge are as capable in this enterprise as they have proven

WOMEN'S CLUB PAGE

University Club in Temporary Home

By Kate Webber.

MEMBERS of the board of directors of the Woman's University club of Chicago, which celebrated its first birthday last May, are elated over the establishment last week of temporary quarters at 3 North Wabash avenue, which they expect to occupy until their permanent building plans, now in the hands of the committee, will have been brought to completion.

A large lounge for members, also the executive offices, compose the new quarters, where meetings are to be held once each month, in addition to other committee and social sessions.

Organized in May, 1926, for the purpose of providing a club residence in the loop for college and university women, the club now has a membership of 500 women toward its goal of 1,000. Memberships are inheritable and transferable, and represent an equity in the property.

Plans for a Home.

Plans for the club home call for eight floors which will contain sleeping rooms, dining rooms, meeting rooms, both public and private, a banquet hall, large assembly hall, beauty parlor, gymnasium, and swimming pool.

The private meeting rooms will be available for committee meetings, society meetings, teas, and bridge parties, and the public meeting rooms will offer such social and cultural advantages as lectures, concerts, glee, and dramatic club performances, etc.

With the entry of woman into fields that bring her into direct competition with man, it has become necessary for her to acquire a mode of living which gives her the utmost economy of effort, and modern club life offers her the best facilities for such a desirable objective.

Out of town members will find numerous other advantages in addition to those enjoyed by resident members as mentioned above. The club will furnish a permanent address for letters and messages, a place where nonresident members may arrange for appointments when in town. Exchange privileges will be maintained with colleges and university clubs in other cities.

CLUB ETHICS - - - By Maude Swaim Evans

THE committee chairman hadn't counted on a lull in the conversation when she said emphatically to the secretary: "That woman hasn't any club sense." The statement was audible to all of the group at the luncheon table.

"Club sense?" What do you mean by club sense?" The perpetual member took it up.

"Any number of things," answered the committee chairman. "The member of whom I was talking got my committee into a fix by talking without authority—said we'd give twenty-five dollars to a cause and we haven't twenty-five cents."

"A very evident lack of club cents," punned the bulletin chairman.

"Sometimes even presidents lack club sense," remarked the librarian. "I know one who is always appointing special committees to settle matters that come up, or trying to settle them herself instead of referring them to the committee to which they belong. Why, she even tried to evade the membership committee and bring in one of her friends without the usual procedure."

"When it comes to new members a lot of women lack club sense," opinioned the bulletin chairman. "A member of our professional writers' club proposed a new member—said she worked for a certain newspaper. The membership committee found that she did—at the switchboard."

"One of ours tried to bring a phonograph operator into our musical club," laughed the librarian.

"I see you all have a general understanding of what I mean by club sense," observed the committee chairman.

"I should say it is putting our ideals high and living up to them. How do you define it?" asked the secretary.

"Let's see," thought the secretary, "I believe it's an indefinable thing that makes us act instinctively at all times for the best good of our club."

Question.

"Does the president of a club have to be elected delegate to the federation meetings?—S. T. P."

Reply.

The president should be the one best able to represent her club at such a meeting. Some clubs incorporate in their bylaws the rule that she shall be first delegate.

Question.

"What authority has a chairman for saying: 'If there are no objections the report will stand approved?'—N. D."

Reply.

Anything that can be done by a majority or a two-thirds vote can be done by general consent, which is equivalent to a unanimous vote.

ART AND ARTISTS

Institute Shows Reward the Visitor

By Eleanor Jewett.

THE Art institute bulletin this week is full of interesting items and comes as rather a relief, for the days just before a holiday are apt to be more or less empty of fresh art happenings. The needs of Santa Claus and the urgencies of children back from school take most of the attention of the world which sees things until the vacation period is well behind again.

Up to the middle of December the fascinating exhibition of color prints that has made the print galleries on the first floor of the Art institute the rendezvous of innumerable amused visitors during the last several weeks will still be shown. The English books with their captivating illustrations are from the collection of Mrs. James Ward Thorne and it is hopefully suggested that when this collection is complete it will be given permanently to the museum.

Japanese Prints.

Passing through the first rooms of the print galleries, you wander into those farther rooms where are found Japanese color prints by the early masters. Here is color for you, color that comes unfaded through the trials and vicissitudes of two and three hundred years. Here are gorgeous birds and wonderful beasts; parades of intriguing men and streets lined with the courtesan faces of "pretty ladies." Here are feast days and symbolic merrymaking. Here are austere mountains and blue plains of ruffled water. A number of the prints are the work of two of the first Japanese artists to use the wood block, Kiyonobu and Kiyomasu. This exhibition will remain to delight us until the first of the year.

Word comes that the two purchase prize paintings receiving the Mr. and Mrs. Frank G. Logan medals and respective sums of money ($1,500 and $1,000), "A Summer Day," by John E. Costigan, and "The Old Farm Hand," by James Chapin, in the current exhibition of American paintings and sculpture, have been accepted by the Art institute and will be hung in its permanent collection.

Through their supervisor of art, Harriet M. Cantrall, the Springfield, Ill., public schools have purchased the landscape, "Snow and Ice," by Thomas Barnett, seen in the American Paintings and Sculpture exhibit in the east wing galleries of the Art institute. This exhibition, by the way, will close Dec. 18.

In the children's museum there has been an interesting exhibition of Negro art. This has had a great many visitors of both colors. It closed last Thursday.

An Untimely Death.

The death in Rome of one of the most talented and promising graduates of the Art institute, Ida McClelland Stout, comes as a great shock to the many who knew and loved her here. Miss Stout had just entered upon what, from all appearances, would have been a most successful career and was engaged on advanced work in Rome when she was stricken by what turned out to be a fatal illness.

In competition with a number of Chicago sculptors a few years ago she won the commission for the modeling of the Daily News statue of Motherhood, which was erected in heroic size, in bronze, at the Daily News sanitarium. A number of other beautiful conceptions testify to her genius in working out graceful and beautiful designs in plastic form. A fellow student, Miss Ruth Sherwood, assistant now in charge of the modeling classes in the Art institute school, says of her: "Her work had a peculiar charm—a charm of poetical conception expressed in subtly changing form and graceful line. She was a tireless worker and never hesitated to devote holidays and evenings to her work, which was also her greatest joy. She always deprecated the attitude of those who sit with folded hands waiting for inspiration."

"The Shining Hour."

The Goodman Memorial theater has on Saturday afternoons a charming play for children, "The Shining Hour." Children from the age of 4 to that of 14, not to mention the mothers and others who accompany them, are entranced with St. Nicholas and his prancing reindeer, with the dragon that blows real fire from its mouth, at the stolid Indian in his wonderful feathers, and with the fascinating and timid little b'rer rabbit.

Two youngsters, 4 and 5 years, respectively, have been acting parts of it ever since they saw it a week ago, turning their dolls into the actor children, who were carried off by the Indian to the island, where fairy tales come true. The part of the mother is exquisitely done and made a deep impression, for one child always wishes to play the mother who sits and looks for her children, while the other is the Pied Piper Indian.

If any mother is hard up for a way in which to pass a charming afternoon with Tommy or John or Susan or Sally, go and see "The Shining Island," in which one true sophism is received with applause: "Americans are so busy doing things they haven't time to look inside." The "inside," of course, refers to the spiritual values which our rush-along world sometimes almost seems to forget.

Peasant Scenes Depicted.

Word comes from Signe Palmblad of a successful exhibition of her paintings and Swedish work, held in Rockford. Several paintings were sold and a great deal of interest aroused by her Dalecarlian peasant scenes. Last winter in Chicago she included two of these fascinating pictures, the peasants in one case skating and in the other sliding on a steep hillside, which made the visitor's blood tingle in his finger tips and his cheeks redden at the sting of the clear wind. Such pictures—these were of the peasant children in gay costumes—are perfect for our public schools.

Palmblad writes, there is to be an exhibition of work by Swedish-American painters at the "Café Idroit," 3206-10 Wilton avenue, near Belmont. Does she mean Wilson? Possibly a formal card will make it clearer. At all events, the Swedish-American club used to have stunning shows and this one may be just as good, held in this different place, though, from the several I have seen, I rather mistrust hotels and restaurants and such places when the exhibiting of pictures is in question. They never, apparently, have both adequate wall space and good lighting at the same time.

To Help Young Artists.

A new organization to help young artists has recently been established in New York. We might do well to have something like it here. They write: "Throughout the country young workers in design are taking advantage of the Free Vocational Guidance bureau instituted in New York for their benefit by the Arts Council. By means of this recently established service students can learn where to get proper training and how to fit themselves for professional life. Thousands of young craftsmen annually fail to realize their potentialities, it is said, because of training unsuited to their needs."

Incorporated last August under the auspices of the Architectural league and the National Academy of Design, the Arts Council of the City of New York is composed of fifty-nine of the leading organizations in New York devoted to the correlated arts and exists to further design, music, and drama by initiating new and vital activities.

Among its trustees are John G. Agar, president of the National Arts club; Otto H. Kahn, for many years a patron of the arts; Harvey Wiley Corbett, designer of the Bush tower, and many others.

The main point is free and expert advice; honest criticism with the prime motive of helping the one criticized. The bureau tries to give practical guidance to the hundreds of students who flock annually to New York, and to prevent others from arriving with unfounded hopes or false conceptions. For example, one young Illinois artist sent on samples of his work and was advised not to come, but to exhibit his work in New York as a free lance while he himself remained in Illinois. The plan proved successful.

"BERNICE OZMUN" by Antonin Sterba, a recent portrait from the brush of this Chicago artist who is a much loved figure in the school of the Art institute, to be found in the current exhibition of paintings at the Chicago Galleries association. The exhibit will close December 7. themselves in every other they have undertaken.

Here and in Germany.

It is furthermore to be hoped that, with all this splendid new equipment for this form of music, a genuine love of opera will sink its roots deep into our esthetic consciousness, and create an understanding enjoyment of it such as the Italians and Germans have for this form of music. In Germany there are many first class grand opera troupes, each aided in its support by the local government. Munich, Leipzig, Dresden, Berlin, Vienna, Prague, Frankfurt, Salzburg, just to mention the most outstanding of the operas, are all emulating each other in their production of important modern and classic pieces. They do not compete with each other; rather they coöperate with each other, and when a notable novelty is produced by one, the other opera companies are deeply interested and study the production with keen and friendly scrutiny. The entire staff of the Munich State Grand Opera company journeyed to Leipzig to see the new opera, "Jonny Spielt Auf," by Krenek, the Czecho-Slovak composer, whose work is attracting attention over there.

Opera managers over there are constantly modernizing their stage production. In this direction Reinhardt is the most conspicuous leader, with many of his ilk to copy, compete, and try to outdo him. John A. Carpenter says that Germany today is the best field for the modern composer. The interest of the public is intelligent and exhilarating, for behind the leaders of any new movement there must always be a numerous and understanding following.

He and Mrs. Carpenter sail on Thursday, and expect to be in Munich by January, when his "Sky Scraper" ballet will be produced at the Munich Grand Opera house. He is of the opinion that if in this country there could be the same interested and intelligent coöperation between our two great opera companies it would do much to advance the art of grand opera and of music in general.

A Chic Entertainment.

Apropos of the Carpenters, they gave one of the winter's most delightful and really chic entertainments last Sunday evening at the Arts club. It was a supper and musical. Although the guests were invited at 8 o'clock, they did not sit down at the charming tables until after 9. There were about 120 of the friends of the host and hostess, people drawn from the artistic, musical, and social circles of our community. There were young and not so young, and a delightful mixture they made.

The galleries and reception rooms of the Arts club, the creation of Mrs. Carpenter, were an enchanting background for the party. The lighting was almost entirely that of candles. There must have been hundreds of wax tapers shedding their soft glow, and really there is no radiance quite so delicious and becoming as that of candles. The short musical program did not begin until after 11 o'clock, and consisted of two pieces played by a string quartet headed by Jacques Gordon. The first composition was by Diefenbacher and the second, a lovely thing, was by the host, John A. Carpenter, being his first try at such a composition. It was midnight and after before the company dispersed, which is late for a Sunday evening party, and gave it a slightly and pleasantly dissipated air.

Terms Defined.

I think there is some confusion here in the understanding of the two titles, ambassador and minister. The envoy from Persia who recently spent a couple of days here was generally spoken of as an ambassador when he was in reality a minister plenipotentiary. The latter word means that he had slightly more power than the occupant of the post at the head of a legation.

Many people are of the opinion that ambassadors and ministers are both out of date and superfluous, that they belong to another era when emperors and kings were really rulers and sent their personal representatives to their brother monarchs. This age, they claim, has need only of business agents who can be best represented by the modern consular system. Be that as it may, it seems a little too soon to eliminate these officials from our international connections. They still have an important part to play if it be nothing else than promoting a friendly understanding between nations.

A popular, tactful and able diplomat is a valuable asset to any country. He must, however, be in the confidence of his government. This the German ambassador to England in 1914, Count Lichnowski, was not, so he developed in England a disbelief in the probability of war, which he apparently had, himself, to the great disadvantage of both sides. This writer thinks it is probable that, could he have warned both the English and told the Germans that the former would enter any conflict that was imminent and on the side of the French, the world war would not have taken place at all, or at least been deferred.

Charming Visitors.

Never did a more agreeable diplomatic couple come this way than the Prince and Princess de Ligne, from Belgium, who arrived officially to give a gold medal at the stock show last week. Prince de Ligne is the Belgian ambassador to Washington. His wife is French, though she looks more like an English woman. She is tall, slender, blonde, and very good looking. She has charming manners and speaks English perfectly, with only the slightest trace of foreign accent. Although she looks very young, she is the mother of four children, the oldest of whom is 19.

The prince also is blonde in coloring and looks like what he is, a thorough man of the world, courteous, efficient, agreeable. Both made a delightful impression on all who met them. They courteously expressed much interest in this western metropolis.

Of Interest to Many.

Noted Sportswoman Killed in Accident

By May Birkhead.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]
[Copyright: 1927: By The Chicago Tribune.]

PARIS.—[Special Correspondence.]—The devotees of racing on this side will miss Lady Victoria Bullock, who was carried away in a fatal accident on a hunting field. She often entertained and accepted the hospitality of such well known figures in racing as R. B. Strassburger, Mr. and Mrs. Honoré Palmer, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Munn, and Mr. and Mrs. A. K. Macomber.

Lady Victoria was the daughter of Lord Derby, former British minister of war and ambassador to France. He is the thirteenth earl of Derby and founded the famous Epsom event which bears his name. The first of the title held the Isle of Man in the fifteenth century and the line has been identified with great events. The great grandfather of the present earl was a brilliant orator and thrice was premier, while the immediate predecessors of the present earl were secretary of state for India and governor general of Canada.

The family has magnificent seats and residences near Liverpool, in London, and near Ascot. Lady Victoria was a marvelous judge of horseflesh and was considered largely responsible for the remarkable success of Lord Derby's stable this season, which won more than $200,000, the largest sum taken in by any British turfman.

Potter Palmers Entertained.

The comings and goings, with farewell dinners and teas, are furnishing the only social activities among the Americans for the moment. Mr. and Mrs. Potter Palmer are among the prominent Chicagoans returning home in time for Christmas. The Palmers have been in the south of France and Italy traveling for the last three months and now are being entertained at several informal parties in Paris. They are stopping at the Hotel Lotti and will sail Dec. 7.

The Honoré Palmers also are here, occupying their attractive apartment in Ile St. Louis, in the shadow of Notre Dame, one of the most artistic homes in Paris. Mrs. Palmer's chief hobby, after horses, is collecting antiques. They entertained at a luncheon in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Schlesinger, who just left for Cannes in search of the sunshine and are planning to proceed to the Balearic islands, returning to Paris around Dec. 18.

Off to the Riviera.

Other Chicagoans joining those preferring the early season on the Riviera are Dr. and Mrs. Leroy H. Sloan, who will leave soon to spend the entire winter at Cannes. Also, George Carr is planning to join the Chicago winter colony along the Riviera later. Now he is motoring through Italy with his daughter and has chosen Grasse as the ultimate destination, having taken the Villa Croisset with the family, when the January season opens.

ENGAGED

MISS ROSALYN GUTMANN.

Mr. and Mrs. David Gutmann of 1628 Columbia avenue announce the engagement of their daughter, Rosalyn, to Abe Harris, also of Chicago.

Maurice Rosenfeld will talk of "Tannhäuser." Musical illustrations of his theme will be given by Mmes. Kruse and Van Gordon and Messrs. Lamont, Bonelli and Kipnis, with William Tyroler as accompanist. There is nothing in Chicago's socio-musical life more chic and distinguished than these musicals given by the Friends of Opera. They have the opportunity of hearing singers of world-wide fame under delightful conditions.

On one of those warm days we had last week, the writer stood downtown waiting near a revolving four leafed door, one of those set between two ordinary swing doors. The latter two were wide open, fastened back to admit free entrance without any pushing. It seemed emblematic of the way the average mortal goes through this earthly career to note that the majority of those passing in and out of the shop pushed their way through the revolving set of doors, when, with half an eye, they might have seen that at both sides was unhampered passage.

A lot of us push heavy doors to an object we might reach with no effort if we but used a little perspicacity, or, in other words, "gray matter." Of such are those who push hard at the doors of what they consider "smart society." Just at the side is an open entrance for any one who is intelligent, clever, sincere, and, above all, self-respecting. There's no denying that an equipment of this world's goods helps much, but it is not enough to enable the person lacking these indispensables to slip through that open door. There are many other contacts with life where we stodgily push our way, when an instant's glance would show a clear path along which we could walk easily and pleasantly.

Activities of Women

Besides marketing several thousand eggs in New York annually, Mrs. Lucy B. Garber of Enid, Okla., sells 140,000 each year.

Mrs. Julia Wheelock, who served as a yeoman in the United States navy during the war, has been made head of the American Legion posts in Italy.

Miss Sicele O'Brien is Great Britain's first aerial taxi woman, having just passed the tests for a pilot's certificate qualifying her to take passengers for hire.

Mrs. Gerald Beaumont, governor of the Isle of Sark, in the British channel, is the second woman in the history of the island to have the honor of being its governor.

Because she has been adjudged as the healthiest woman in Tokio, Japan, Mrs. Kikuko Kiuchi has been selected as nurse for the new Japanese royal baby.

NEWS OF NEWYORK SOCIETY

Wedding Takes Gotham by Surprise

By Dolly Madison.

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—Society's greatest surprise of the week came in the form of the sudden marriage of Grafton Minot and the former Mrs. William P. Burden on Monday at the home of Mrs. Luther Kountze, the bride's mother, 520 Park avenue.

No one had looked for any such happening. It was known that Mrs. Burden, the former Ann Kountze and wife of Mrs. James Gorden Douglas, had been abroad all summer, petitioning the Paris courts for her freedom and that finally she had returned triumphant from her quest.

Grafton Minot of the Boston Minota has long been a resident of town and been a favorite in society. Thus his appearance in town Monday morning did not mean anything out of the way but the majority of his acquaintances. Soon the news soon spread that Grafton Minot, the erstwhile Ann Kountze had been at city hall in search of a license.

Only the Family Present.

Only the closest members of the two families were at Mrs. Kountze's apartment for the ceremony, which was performed by the Most Rev. William Henry Francis, archbishop of New York of the Old Catholic church.

Grafton Minot's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Grafton Minot, came on from Boston for the ceremony, as did also Mr. and Mrs. John L. Weston, Mr. and Mrs. Amory Hollingsworth and Mrs. Charles Minot Amory. The new Mrs. Minot's two sons by her first marriage also attended, James Gordon Douglas Jr., and Barclay H. Douglas. Others at the ceremony were Col. and Mrs. De Lancey Kountze, their daughters, Helen and Martha, Mr. and Mrs. Fulton Cutting and Schuyler Livingston Parsons.

Both Grafton Minot and the former Ann Kountze having been married and divorced, the quietness of the wedding is understood, but its secrecy amazed society. Mr. Minot was divorced in 1925 from Constance Gardner, daughter of the late Congressman Augustus Peabody Gardner, and granddaughter of the late Senator Henry Cabot Lodge.

Met in Europe.

They met abroad in 1914, at the outbreak of the war. Grafton Minot at the time was an attaché of the American embassy in Berlin. Then, at that time, Miss Gardner was abroad with her father and in the work of aiding Americans to get home. The two met and fell in love. Their marriage followed upon their return home. Following their divorce, Mrs. Minot subsequently married William Gordon Means, and her two children by her first marriage, William Amory Minot, and Anna Lodge Minot, live with her.

The new Mrs. Minot was first married to James Gordon Douglas, and it was while she was Mrs. Douglas that her father, the late Luther Kountze, died, leaving her $1,500,000. Following her divorce from Mr. Douglas in 1919, she married William P. Burden, whom she has just divorced.

Society Surprised.

When Tuesday brought the report of the engagement of Rachel Littleton Vanderbilt to Jasper Morgan, son of the H. D. Morgans of Wheatley Hills, L. I., society was positively flabbergasted. Only the Saturday before news had come that the wife of Cornelius Vanderbilt Jr. had obtained her freedom in Nevada, and no one even knew that Mrs. Littleton Vanderbilt was in town, let alone that she was prepared to announce her engagement.

The Morgans are immensely wealthy, but manage to keep from the public eye, being devoted to the Old England life of Long Island, as are the Whitneys, Stevensons, and Leeds, and Jasper Morgan, one of the younger sons, is popular among the riding and hunting sets.

A Feud Started.

When the late Isaac Brokaw passed away, his will brought a pretty feud in to the Brokaw clan that was not of his making. By its terms, George Brokaw was to have occupancy of the Brokaw mansion at 79th street and 5th avenue for life. However, George decided that he did not care to live in the Brokaw home and that since apartment sites were bringing vast sums, it would be better to demolish the edifice and erect a tall apartment.

His brothers objected so strongly that they took the matter to law. First George won a decision in court, and then a higher court reversed the decision. In the meantime, the George Brokaws deserted the house for an apartment further up the avenue, and displayed a huge "for sale" sign on the family property.

The demolishing of the place has been abandoned, and now George Brokaw is to have the old home completely renovated, the interior taken out and everything remodeled for the occupancy of him and his family. And thus the family feud will pass.

WEDDED

MRS. RAYMOND G. CAREY.

The marriage is announced of Miss Elizabeth Rintelman, daughter of Mrs. Emma Rintelman, to Raymond G. Carey.

NEWS OF THE RELIGIOUS WORLD

The Presbyterian union will hold its second banquet of the season on Tuesday evening in the Hotel La Salle at 6:30 o'clock. The Rev. Henry Howard, D. D., pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church of New York City, will be the speaker. The Garrett Biblical institute choir of thirty voices will render the music and the reception will occur at 5:30 o'clock.

His Eminence Cardinal Mundelein will go to Hot Springs, Ark., where on Tuesday he will dedicate the $1,000,000 St. Joseph's hospital, under the care of the Sisters of Mercy.

Garrett Biblical institute, Evanston, will begin tomorrow a new venture in theological education, when the Garrett radio course for pastors and others interested in modern religious thought will begin. The course will be given over station WCFL, meters 483, and will continue for twelve weeks with a lecture each Monday at 1 o'clock. This hour was chosen because it is supposed to be the one when pastors will more nearly be free to devote their time to the course.

Some of the lecture subjects are: "The Present Day Use of the Bible," "What Happened Between the Old Testament and the New," "The Early Church and the Problem of Christian Unity," "Faith in an Age of Science," "Messiahs New and Old," "Christianity for Export," "Can We Follow Jesus Today?" and "The Spirit and the Sword." The addresses will be given by the following members of the Garrett faculty: President F. C. Eiselen, Profs. Schermerhorn, Fuller, Whitchurch, and Rall, and Dr. Ernest F. Tittle, pastor First Methodist Episcopal church, Evanston. Letters and questions are invited. The addresses will be given from Grace Methodist church, Chicago, of which Dr. C. Copeland Smith is pastor. Tomorrow's subject will be "The Use of the Bible Today," by President Eiselen.

Bishop C. P. Anderson will confirm a class and preach at St. Paul's-by-the-Lake church, Rogers Park, this morning. It will be the second large class confirmed in this parish this year. The Rev. Charles T. Hull is rector.

The Rev. Theodore Branch of Canada has been elected rector of St. Peter's Episcopal church, Sycamore. He will assume his duties immediately.

Bishop Sheldon M. Griswold, suffragan of the Episcopal diocese of Chicago, has been dismissed from the Evanston hospital after an illness of nearly two months. Early in September he was operated upon and for several days his recovery was in doubt. Bishop Griswold will not resume his official duties until after Jan. 1, it is thought.

Kirby Page will speak today at 3:15 at Woods theater under the auspices of the Chicago forum on the subject: "Is the United States Imperialistic?" and at 8:15 p. m. at the Masonic temple, Wilcox street and Crawford avenue, under the auspices of the West Town forum, on the subject, "Is a New Feudalism Emerging?" At the Uptown forum, 941 Lawrence avenue, the People's church, Dr. L. L. Mann will discuss at 8 o'clock: "Is Birth Control a Blessing or a Curse?"

The Episcopal Church of the Atonement, Kenmore and Ardmore avenues, will entertain the Catholic club of the Episcopal Church of the diocese of Chicago on Tuesday. There will be a supper at 6:30 p. m. followed by a service in the church at which the Rev. Father Harrison, O. H. C., will speak on "Some Lessons for Anglicans from the Apostolic Church." The various parishes of the diocese have been entertaining the club in turn.

CHURCH NEWS

Churches Observe Golden Rule Day

(Other news of churches will be found on the opposite page.)

By The Rev. W. B. Norton.

INTERNATIONAL Golden Rule Sunday will be observed today in churches in Chicago, throughout the United States and in other countries in the interest of the 33,415 children under the care of the Near East Relief. C. F. Jackman, 37 South Wabash avenue, the regional director of Chicago, says the special need today is not simply to help the rescued orphans from starvation but to teach them trades, agriculture, housekeeping on the part of the girls and such education as will fit them for self supporting Christian citizenship.

Requests have been made for well to do families to eat today a meal of the same simplicity as is served regularly to the dependent children as an act of sympathy and a reminder of how much better provided for American homes are.

Charles V. Vickery, general secretary and founder of the Near East Relief, will speak this evening in Orchestra hall at the Sunday Evening club. This morning at 11 o'clock at Orchestra hall, Dr. Frederick F. Shannon, pastor of Central church, will preach the Golden Rule Sunday sermon. The Rev. Charles W. Gilkey, Hyde Park Baptist church, the Rev. Fred D. Stone, Irving Park Methodist Episcopal church, and the Rev. L. H. Danforth, Church of the Holy Comforter, Kenilworth, are among the many pastors who have announced they will observe the day.

Former Gov. Frank O. Lowden is chairman of the Near East of Illinois, and George M. Reynolds of Chicago, is treasurer. Golden Rule Sunday is endorsed and recommended by President Coolidge and the governors of 37 states.

Not only is today Golden Rule Sunday but it is universal Bible Sunday. THE TRIBUNE recognizes the Bible by its religious editorial on the editorial page by James O'Donnell Bennett of THE TRIBUNE staff on "The Bible, the World's Best Seller." Mr. Bennett, it will be recalled by many, contributed to THE TRIBUNE a series of articles of high literary value on certain of the great books in the world's literature. The first of these articles was on the Bible. We are reproducing in two editorials, one today and one next Sunday, all we had space for. To have completed the article one editorial more would have been necessary. The articles have been collected and printed under the title, "Much Loved Books" and will be on sale this month.

Pope Pius XI. has set aside one Sunday a year for a day of prayer for missions, and this will be celebrated today in the archdiocese of Chicago. It will be the solemnity of the Feast of St. Francis Xavier, the patron of the propagation of the faith. Services will be held in the Cathedral of the Hody Name, North state and East Superior streets, at 3 p. m. and will consist of devotions and a sermon by the Rev. T. Van Der Schueren, a famous missionary, and benediction. The day will be generally observed by the priests and people of the diocese.

The Methodist Episcopal Preachers' meeting will be held in the Chicago temple, Clark and Washington streets, at 10:45 a. m. tomorrow. The address will be by the Rev. J. H. Odgers on "Poetry."

The seventieth anniversary of the organization of the Harvard (Ill.) Methodist Episcopal church in the winter of 1857-58 will be celebrated today at 10:30 a. m. The anniversary sermon will be preached by the Rev. J. Hastie Odgers, superintendent of the Chicago northern district. At a 5 o'clock vesper service there will be shown an illuminated picture by W. L. Taylor, "I Will Lift Up Mine Eyes Unto the Hills." A special musical program will also be given. On Thursday at 6:30 p. m. will be held a home coming banquet in the community house with an address by Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes of Chicago. The Rev. Benjamin M. Will is pastor of the Harvard church.

The vesper service of the First Presbyterian church, held at five o'clock today in the Emanuel Lutheran church, 64th street and Kenwood avenue, will consist of readings of great religious poems by Prof. Burtrand Nelson, who is the head of the department of public speaking in the University of Chicago. The pastor, Dr. William H. Boddy, will be in his pulpit at the Wadsworth school this morning at 11 o'clock after an absence this week in the south on educational work among the home missions and also at the Older Boys' convention at Waukegan.

The Very Rev. F. Victor Hoag, dean of Christ cathedral, Salina, Kas., and formerly of Chicago, will deliver the fourteenth sermon on the Bishop Hale Foundation at St. Chrysostom's church, 1424 Dearborn parkway, this afternoon at 4:30. His subject will be "The Church's Unique Opportunity in Week Day Religious Education."

The Episcopal Church of the Advent, 2900 Logan boulevard, is having a series of three special Sunday evening preachers, whose sermons will lead up to the Christmas observance. Each member is asked to invite one other person to attend church on these evenings. The Very Rev. Frank Victor Hoag, dean of Christ cathedral, Salina, Kas., will speak this evening at 7:45 o'clock, and the Rev. Frederick C. Grant, S. T. D., dean of the Western Theological seminary, next Sunday. The Rev. Arthur Rogers, D. D., rector of St. Mark's church, Evanston, Ill., will speak Dec. 18.

Announcement is made of the appoint of the Rev. William S. Little as assistant to the Rev. David E. Gibson, pastor of the Cathedral Shelter at Washington and Peoria streets. He succeeds the Rev. F. J. Tromp, who has been appointed by Bishop Anderson pastor of St. Ambrose's church, Chicago Heights. The Cathedral Shelter is one of the largest mission centers in the city, assisting approximately 100,000 men a year.

The bazaar of St. Mary's Home for Children of the Episcopal church will be held on Saturday at the home, 2822 Jackson boulevard, beginning at 10 a. m., at which there will be a sale, an afternoon tea and a turkey dinner.

Dr. C. Wallace Petty, well known Baptist pastor of Pittsburgh, Pa., will tell the Sunday Evening club in Orchestra hall this evening at 8 o'clock what he considers "A One Hundred Per Cent American Citizen." T. E. Donnelley, president of R. R. Donnelley & Sons company, will have a part in the program, and Dr. Charles Vernon Vickery, who has just completed a tour of the world, will be the speaker at the 7 o'clock service on "Golden Rule Among the Nations." Mr. Vickery spent a great deal of time in the Balkans during his European visit, and is well posted on the trying situation in that territory at the present time. The Chicago Association of Commerce will be represented at the club during December by a group of their members who will act as ushers.

Students and alumni of Loyola university will attend a testimonial banquet Tuesday evening at the Palmer house to the new president of the university, the Very Rev. Robert M. Kelley, S. J. An attendance of 1,000 is expected.

The feast day of the Immaculate Conception of the Blessed Virgin Mary will be celebrated Thursday. Pope Pius IX. constituted Mary Immaculate the patroness of the United States and since then her feast day has been generally observed.

SERMONS AND SERVICES in CHICAGO CHURCHES TODAY

THE REV. ROBERT CLEMENTS, D. D.
[Moffett Photo.]

Dr. Clements is pastor of the Austin Presbyterian chiurch, Waller avenue and Fulton street, which is today celebrating the rededication of its building, especially the church house portion. Inspired by the generous gift of $10,000 from one of the members, about $25,000 has been expended in enlarging and modernizing the entire church property so that it now covers almost all the available ground, occupying half a square between Waller and Menard avenues. A new heating system and approved electric wiring and lighting, as well as a materially changed interior with newly furnished parlor and fully equipped new kitchen are features made possible by the new addition. Today will be the general rally day with appropriate exercises.

Dr. Clements is president of the Presbyterian Board of Church Extension, a member of the board of the Presbyterian hospital and a former moderator of the Chicago Presbytery. He is a graduate of Union college, Schenectady, N. Y., and Auburn Theological seminary.

THE MAN BACK OF THE INSTITUTION

NEWCOMERS at the Morrison get a welcome surprise when they hear the rates. The impressive beauty of the main lobby, the appealing color-harmonies and inviting repose of the Lounge, the handsomely appointed guest rooms, are hard to associate with the most economical hotel rates in the city.

$2.50 Up, Single; $4 Up, Double
Why Morrison Rates Are Low

The location, at Chicago's very center, for which travelers would expect to pay extra, is actually the reason for the lower scale. The subleases, which pay all the ground rent, permit charges that are little more than half the figures in effect at other leading hotels for similar rooms. Each of the 1944 rooms is outside, with bath, running ice water, bed-head lamp, and Servidor. Every floor has its housekeeper, and all guests enjoy garage privileges.

The splendor of the entertainments in the celebrated "dine-and-dance" have contributed a large share to the international repute of the famous "Morrison Corner." Noon luncheon, $1, is served from 12 to 2 p. m.; table d'hote dinner, $1.50, from 6 to 8:30 p. m., and after-theatre supper, $1.50, from 11 p. m.

94 interesting winter cruises to select from in this booklet

UNUSUALLY attractive itineraries, interesting shore excursions and comfortable, modern ships have made cruising the most popular form of winter travel.

It no longer requires great wealth to go. In this season's list there are fascinating West Indies cruises as low as $200 for 16 days. Mediterranean cruises are from $549 for 39 days. Other cruises and those to South America, Africa and Around-the-World are longer and cost in proportion.

Ironing out travel problems NOW at the* American Express *will mean much to you when en route

Instead of writing a dozen letters or shopping from place to place, it is much more convenient—yet no more costly—to make your selection at the American Express. No matter which cruise you may select, the courteous and impartial experts of the American Express Travel Department are ready to relieve you of the troublesome details of preparation.

Perhaps you would like to see the deck plans?—go over the itineraries more closely?—arrange your passport and visas?—discuss shore excursions?—talk over steamer and hotel accommodations? All these little points are important in the planning of a happy, care-free trip.

Your trip will be much more enjoyable if it is planned ahead

If you cannot call, send coupon for the "Catalogue of Winter Cruises." Pick out the cruises which interest you and let the American Express Travel Department arrange the details.

THE AMERICAN EXPRESS Chicago Office

is an important link in the great world-wide American Express organization which acts as "right-hand man" to hundreds of thousands of travelers the year around. In this office, our highly-trained travel experts are ready (at no cost to you) to give you the benefit of their long years in planning where to go—how to get there most conveniently and how to get the most out of your trip both for your money and for your time. FOLKS WHO GET INTO THE LIMELIGHT SIDEWISE

A Handful of Obscure Celebrities Who Bask in Reflected Glory

Did You Ever Hear of Father Machree or Mr. Corson?

By Genevieve Forbes Herrick.

NEXT to Father Machree, Lyle Womack is today probably the most widely known obscurity in the world; also the most obscure celebrity.

Fame has given him an oblique glory. Fame has touched him, but from a tangent. The white light of publicity has shone upon him, but only so long as he stands in the glamorous, dazzling shadow of his wife, Ruth Elder.

Nobody knows just what Father Machree did to amuse himself while his good wife, Mother Machree, was being sung to and about by all the ballad singers of these many decades. But everybody knows what Womack has been doing these last few weeks while the world has been placing its crown of laurel on the brow of his good wife, the girl who almost flew the Atlantic. He has been doing exactly nothing.

THE ANSWER IS "NO"

O, there were few little odd jobs. Like sitting behind the palms in the foyers of smart hotels, killing time while his wife occupied the throne chair at the center of the speaker's table in the big ballroom across the hall. Or elbowing policemen so that he might get within whispering distance of Miss Elder. What he wanted to whisper was that she stop flying and come back home. The answer was "No."

But Lyle Womack is not alone in his club. Nor is the more or less imaginary Father Machree its only other member. The world is so full of a number of things, I am sure Mr. Womack will find many other echoes, and shadows, and human tangents to keep him company. Sometimes it is the woman who is the carbon copy; sometimes it is the man. Now and then it's a mother, a father, a brother, or a daughter.

"Who's Who" doesn't give special family rates.

For instance, in the important red book we find, under the initial "C," this entry:

"COGAN, Jackie; actor; b. Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 26, 1914; s. John Henry and Lillian [Dolliver] C."

There is no separate heading for Papa John Henry nor for Mother Lillian Dolliver. Once an actor himself, and the one who carried young Jackie, an infant of 16 months, onto the stage for his debut, Mr. Coogan, père, now goes through life identified as Jackie Coogan's father. Even the presence of a fat wad of bills from the 13-year old star may not be an entirely satisfactory psychological solace. Or it may be.

But there is some one even more akin to Lyle Womack than Mr. and Mrs. Coogan.

Did you ever hear of Clemington Corson? He is the husband of the first mother to swim the English channel. That is his claim to fame.

Beyond that his chances for publicity are slim. Even his picture is catalogued under his wife's name. In the bulky envelope in THE TRIBUNE morgue which houses his wife's clippings and photographs (and, by the way, she is known most frequently as Mlle. Gade, or Mlle. Gade Corson) we at last found a domestic picture. Mrs. Corson was seated, holding her two children, Sonny and Sister. Mr. Corson was standing, in the background. His left hand was extended to keep Sonny from falling. There were such deep wrinkles in his forehead.

Buried deep down in a two column story we at last found the information about Mrs. Corson's husband. Here it is: "Mrs. Corson was Danish born, but is naturalized, and the wife of an American New Yorker."

Sometimes, even in this day of feminism, it is the man who casts the shadow.

For example, you hear a lot of former Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis; but there is hardly a newspaper paragraph about Mrs. Landis.

Queen Victoria of Sweden rarely makes the front page, or the back page. She did break into the news about a year ago, but it was when she was very ill. Her husband, the genial King Gustaf, has his name and fame cabled across the Atlantic frequently. And there are pictures of him, pictures of him riding, of him about to play tennis, of him playing tennis, of him having played tennis.

The most perfect example of self effacement is, well, now, [illegible] in the world would it be but Madame Mussolini? We never hear of her; we never see a picture of her. About the only time she gets a stickful of type is when the stork comes to her house. And then it's a safe bet that the headline will feature Il Duce, and the story will end with a casual mention that the "mother and child are doing well."

RED'S LITTLE BROTHER

Which leads to the speculation as to just what would happen to Il Duce, to his wife, and indeed, to all Italy, if one fine morning Madame Mussolini should decide to swim the English channel, or fly the Atlantic, or go in for interior decorating.

Fame can be fickle.

There was Gertrude Ederle, the first woman to swim the channel. She had a crowded hour of plaudits. Then Father Ederle began to edge into the picture, and to take the curtain calls. Now, so the story goes, he gets as much fun out of it as if he had smeared himself with grease and slipped into the waves for a record swim. His fame is oblique, but he clings to it as if it had come in a straight line.

With the Grange brothers it is different. Grange No. 2 is earning his fame, not resting on that of player No. 77. Nothing, for a long, long time at least, will take away from the glory of Harold ("Red") Grange, the Illini half back of a few years ago. But "Red's" younger brother, Garland, who played at end this year on the Orange and Blue team, is said to be coming right along. He started first in a dark semi-circle lighted only by the limelight that played about his big brother. Gradually he got some of the spot for himself.

COME IN BUNCHES

There is still another group of comrades for Lyle Womack and Father Machree. They come in bunches. Often their names are forgotten; but their classification remains as a tag of identification which lifts them above the heads of their fellow men and women.

In this department we have, for instance, the husbands of Peggy Joyce And the wives of De Wolf Hopper.

Then there are the men who have been reported as engaged to marry Mary Landon Baker.

And those hundreds of girls and women and older women who have never forgotten they once danced with the Prince of Wales.

And then, once in a blue moon, comes along a couple whose fame is so neatly and so nicely balanced that it forms an equation Take the Coolidges.

He is the President of [illegible] United States.

But she has that smile.

THE DUKE GOES TO WORK FOR THE CITY

He Judges His Fellow Man from the Jury Box

By Duke Bakrak.

A CUPPLE of weeks ago Thursday some friend of old man Grabfelder went duck shootin' and brought him a couple of Mallards. He don't like duck but his wife is crazy about it so he gave them to me. The next day tha B. and C. stuffed and roasted them and O! Boy! talk about eats, well I guess I finished pretty near a whole one myself. That hound of ares was hanging around tha legs of a table so long that I got to thinking that maybe he was a bird dog.

Well, I had to open up a cupple buttons when I got through and I was in no mood to do dish washing so I pull tha headache act. Tha Mama says she didn' believe me as no one was ever known to get GOUT in tha head. Ennyway she shampoos and massages tha crockery alone. Me and tha kids went in tha parlor and played orchestra, me at tha drum. This brings a howl from the kitchen to the effect that "Music hath charms to soothe tha savage pest" and she hoped it wood improve my head; also, that there was lots of room for improvement. Ain't it funny how getting out of tha dishes for one night gets their goats for a month?

"I hope you won't mind our wooden upholstery for 2 weeks."

TELL IT TO THE JUDGE

About eight o'clock tha door bell rings and some gent hollers up tha tube that he wood like to see Mr. Bakrak. I didn' reckognize his voice and for a minute or two I tried to think which outfit got a stall this month. Well, it wasn't a collector at all. The guy was from the court and he serves a paper on me which is printed on the top JURY SUMMONS. This is the first time I ever got one and I was feeling pretty damn good about it. To me it meant two weeks' vacation in tha middle of tha winter.

Well, tha next morning I show tha paper to tha chief and he puts a damper on my feelings by telling me not to worry about tha summons as he has plenty of friends who cood get me off. I didn' dare tell him that I didn' want off. He gets busy on tha phone and pretty near every drag he uses tells him that there's a helova howl going tha rounds and that it ain't so damn easy at tha present time.

About noon he informs me that it looks pretty black. To me it looked rosy. The next suggestion he shoots sounds pretty good to me 'cause there seemed to be room for a little double crossing. His dope was for me to appear at tha court and tell tha judge that I was either hard of hearing or that I didn' believe in capitol punishment, or perhaps try and get by with an excuse that it was our busy season. I told Grabfelder I'd do my darndest and that if none of tha excuses worked I might tell his honor I had a slight touch of leprosy.

"Well, young man, your to be congratulated."

"Th-tha-thank y-yo-you."

"Baby? Well, that's fine!"

"Ye-yes s-sir."

"It's wonderful to have a new son."

"I'll sa-say so."

"Boy, isn't it?"

"Ye yes sir."

"Your a fast worker, five minutes ago you was expecting a baby and now you got a boy."

"W-we-well it's——"

"Take a seat in tha jury box."

TRAGICOMEDY

The next bloke gets asked real quick, "Are you married?" the guy says, "No," and the judge says, "Well, if your expecting an addition tha kid will be 10 years old when you get out." This bird's excuse is that his mother-in-law ain't expected to live and his honor says "Some men get all the breaks, take seat number two."

A foreign-lookin' egg is next and when he's asked his name he makes off he don't understand English. Just then the judge looks towards tha rear of tha courtroom an' says, "Young lady, you can't sit here with skirts above your knees." When tha Scandanavian turned around to get a look tha judge says, "Seat No. 3."

You could of died laughin' at the next egg. Before tha judge ever got a chance to question him, he says, very lady-like, "Your Honor, I don't believe in capitol punishment." The judge says "That's capitol, take No. 4."

There was one more bloke before I was called and he pulls tha "hard of hearing racket." When his honor asks him his name he cups his ears with his hands and says, "What?" The judge then says in a tone so low you coodn' of heard it a foot away, "Your excused, we can't use deaf jurors." Just before tha gink got to the door he was called back and told to keep chair No. 5 warm for a cupple of weeks.

Me, being a wise cracker, always wantin' to give tha folks a sample of real wit an' humor so as they cood split their sides laughin, I says, "Your honor, I was gonna tell you that I was deaf and dumb but I've changed my mind and I ain't gonna use any excuse." He says, "You might of fooled me on tha deaf part but I'd a believed you were dumb." Then he wise cracks me by saying, "I hope you won't mind our wooden upholstery for 2 weeks."

BLIND JUSTICE

By noon twelve of us were working for tha city and tha court adjourned until two o'clock. This gave me a chance to beat it over to tha office and tell the ole man how I pleaded and begged to get let off but that they woodn' listen. "Grabby" was sore as hell even after I told him that when the judge asked me where I worked, his reply was, "A truly great corporation." Sometimes a line of bull braces up the old man but this time he just says, "When you see him again tell him for me to fly-ta-hell."

Two o'clock we're all back in are seats and there gonna start a case. I had an idea we wood be trying some big murder case and whadda ya think they dish? A poor soak gets himself full of Moon, slips his squaw a cupple of shiners and on tha way out to get another pint he stops in at tha floor below. Seems tha door was open but tha neighbor wasn't home so he accidentally borrows 21 bucks from under their mattress.

This here system what are city has got is way beyond me. In tha first place, [illegible] twelve guys drawing down 5 bucks a day apiece wich is 60 dollars. Whatever the judge and tha State's Attorney draw must be aplenty. Then their's electric light and heat. As far as I can figure out if a guy cops 21 simoleans somebody is gonna be out a cupple hundred. Maybe that's why my taxes are so high (provided I owned a building).

Before tha case got well under way I was in favor of lettin tha bird off 'cause annybody that drinks Moon has been punished enough and as far as his messin up his squaw is concerned there seems to be a law that you kin do what you want with yer own property.

EXPERT TESTIMONY

For tha best part of three hours tha State's Attorney is pulling high brow language on us birds like "Preponderance of evidence," "Malice aforethought," "Habus Corpus," in fact everything except "Tempis Fugit." This one he coodn' of fooled me on 'cause I happen to know it means something about a clock that runs fast.

At five o'clock we were excused for tha day and told to report again at nine in tha morning. All Tuesday was taken up by tha witnesses. Every guy what got on the stand had a different story to tell. One guy who tha State's Attorney was trying to get bawled up gives us a good laugh with tha following:

Atty.—"Mr. Gutchkufsky, you said you boarded with tha Zinkovitches."

Gutch.—"Yez but da beds iz rottun."

Atty.—"Never mind about the beds."

Gutch.—"Sure, you dun't hafta zleep in 'em."

Atty.—"Have you ever seen Zinkovitch take a drink?"

Gutch.—"He neffer takes less as six."

Atty.—"Are you naturalized?"

Gutch.—"No, I'm Polish."

Atty.—"If Zinkovitch took six drinks would he be inebriated?"

Gutch.—"No, soused."

Atty.—"How much board do you pay?"

Gutch.—"Too much."

Other Lawyer—"Object."

Judge—"Jeckshun stained."

A STORY TELLER'S TALE

Well, this goes on for a helova long while and I got to thinking that every witness was gonna take so long we woodn' get out of tha court till Xmas. The following day they put tha defendant, Zinkovitch, on the stand and he fixes up a story with tha object of not only gettin' aquitted but that wood entitle him to a Get[illegible] cross and a paid up membership in tha "Liars Club."

His dope was that he came home with a terrible stomach ache and thought a little brandy wood do him good. The wife got peeved cause he woodn' eat any of tha ox [illegible] set in front of him and in pushing the plate to one side tha whole meal fell on tha floor. As she was going after tha mop to clean things up she slipped on tha gravvy and struck her eye on tha leg of tha kitchin stove. He got scared and decided to gô over to the drug store and get some vaseline and as he was going down the steps his neighbor came out and he told him about what happened to tha wife. The neighbor asked him if he had enough money to pay for tha vaseline and he said he wasn't sure so tha neighbor says here's twenty-one dollars.

THE INJUSTICE OF IT

Wednesday morning tha case was decided in Zinkovitch's favor and I only got 2 years instead of 20. After finishing two weeks of chair-warming by listening to about six more cases we got discharged with a vote of thanks by his Honor for being citizens who were willing to do what he termed a civic duty.

We all got about seventy bucks a piece and Saturday afternoon I got mixed up in a domino rolling game and get took for 35 beans. When I got home I had to tell tha B. and C. that 35 was all they pay so she said we split it and I cood take her out one night and blow her to a show. She sticks her seventeen and a half in the bank and Monday morning when I get to tha office my check is waiting for me with 70 berries deducted. I see that ain't a cheap trick I'm a Spaniard.

If I'd a known that things were going to turn out this way old Zinkovitch would be dead one year next November.

P. S.—And the tombstone would say "He Died From a Pain in The Jury."

SNOWSHOE'S HOT NEWS FROM ARCTIC

Noted Correspondent Gives Choice Excerpts from Hell Hole Howl.

By Snowshoe Al.

The following are excerpts clipped from the latest issue of the Hell Hole Howl, an evening paper published at Hell Hole, Alaska. This little mining town is situated 300 miles north of Fairbanks, but you won't find it on the map. The paper is printed regularly every night, but don't forget that a night lasts six months.

ROUGH-HOUSE ROSIE, the hash slinger in the Cockroach Café, wishes to announce her engagement to Fish-face McGuire. Fish-face ain't heard about it yet, but will be handed the sad news as soon as he sobers up, which usually takes place each June. The Last Chance Gambling House is offering odds of 8 to 3 that Mr. McGuire will leave for Seattle about six minutes after the glad tidings sink through his scalp. Rosie, as you probably know, is the winner of the Hell Hole Beauty Contest, having received twelve more votes than Arctic Annie, the only other white gal in town.

AN ALASKAN ADONIS

Speaking of our recent Beauty Contest, this paper deplores the fact that at least 50 of our 72 citizens were so ungentlemanly as to look at the two contestants and then cast their votes for Lon Chaney, whoever he is. Arctic Annie says she don't give a damn, but Rosie claims to have saw Mr. Chaney in a moving picture when she was visiting in Nome two years ago and she is certainly on the warpath, fellows.

Friends of Mr. & Mrs. White Eagle will regret to learn that their infant daughter, age two weeks, recently almost choked to death while eating a large piece of stewed dog meat. The parents feel pretty rotten about it and have decided not to wean any of their future children so speedily.

John Soc-wena and Chief Yamikan, a couple of local Cigar Signs, have opened a drug store, and they is having swinging doors put on the front of their establishment. Their entire stock, which consist of 4 barrels of hair tonic, arrived yesterday morning. The Yukon Kid brought it in from Canada by dog sled.

George Laughing Crow, who was recently separated from his wife, wishes us to announce that he will not be responsible for the purchase price of any fish, tallow candles, or gumdrops eaten by Lizzie Laughing Crow from now on. We get a wow of a kick out of this because, to the best of our knowledge, George ain't yet paid for a damn thing that either of them has ever ate in the past.

A WHALE OF AN IDEA

Notice: I will disclose the whereabouts of a large dead whale to anybody that will give me a good pair of pants in exchange for the information. The whale is in fairly good condition. Lots of meat. THE YUKON KID.

After paying us to print the above advertisement, the Yukon Kid got very intoxicated and started telling all his friends where the whale is anyhow; so hell, we might just as well tell the rest of youse. The whale is laying on the rocks at Anxiety Point in the Arctic Ocean, about fifty miles northwest of here. It's been resting there peacefully for the last five months, so if you ever get within two miles of it you won't have no trouble locating same. You're welcome.

The little son of Mr. and Mrs. Chief Yamikan will be seven years old next Wednesday or Thursday or Friday (the parents ain't sure which day) and he will be given his first bath in honor of the event. The chief is very proud of the fact that his son is now old enough to go to work.

This paper wishes to announce another "scoop." The Hell Hole Howl frequently prints important news items several months before they appear in any other paper within a 500 mile radius of here. We therefore take pride in informing our readers of the unfortunate death of Nicholas II., czar of Russia. We have always looked upon Nick as a sort of "near neighbor" because Siberia lies less than sixty miles west of Cape Prince of Wales. The czar died a few years ago, and further details will be given in our next issue if possible.

We learn that Snowshoe Al, who used to hang around Dawson City and Fairbanks with old Buzzard Bill, is now bumming around in a town called Chicago, which we understand is way down southeast of here. We hear that he is now married, and we sure feel sorry for Mrs. Snowshoe Al unless her husband is working a helluva lot steadier than he did around these parts. He sure was a lazy hound, damn if he wasn't! We have also been informed that he recently spoke before an Intercollegiate Convention held in a place called Detroit. That's hot news! When he left here he hadn't even finished his sophomore year in the college of hard knocks.

Eskimo Ike was shot and killed a few days ago. Nobody knows who did it, and furthermore nobody cares. Nobody went to his funeral. That's one nice thing about our town—a guy can be anything he wants; he can be a Prohibitionist or he can be popular.

O, DEER!

John Fishtale, the well known Eskimo architect who recently built a flock of igloos on an ice floe in Harrison Bay and called his property the Floating Subdivision, has just bumped into a hunk of hard luck. Somebody tossed a keg of blasting powder among his Zero Bungalows and blew the entire property all to hellengone. John attributes the incident to labor trouble, as he has been using non-union reindeers to haul the blocks of snow and ice which the houses are made of.

Our town should be very proud of the fact that it is soon going to have a moving pitcher show. Half-breed Hogan, who will run it, announces that he has contracted for some lively flips including a serial entitled "The Perils of Pauline," starring Pearl White; also some Western pictures featuring Broncho Billy Anderson; also some comedies which feature John Bunny and Flora Finch. This town is sure getting ahead!

Warning! The party what stole seven wolf skins from my shanty is known, and unless he returns same immediately, his future address will be Hell. His present address is two doors west of the drug store.

[Signed] BILL LARSEN.

"Goofy" Smith, who spends most of his time trying to figure out things what don't make much difference, has just made the world's most unnecessary discovery. After experimenting for two months he has discovered that genuine whiskey, if used in liberal quantities, will remove grease spots from clothing. We wouldn't have bothered to print the above, only we figured that maybe somebody might like to shoot him. You understand, however, that this is not a suggestion.

JOIN A SLOW CLUB

The town of Circle recently resorted to an attack on this city through the medium of the press. They claim that our flourishing village is behind the times. We can't think of anything funnier than the town of Circle accusing anything on earth of being slow. It reminds us of the polecat what accused the onion of having a bum odor. That outfit is so damn slow that the Mah Jong craze has just landed there. Why hell, up here we've already heard about cross word puzzles.

The boys hereabouts have discovered that Polar Bear Pete has just finished a grammar school education by correspondence, and they sure are regarding the guy with lots of awe. It came as quite a surprise, because to look at Pete you wouldn't think he had any sense whatever. However, he's a nice cuss and the chances are that he won't try to high hat anybody or make them feel inferior, which a lot of fellows would do if they was in his shoes. His diploma has just arrived and will be put on exhibition in the drug store window. Pete asks us to assure his friends that he will continue to be his own modest self, so evidently you can expect to see him loafing around town looking as ignorant as ever.

French Teachers Stick to Their Jobs

PARIS.—(AP)—The schoolma'am of France isn't being tempted out of her career by the glory her sisters are winning in art, industry, and the professions. In fact, the schoolma'am is threatening to dominate the business of teaching.

Nearly every normal school in France is obliged to reject women applicants who want to teach school. In a few departments like the Aisne there is a shortage. City girls, therefore, are being encouraged to go to provincial normal schools and to teach in the smaller towns, where their progress is more certain and rapid than around Paris.

Gradually, also, women are being taken into the faculties of the higher institutions, but there, where the pay is best, the men are fighting hard for their jobs.

Prussic Acid Ends Career of Brass Bugs

BERLIN.—(AP)—Prussic acid has proved an effective exterminator of the brass bug, an exceptionally destructive beetle which is able to bore through metal. The appearance of the insect in Heidelberg caused alarm, as previous attempts to extirpate it had failed. The houses invaded by the pest were gassed for two weeks, and at the end of that time thousands of the beetles were found dead.

Loses Beer, Bet, and Shoes in Hike with Barrel

BERLIN.—(AP)—Peeved because beer draymen's strike prevented him from replenishing his cellar, a Halenese saloonkeeper named Luetteke declared he would fetch the beer from the Friedrichshagen brewery and trundle the barrel there on his back himself, a distance of 10 miles right through the center of Berlin. He started at 4 p. m., and midnight still found him two miles from home. Then the barrel burst, likewise his shoes, and Herr Luetteke knew he had lost a bet of 500 marks as well.

AUTO-INTOXICATION

Dr. Jordan says he had a absent-minded motorist in his chair the other day. "Will you take gas?" he asked. "Yeah," replied the absent patient, "and you'd better look at the oil too."—Punta Gorda [Fla.] Herald.

"CELLULIZED"
Means Better Than New!

Hotels, Clubs, Apartments, Homes: let us refinish your furniture this new, inexpensive way!

CELLULIZATION is a wonderful new method of refinishing that gives old, marred furniture a satiny, translucent, new-like finish that is actually better than new! Because it's deeper, harder, more permanent. Even alcoholic drinks, heat, and general hard usage cannot affect it. The finish is applied by Pneu-Gun atomization. Costs far less, too, because we can do better work in one-eighth the time!

A JUNIOR LEAGUER'S LIFE IS NO BED OF ROSES

Society Buds Labor Hard and Long in the Name of Sweet, Sweet Charity

Weighing Babies and Selling Tickets Keep Them Busy

By Mildred Jaklon.

DON'T ever intimate to a Chicago Junior leaguer that you think the life of a society girl is one of carefree bliss, devoid of toil, and replete with such luxuries as sleeping late of mornings and attending luncheons, teas, and dances, or you'll have a small tempest descend around your ears! Wait until the aforesaid J. L. is well out of hearing before you breathe "social butterfly" or "idle rich," if you have consideration for your auditory organs!

Any one of the 303 active members of the organization and every one of the 61 provisional members—yea, verily, the provisional members—will tell you emphatically and volubly, that there is no life of ease, but one of knitting energy and labor, all in the name of sweet, sweet charity. That's their tale of woe and they'll stick to it. And what's more, there seems to be a great deal in what they say.

Weighing babies is only a part of the Junior Leaguers' work.

MISS DOROTHY SCHMIDT,
Junior league general manager of the plays for children.

MRS. JOHN LEWIS COCHRAN,
president of Junior league (above).

MRS. PHILIP B. MAHER,
designer of stage settings for Junior League Children's theater (below).

ISN'T HALF OF IT

Take these provisional members. In order to pay the annual active membership dues and acquire the other full privileges of real, honest-to-goodness Junior Leaguehood, they must attend at least six prescribed lectures, must do eighty hours of charitable work, and pass an examination on their training course. And take it from any bubbling debutante who has countless preoccupations during her first season out, those stipulations necessitate no inconsequential amount of time and energy to devote to life being real and life being earnest.

And the active members. They'll tell you that really the required eighty hours that active membership entails for the first five years isn't the half of it, dearie. And even the young women who gain associate membership and freedom from "doing their hours" after their half decade of gruelling application, can tell you that the claims of the League continue to be many and arduous.

CHARITABLE ENDEAVOR

And we must admit that enlightenment on the subject does reveal that this contingent of ladies is grievously misunderstood and their status grossly underrated. Very few groups of citizens can boast such a record as they have to present—303 times 80 hours of charitable endeavor, in the past year and a net income of over $16,000 through their energies.

That charitable endeavor means weighing and measuring infants at one of the charity hospitals, doing social settlement work, acting as clerks and saleswomen at the White Elephant Rummage shop or the Eli Bates shop, serving in a variety of capacities ranging from models to demonstrators for beauty products, waiting on table at the League tea room, "The Cake-box" in Lake Forest, and performing any of the hundreds of jobs connected with the Junior League's children's theater.

And glance over the imposing list of charities that the Junior Leaguers serve—Arden Shore camp, Christ Child society, Chicago Nursery and Half Orphan asylum, Eli Bates settlement, Emerson house, Erie chapel, Grant hospital, Girl Scouts, Hull house, Immigrants' Protective league, Legal Aid, Lighthouse, Lower North Community Council, Lake Forest Y. W. C. A., Margaret Ettie crèche, North Avenue Day nursery, Presbyterian hospital, Ridge Farm preventorium, Service Council for Girls, St. Luke's hospital, United Charities, Visiting Nurse association, and the Vocational Society for Shutins. And besides, the organization opened its own Infant Welfare station during the last year.

HOW TO GET IN

In view of these revelations, a little information about the mechanics of the society may be of interest. To become a member, a girl must be proposed by one member and seconded by two, her proposal sent to the committee on elections, approved by that body, which may require three letters of the proposed candidate is unknown to two of its members, and then submitted for final election to the board of directors.

Lectures, eight of them, are given for the benefit of the provisional members. This year's talks, which began on Oct. 15 and were given every Tuesday and Friday until Nov. 18, included dissertations by Miss Jane Addams at the Tudor room of the Palace theater, Judge Mary Bartelme of the juvenile court at the Romany club, Miss Mary Cudahy on the work of the Visiting Nurse association at the Visiting Nurse association, Mrs. W. Scott Lee on the aims and workings of the Lake Shore League of Women Voters, and Mrs. Benjamin F. Langworthy of the Women's City club at the Tudor room of the Palace, Mrs. John L. Cochran, the president of the league on the constitution of the league, Miss Dorothy Schmidt on the Children's theater, and Mrs. Theodore Tieken on Art and Schools, an exposition of the work of Eli Bates settlement by Miss Little of that organization, and the final one by Mrs. Stewart of the Children's Memorial hospital.

These lectures were for the purpose of acquainting young women with the field of activities in which as representative persons they must operate to carry on the civic and welfare projects of their predecessors.

CHECK OF HOURS

Since it is in her debutante year that a young woman first becomes liable to her obligations and entitled to her recognition as a social somebody, it is perfectly fitting that she should also take her part in the more serious aspects of a public spirited life.

A new member of the league receives information of the various duties she may find to complete her "hours," which she must accomplish before the ensuing May of the opening of the season in which she is nominated.

Although it is presumed that there is honor among leaguers, a record of the time she has put in at each and every charity is kept and turned over to the secretary. She may also be called on to sell advertising for the children's theater program, put up posters announcing the theater's productions, or be in any way useful and agreeable to tasks prescribed by the active sisters.

So much for the individual proselyte. When she has successfully passed her tests, she assumes the responsibilities of greater initiative. It is her place to suggest ideas for money making if she has them, and she may know that if she has a suggestion it will be pounced upon and she will be delegated to put it into action. Her dues are $10 a year, and should she be absent from one of the semi-annual meetings she is fined $1.

KINDS OF MEMBERS

There are five classes of membership, provisional, and active, already explained, associate members who have no voting privileges and are not required to attend meetings or do Junior league work, sustaining members who have reached the age limit of 40, having no voting privileges, need not attend meetings and are not required to work, and professional members who are engaged in paid work and cannot attend meetings. Provisional members pay no dues, associate members pay $15 annual dues, and professional members, $5. Dues are payable on and before Nov. 1. By Dec. 1 members who are delinquent are considered resigned, but may be reinstated on payment.

The league supports an executive secretary and an office for necessary business.

CHILDREN'S THEATER

The Chicago league, which is one of ninety-five similar and associated leagues throughout the country, is justly proud of its children's theater. Of the ninety-five leagues, twenty-five have organized such theaters, but the Chicago league is the only one which has made its project financially successful. Telegrams and letters from the other leagues beg advice on the subject, and at the annual conference the Chicago members are looked at with awe because of their distinction and regarded as a composite oracle on the subject. Miss Dorothy Schmidt runs the theater.

Not only has the theater come to rank among the best children's theaters in the country, but it has made strides forward in an artistic direction. Modernistic lines are being carried out in the stage designs conceived and executed by Mrs. Walter Paepcke, and Mrs. Philip B. Maher, the costume designs by Mrs. Shreve Badger, the properties superintended by Miss Helen Bournique, Miss Portia Bartlett, Mrs. Richard Fleming, and Mrs. J. Bernard Mullen, and the music arrangements made by Mrs. George Haskell.

Plans for the new year include the transferring of the plays from the Playhouse to the Harris theater, which is 50 per cent larger in capacity, and a tour of the east with one of the new plays. The opening performance of the season, "The Rose and the Ring," was held Nov. 19.

The theater is acquiring funds also by renting its costumes and settings to other Junior leagues. Last year's successful Aladdin properties have just been shipped to Kansas City.

SERVE AS MODELS

All of the production work and most of the construction of settings and the making of costumes is done by the workers. Mrs. John R. Winterbotham Jr. and Miss Emily Hamill are credited by their co-workers for helping in making last year's ticket sale profitable, as also is Miss Louise Tyler, who handled the ticket sale.

The Chicago league is also proud of its accomplishment in corralling and entertaining the first children's theater conference last December. Seven leagues from other cities were represented, those of Detroit, Cincinnati, Buffalo, Brooklyn, Columbus, St. Louis and Kansas City. Miss Alice Gerstenberg, who has been one of the most active leaguers in the children's theater work; Mrs. Russell Barnitz, and Miss Harriet McLaughlin spoke before the conference about establishing a national headquarters for children's plays, the possibility of interchanging scenery and costumes, and the children's theater problems common to all such organizations. The establishment of a bureau of information in Chicago was the most important outgrowth of the conference.

The league feels that it has gone a long way since the time when it annually gave a Junior League Follies, which was disrespectfully termed by some of the town wags "The Junior Leg show."

Other activities for last year included the benefit opening night of the professional ice hockey series at the Coliseum, at which $8,470.24 was cleared. A group of Junior league girls served as models at one of the loop department stores, for which they received $500, and another group received a like amount for serving as beauty specialists at the opening of the Elizabeth Arden beauty salon.

Nicotine Given Alibi; Methyl Alcohol Blamed

BERLIN.—(AP)—It's not nicotine, but methyl alcohol, that causes all the trouble in smoking, according to the researches of Professor Neuberg here.

Experiment revealed that the nicotine content of tobacco varied without relation to the strength of the cigar as sensed by the smoker, and that smoking continued to be harmful in spite of denicotinizing tobacco. Prof. Neuberg discovered that the veins of the tobacco leaf contain methyl alcohol which fermentation weakens but does not altogether remove. The decrease is greater in cigars than in cigarets.

Burning does not destroy the methyl alcohol. Freed from the lighted cigaret, it unites with the smoke and, inhaled, mixes with the saliva instead of being again exhaled with the smoke. Whether it is possible to remove the methyl alcohol from tobacco entirely is as yet undetermined.

German Telegraphers Carry Off Prizes

BERLIN.—(AP)—German telegraphers carried off the two first prizes in the international competition held in Como recently. A Breslau girl, Fraulein Claere Sonnabend, won the first prize of $500, and Herr Suhre of Emden, came second.

In this year's contest there were 230 entries from fourteen countries. Germany was represented with thirty-two.

The contestants received fifty sheets with fifty code words on each sheet, and one hour to transmit the messages. When the current was turned off at the end of that time, Fraulein Sonnabend had transferred 2,221 words out of a possible 2,500, having scored 22,243 ticks in 3,600 seconds.

Did Not Choose to Run.

Our alumnae were having a luncheon. The luncheon was to be followed by an election of officers. One of the girls left immediately after the meal was served. She said she did not wish to remain for the election, because she knew she would be selected for some office. Because this girl was decidedly unpopular, we nicknamed her "Egoitis." C. C.

Vox Feminae.

Asked if she would sing, Claire willingly consented.

"However, I must ask you folks not to coax me to sing more than twice," she said. "Usually people insist that I sing too much and my throat becomes irritated, and that is a detriment to my voice. I would not for worlds have anything happen to my voice, as it gives the public so much pleasure." The sad part of the story is that Claire could not sing. W. G.

What Fur?

A friend of mine purchased a fur coat at a sale in a downtown department store. I was with her when she made the purchase, and knew the price. I had to gasp when I heard her telling a neighbor that she had paid a large price for the finery and had bought it at one of the most exclusive shops in town. When I questioned her about this, she laughingly said: "That woman will tell the other neighbors about my coat, and naturally they will be green with envy." R. H. Y.

A SLEUTH AND A MYSTERY COFFIN

Another True Story of the Master Detectives of Scotland Yard

A "Dead Man's" Joke Is Turned Upon Himself

By George Dilnot.

He undertook to see the body in the coffin and to screw down the long box.

SO FAR every step that had been taken to solve the affair only added to its complexity. A crime of some sort—it might be a mere insurance fraud, it might be something much worse—had been committed, but it was not easy to visualize a solution that would fit all the circumstances. There were gaps which it was difficult to fill in.

For instance, between the time that "Roberti" had arrived in England, and the time that "Bernardi" had shown up at Plaistow there was a hiatus. If the detective could find out where Douat—if it was Douat—had spent that time, he might find a key.

Druscovich spent days in exploring hotels and lodging houses where a newly arrived provincial Frenchman, anxious not to be too conspicuous, might have put up in London. At last he stumbled on a little hotel, handy to the Strand, where the staff remembered a jolly, fat Frenchman who had registered himself as Roberti. A comparison of dates was convincing evidence, if any more was needed, that here was the place which Douat had made his first retreat.

THE VERBOSE WAITER

There was one French waiter in the establishment and Druscovich calculated this was the man most likely to know any details concerning the stranger. He ordered a bottle of wine and engaged the waiter in amicable conversation. Among his other accomplishments Druscovich spoke French like a native. The waiter, stimulated by a glass of Burgundy, was easily led to discuss Bernardi.

"A complaisant gentleman," was his verdict. "He made me little trouble and he frequently did me the honor, like m'sieu, of inviting me to share a glass of wine. We talked much together—for he rarely left the hotel—and as we were compatriots it was but natural."

Druscovich looked over the edge of his glass. "Do you happen to know what he came to London for?"

"But surely. He was a traveler in wines. He had business here."

"Ah, of course. I suppose he would write a great deal to his clients. Did he speak English well?"

A HUMOROUS MAN

The waiter made a gesture of dissent. "Indeed but he knew little about the language. He wrote, it is true, to France. Why, there was a little joke he got me to help him in—he was a humorous man, M. Roberti—a joke to play on a friend of his. He got me to write something but in English for him."

The detective filled the waiter's empty glass. "Really."

"Yes, monsieur. He had a friend, a M. Vital Douat, who, he said, would never answer his letters. So he got me to write a mock death certificate of M. Douat, which he was to send on to him with a letter saying that he now understood his silence, since he was dead."

"That was a great joke," laughed the detective. "I suppose you have not heard from him since he left?"

IN MOURNING

The other had not. And since Druscovich had gained a solution of the only point in the case on which the waiter could throw any light he abruptly concluded the interview.

There remained the cemetery. The authorities remembered the burial of a man called Vital Douat. The arrangements had been made by a friend of the dead man, a Sig. Rubini—Douat seems to have had a partiality for the Italian suffix.

Rubini had presented a certificate from the registrar of deaths, paid the fees, and arranged for the ceremony to take place on the following Sunday. The funeral service had been conducted according to the rites of the Roman Catholic church by the Rev. Father M'Quoid, and Rubini had been the chief—in fact, the only—mourner. Druscovich's informant gave the name of the undertaker.

This individual also remembered M. Rubini. That gentleman had ordered a full-sized, ready made coffin with a lead lining of abnormal thickness. He had insisted that the handles be altered from the sides to the ends of the coffin, as is the custom in France.

"And what kind of a person was put into this coffin?" asked the detective.

The undertaker hesitated: "To tell you the truth, I don't know," he said. "We delivered it by instruction at Ann street. Rubini said it was unnecessary for us to do anything more. He undertook to see the body in the coffin and to screw down the long box. He had a hearse and a mourning carriage to go to St. Patrick's cemetery on the Sunday."

SECRETS OF THE GRAVE

Whatever views Druscovich may have had on the innocence or ignorance of the undertaker, he said nothing then. The man was legally right in accepting the certificate of the registrar. There was no obligation on him to put the body in the coffin. As for the registrar, he had made out the formal certificate on the presentation of the forged medical notice of death. No provision of the law had been neglected.

But Druscovich had enough information now to warrant an application that the grave should be made to yield up its secret. He applied to the proper authorities and an order for exhumation was granted.

All this was done quietly. The detective had no intention of allowing any hint of his activities tc reach Douat if it could be avoided. There was, he hoped, something more than a chance of catching that gentleman off his guard. At his request a couple of men who knew Douat well were induced to take a trip from France and were sworn to secrecy.

THE COFFIN'S CONTENTS

In the cold light of a raw winter morning a temporary screen was erected around the grave to hide it from accidental outside observation. Within this inclosure Druscovich, a doctor, officials, and the two witnesses stood in a little group while men with picks and shovels attacked the frozen earth. The coffin was drawn to the surface and there was a little stir among the onlookers as the officials knelt to unscrew the lid. What they expected to see they scarcely knew. The detective alone had by this time arrived at a conclusion, but, like a wise man, he kept it strictly to himself.

The lid was thrown back. They looked into a coffin which contained nothing but a few odd scraps of metal placed there to make up the weight of the supposed body. The whole elaborate burial was now demonstrated as an obvious sham.

"I don't seem to be wanted," remarked the doctor.

"I scarcely expected that you would be," said Druscovich with a half smile.

LADY IN WAITING

As the waiter had said, M. Douat was a humorous man. Druscovich saw the joke, and it was appreciated the more by the insurance company officials, as their caution had prevented their concern being several thousands of dollars out of pocket.

To complete the amusement of the various parties it was only necessary to lay hands on Douat. To this task Druscovich addressed himself with energy, and he asked the Surete in the meantime to look after Mme. Douat.

The lady, however, was not to be found. Something had frightened her—no doubt the stiff attitude of the insurance company—and she had disappeared.

Druscovich, armed with a warrant for the arrest of Douat on charges of fraud and attempted fraud in France, followed the trail of his man to Liverpool. There he was conclusively satisfied that immediately after the bogus burial the other had set out for America under still another assumed name. Probably Douat had felt that, having done his share, he could safely leave the collection of the spoils to his efficient [illegible].

The Scotland Yard men could do no more. It was doubtful if Douat's actions in England constituted a legal offense. Druscovich had done all and more than could have been expected from him. The running down of the fugitive now became a matter for the French police. He handed over a report to them and officially dropped the case.

DEAD MEN MUST LIVE

For some reason or other the French people did not go to the trouble of searching for and extraditing Douat from the United States. That subtle individual, finding that the hue and cry was suspended, came to the hasty conclusion that he was forgotten. His enterprise did not find a full scope in America—and a man must live.

So he came back to Europe and took up his abode in Antwerp, where he took another name and called himself an export merchant. The sense of the theater that he had evinced at Bordeaux and in London served him adequately for a time among the Dutchmen, and he succeeded in inducing insurance companies to issue policies on a shipment of laces, clocks, and other goods to certain foreign ports by the ship Duc de Brabant.

An unfortunate incident at the quayside before these goods were loaded onto the boat resulted in their total destruction by fire. M. Douat put in a claim for $25,000, and produced invoices to show that the goods were worth at least twice as much.

THE FADEOUT

He might have got away with this but for an unfortunate oversight in the matter of detail. An insurance official nosing among the ruins found two barrels of tar, and the debris of cases which close examination showed had contained resin, chips, [illegible] powder, and charcoal.

Despite his protests the "[illegible] merchant" was arrested and [illegible] his trial he was identified as [illegible] Douat of Bordeaux, much wanted [illegible] France.

After a lengthy trial he was [illegible] guilty, but the French government asserted it held a prior right to [illegible] with him. The common sense [illegible] men, who probably felt they might [illegible] well be spared the expense of maintaining him in one of their own [illegible] ons, conceded the point and [illegible] was sent on to Paris.

There Druscovich, sent over to [illegible] evidence, saw for the first time [illegible] man against whose vivid ingenuity [illegible] had matched himself. The tale of [illegible] empty coffin was unfolded, and [illegible] legal advisers of the prisoner saw [illegible] the well dressed young dandy of [illegible] tective had left no loophole by which [illegible] their client could escape.

Douat was tried only for the [illegible] on the insurance company and [illegible] condemned to a long period of [illegible] servitude. The elusive Mme. [illegible] kept well out of the way, and [illegible] more was heard of her.

Actress Sends News of Nightly Triumph to Mussolini

BERLIN. — (AP) — Emma Grammatica, successor to the immortal Duse, telegraphed the news of her nightly triumphs to Mussolini during her recent performances here.

"We have no nationally subsidized theater in Italy," the actress explained, "but Sig. Mussolini is intensely interested in our theater. In my case, it has become the rule to wire him of the reception I receive on all my foreign tours.

"I was a bit nervous awaiting my first Berlin appearance, for the German capital, I was told, is a harsh critic."

The local critics were unanimous in proclaiming the talents of Emma Grammatica. They found her especially convincing in Barrie's "The Old Lady Shows Her Medals."

"The Italian theater has remained uninfluenced, in the main, by German expressionism," Mme. Grammatica remarked. "We have stuck to naturalism on the stage, and I have achieved my greatest success as a naturalistic actress in the plays of Ibsen, Hauptmann, Sudermann, and Shaw."

A CONSPIRACY OF SILENCE.

Oscar Wilde was not a person renowned for sharpness of tongue, but there is one remark tradition ascribes to him that Whistler himself could hardly have made more cutting.

A certain rather dull poet once complained bitterly to Wilde of the lack of critical attention that his poems received. "There seems to be a conspiracy of silence against me," he declared. "What would you advise me to do?"

"Join it," came the unconsoling reply.—Youth's Companion.

Try These POETIC POSERS

By Norman Lustig and William J. Fadiman.

Could you still pass a poetry test if some one gave it to you, or has your memory for once well known poems gone back on you? Try it and see.

This may help to unravel some of the hidden mystery. The author of the first was known as the "Quaker Poet"; and the fourth excerpt was written by the same man who wrote "The Last Rose of Summer." The fifth quotation is from a comedy by England's greatest dramatist. The last name of the sixth author is the same as that of a celebrated New York lawyer. The tenth author wrote "Paul Revere's Ride." The poem, "Idylls of the King," is another work by the author of the second. No. 8 was written by the "Hoosier Poet;" the author of the seventh also wrote "The Song of the Sword." No. 9 is the work of an author who wrote "Luck of Roaring Camp" and other stories. The third excerpt was written by the author of "The Light That Failed."

Give yourself 5 for naming the author correctly and another 5 for the title of the poem. If you achieve 60 per cent you have passed. Anything above that is highly commendable. If you are stumped, you can always find the answers in another column on this page.

Hates Narrow Minded People

Broad Minded Policies Are Announced

By Westbrook Pegler.

ONE fine trait about my character is that I am not inclined to be narrow minded, as I have a very broad mind myself and I am constantly crusading against narrow mindedness among my fellow brothers of the human race.

Personally, I have not got any use for narrow minded people, as I think they are a lot of hypocrites, and if I could have my way I would get up some kind of a law so every narrow minded hypocrite in the country would be housed up in the jails. I feel sure that every broad minded citizen would be in favor of this, because narrow mindedness has been sweeping the country like hot cakes and the only way to treat such people is to show them no consideration.

Furthermore, I would not bother with any jury trials for this kind of characters, because every one of them is a sneak in the grass and they might get some of their fellow hypocrites on the jury to cause a disagreement and defeat the ends of justice.

GIVE 'EM THE LIMIT

So instead of having jury trials, it would be my idea to hold an examination of the hypocrites and if they answered the questions in a narrow minded way I would simply give them the limit.

I suppose I feel the effects of narrow mindedness worse in my profession than they do in some other lines, because the first thing that these hypocrites always pick on is the sport of the squared circle, and whenever they wish to cause trouble for their fellow men they start casting charges on the great body of sportsmen who are working themselves to the quick to provide clean recreation for red blooded citizens. I do not know why they do this, because if I had to cast any charges I would start casting them at the king of England or the bolsheviks.

You can get contributions just as well that way, and instead of causing any harm you just cause a lot of innocent amusement and enjoyment for young and old.

FOREIGN DANGERS

My idea is that if you are sincere and you really wish to help the public to escape from some terrible danger you can always pick out a foreign danger without picking out some home industry and ruining a fellow citizen's business. I have never engaged in this line of work myself but I can easily see where I could create a great deal of public interest and collect a large amount of contributions by attacking some evil like the kaiser.

If I decided to attack the king of England I would hire a band and an auditorium and I would get up and make a speech stating that the minute the king of England's armies set foot on the fair soil of wherever I happened to live, I would shoot them down like dogs and I would then call for volunteers to follow me into the fray, charging them a nominal fee of ten dollars each for privates and all the way up to $50 each for generals, with special rates for clubs joining as a body, to defray the cost of administration.

"And," I would state, "I want to tell you right here and now that I believe in defending our soil against a lot of dissolute kings and dukes and lords to the last ditch, one hundred per cent, and the minute I see one of their cowardly sneaks of rotten, dirty, beer guzzling soldiers walking up Elm street or Pine street leering at my loved ones I believe in taking stern measures, absolutely."

BOLSHEVISM MUST GO

Or if I happened to be attacking the bolsheviks I would make a speech demanding that our government catch all the bolshevik spies in our country and kick them into New York harbor and make them swim home.

"Of all the foul, no good bums in the world, the bolsheviks are the worst and they are nothing but a lot of no good loafers and bums," I would state. "And," I would state "if I had Trotsky up here on this platform I would haul off and hit him a paste in the kisser, because my ideals are all for good government and I believe positively in clean streets and that I am not afraid to state my position fearlessly and without fear."

But, of course, there might be a time when I would want to attack some danger right here at home to show my followers that I am a fighting leader and not picking on a lot of foreign menaces just because they are setups. So in that case I would attack New York City, because New York City is full of immorality and it is practically nothing to ride along Riverside drive on the top of a bus and look into the windows of the exclusive society mansions and see society debauches going on at all hours of the day and night.

SOCIETY DEBAUCHES

"The society debauch has got to go," I would announce in a firm voice, "as it is un-American, and when I think of a lot of Wall street brokers in full dress suits and spats doing nothing but riding in taxicabs from one debauch to another and the slimy tentacles of temptation reaching out for our clean minded boys and girls to enmesh them into the labyrinth of this modern maelstrom, I do not hesitate that I am unqualifiedly opposed to it.

"Gotham," I would say, "is an un-American sink hole, rearing its ugly head in a country where one hundred million home loving citizens have no use for debauchers, and I pledge my word that I will not rest until I have gone to New York and investigated these debauches first hand, so we will now receive subscriptions of five dollars each from all those who are opposed to debauching in order to defray the expenses of this personal investigation."

This kind of crusading is not narrow minded, as it takes in a great deal of territory, and you can make just as much money as you can by picking out some old established home industry like the fistic sport and cast ing insinuations on a fine body of honest athletes, and if I had my way I would get up a law so that any time any crusader gets so narrow minded that they will criticise another man's profession you could simply call an officer and have them arrested, because anybody who cannot understand their fellow man's point of view is an undesirable citizen.

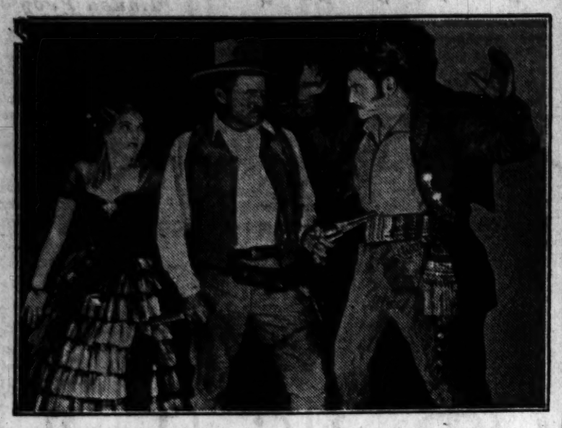
THE GAY DEFENDER



THELMA TODD, FRED KOHLER and RICHARD DIX are the three interested parties before you here. Just what the excitement is all about "The Gay Defender," starring Mr. Dix, which opens at the Chicago theater tomorrow, will tell you.

NIPPED IN THE BUD.

By W. M. Schwimmer.

It's pretty tough when you're in love
To get a cruel parental shove.

It gripes me when in slumber deep,
The pest alarm impedes my sleep.

It irritates me when I'm late
And then the red light makes me wait.

It burns me up with discontent
When I would forcefully give vent

To language quite profanely stressed——
The wife walks in and I'm suppressed.

It drives me daft and makes me moan
When I am cut off on the phone.

I gnash my teeth and loudly wail
When I peruse some gripping tale,

To learn when I conclude the text
That it's continued in the next.

It's sad when something of this sort
Bobs up to disconcert and thwart.

But though these snags are most severe,
And spike your guns and interfere;

There's one far worse than all of these,
It's this—an interrupted sneeze!

Artificial Stone for Nonskid Paving

PARIS.—(AP)—Nonskid paving that is cheap and durable is more seriously sought after than the fountain of youth.

French engineers have tried nearly everything here and on test roads in the country without yet finding what they want, but they have hopes a new artificial "stone" being tested in the streets of Nice will fill the bill.

These yellowish composition stones, 9 by 4½ by 3 inches, are laid diagonally, like cobblestones, but with the joints cemented with a tar mixture.

The life of the stone pavement is estimated at 35 years and experiments showed the artificial blocks are more durable than cobblestones and, above all, wear down without becoming slick and slippery.

The cost in France is given as about $2.85 a square yard.

Only 20,000 Listed in World Who's Who

PARIS.—(AP)—Of the 1,800,000,000 inhabitants of the earth 20,000 have a right to be considered members of a world aristocracy of brains and achievement.

This is the opinion of Robert Wilberforce, editor of an international super-who's-who now being compiled with the assistance of the league of nations institute of intellectual coöperation. He formerly was with the news department of the British foreign office and spent many years in America.

The volume, later to be expanded in size, will contain biographies of the world's leading men and women. In order to get a balanced representation in the various fields of thought and activity, proportions will vary in accordance with the type of activity most developed in each nation. Thus America will furnish a large number of industrialists and bankers, France many artistic and literary figures, India philosophers, and England statesmen. The first edition will be ready before the end of 1928.

I WORRY, I WORRY

Sock 'Er!
Got a runner in my stocking
From the top down to the heel;
And I'm worried—gosh, I'm worried,
'Cause I've lost my socks' appeal!

I worried, still worry,
If his good-night kisses
Will ever be given
When I am his "Mrs." E. G.

Try Raising Cane.
I operate a rabbit farm,
And worry 'bout my wife,
Because she worries so because
I lead a "hare-raising" life.

A Vicarious Fretter.
I am clever, and so, you see,
I hired a "guy" to worry for me.
I agreed to pay ten bucks a day
If he'd take my troubles and cares away.
When for his pay he commenced to shout,
I told him that was what he must worry about.
Now I am worried—the doggone slob
Says he is going to quit his job.

A Modern Eve.
The thing that worries me the most,
When in my bath, alone,
"Ye gods, there goes the telephone!"
In nature's garb, I say, "hello,"
And tremble muchly in my knee,
For fear he might see little me!

North Avenue Wins Dominance in the "Battle of the Neighborhoods"

UNTIL a few years ago North Avenue, from Western to California, was a street of little one and two story frame shops. Their small dark windows were cluttered. The proprietors emerged from the seclusion of their living quarters in the rear only when a loud buzzer warned them of an occasional customer. They took what business came along, as they had done for years, and made no further effort to attract trade.

Families of the neighborhood shopped there only for necessities. Their larger purchases were made in other sections. Other neighborhoods were getting the profitable business.

Then They Woke Up - -

About five years ago, North Avenue merchants began to realize that the business they were losing was making other merchants prosperous. And they decided to bring these customers to their stores—to make their district one of the major shopping centers of Chicago. They followed the example of Chicago's most successful merchants and began to advertise.

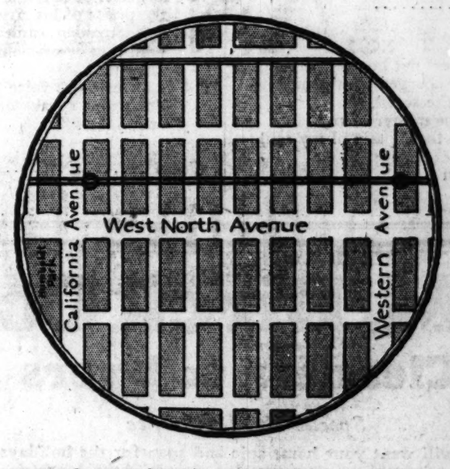
Today, the shacks that once lined North Avenue are rapidly being replaced with modern, brightly lighted stores. Furniture and department stores, specialty shops, hotels, one of the city's largest drug stores, several excellent restaurants. A few years ago there were no banks—none was needed. Today there are two, with six millions on deposit. There are six large theaters offering first run pictures.

The entire district bustles with activity. An air of prosperity prevails. Twenty-five foot shops that used to bring about $60 a month now rent for $400. Business frontage that could have been bought for $700 or $800 a foot sells for more than $3000 a foot today. North Avenue is taking its place among Chicago's finest neighborhood shopping centers. Merchants no longer wait for business; they go out after it. Aggressive merchandising and advertising are expanding their trading areas, bringing customers from Austin, Oak Park, Rogers Park.

A Billion Dollar Opportunity - -

Chicago offers a market of more than a billion dollars a year. Eleven hundred million dollars annually for the necessities and luxuries of life. It is one of the richest markets in the world—a market worth fighting for.

The families in your neighborhood spend millions of dollars every year. They will spend this vast sum with the merchants who advertise most aggressively. You who have done so much toward bringing success to your neighborhood can insure continued prosperity in no surer way than by concentrating your advertising in the newspaper that reaches the greatest number of your customers.



Constant Competition

Chicago, in little more than an average lifetime, has grown from a crude village into one of the world's greatest cities. It has passed countless older cities in size, in commercial importance, and in prosperity.

This rapid growth has brought many changes. It has transformed prairies into thriving metropolitan districts and small corner shops into great stores. It has brought commercial supremacy to some districts and left others behind, forgotten.

It means a tremendous opportunity for neighborhood merchants, but it also means the constant competition of rival shopping centers—a continual "battle of the neighborhoods."

Don't let other merchants in other sections, with more vigorous merchandising and advertising, reap the golden harvest that should be yours—that can be yours if you continue to fight for it.

Act Now!

The Chicago Tribune is an important factor in the success of many of Chicago's greatest merchants. They know, because years of experience have proved it to them, that the responsiveness of Tribune readers to Tribune advertising makes it the greatest sales-producing force in Chicago.

The Metropolitan Sections of The Sunday Tribune enable neighborhood merchants to reach families living in their trading area—near enough to shop conveniently at their stores—and pay for that circulation only. With a circulation of about a quarter of a million, each part of the Metropolitan Section offers you "coverage" of a million people, at a cost of about one-third the rate for full Sunday Tribune circulation.

In no other way can you reach so large a percentage of your potential customers at so low a cost. In no other way can you secure such positive insurance of continued prosperity, at a cost so easily within the means of every neighborhood merchant. One of Chicago's greatest neighborhood merchants says: "The Metropolitan Section of The Sunday Tribune is helping us materially to show the greatest gains in the history of our business."

Decide now to use this great business-building, sales-producing force. The Metropolitan Section will do for you what it is doing for an increasing number of Chicago's leading merchants—bring you dominance of your trading area.

Phone Superior 0100 and ask a Tribune man to call with facts and figures.

The Last Word in Paris Fashions

Mid-Winter Finds the Smartly Dressed Woman Donning Costumes Trimmed with Astrakan.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS.—(Special Correspondence.)—One of the popular myths about fashion is the myth about the insatiable appetite of the Parisienne for novelty. She is pictured as a creature avid for the new in clothes, and continually changing what she has for something "just as." This pleasure in and desire for the different exists to a greater extent in our younger and more restless country. The Parisienne retains the primitive feminine impulse to hang on to a good thing, even in clothes, once she has it. Her adoption of styles is, thus, much more leisurely than that of the American. Witness her continued adherence to black, to beige hosiery, to the small hat throughout so many seasons, in spite of more colorful and newer offerings from the creators in the world's fashion mart.

Americans are coming around to her way of thinking in regard to the black costume for winter. The Parisienne clings to it because it is the surest short cut to a supreme chic sufficiently elastic to cover a multitude of occasions. When it is worn in Paris the black costume has cachet and distinction to a degree color rarely can attain. It is always right.

Black here is almost invariably combined in some way with astrakan fur for the coat and often, also, for the winter frock. This isn't anything to set the world on fire as news, but for the woman who must be well dressed and who has only a limited wardrobe, it is something to consider as a solution to most of her costume problems for daytime. The straight line black coat, well cut and trimmed with black or gray astrakan, is more often seen in smart places in Paris than any other. It is supremely practical when made of broadcloth, as it usually is, and it doesn't look dowdy as so many utilitarian clothes do, unfortunately. It has a smart, luxurious air and may be worn over so many different kinds of frocks that it has few rivals.

I observe, despite its usefulness, that the black broadcloth coat is chosen in a great number of cases by women who don't have to think at all of the practical side of the clothes they wear. They select it because it has a chic and aristocratic air, which is reason enough, indeed.

The first figure at the left in our sketch is an illustration of the most popular coat in Paris today among discriminating women. As you see, the lines are those familiar slender ones so becoming to the average feminine figure. The cut of this coat is sufficiently complicated to be distinctive, with curved bands at the back fitted across the hipline, and slightly flaring gores at the sides of the skirt portion.

This Beer model of black broadcloth and shaded gray astrakan, shown at the extreme left, is a successful coat for many occasions.

Drecoll trims the frock of black crepe marocain shown next, with narrow bands of astrakan. The diagonal lines and asymmetrical hemline of this model are distinguished details.

Curved tucks repeat the curved-line closing of the black astrakan collar on this Philippe et Gaston coat of black broadcloth, increasing the effect of slenderness at the hipline. Pictured third.

Last, the Parisienne also wears a simple suit of navy blue broadcloth trimmed with gray astrakan, from Nicole Groult. The sweater is of navy blue tricot with small motifs of gray and rose. The narrow sash belt and the bands at the neckline and hips are of gray.

Beer has made this coat of black broadcloth, the new very silky surfaced kind from Rodier, and has trimmed it with gray astrakan, shading from dark gray at the outside of the revers, collar and the base of the cuffs, to a light gray on the inside borders. The sleeves, which are fitted above the elbows and flaring below, increase a great deal the gracefulness of the lines. The astrakan of the collar extends to the hemline on the left side, being placed on the inside of the coat from the hipline.

Our third figure illustrates another, slightly different version of the black broadcloth and astrakan coat about which the Parisienne is so mad this winter. This Philippe et Gaston garment changes the same slender lines subtly by placing the bulk in the upper part of the silhouette, and draping the straight skirt in a wrap around manner. The closing of this coat is diagonal, the shawl collar of black astrakan extending from the left shoulder clear around on the right hip. The cline is excellent as a device for slenderizing the bipline, and Philippe et Gaston increases its effectiveness by a series of curved fanlike tucks that repeat the movement of the collar.

The sleeves are straight, comfortably roomy and cuffed with black astrakan. There is not much extreme novelty in such a coat, but there is a great deal of elegance, chic and real charm, to which trio mere newness is invariably sacrificed by the woman who is an expert in matters of dress.

A coat of this kind worn with a black satin frock is ideal for even the most formal afternoon affairs, and worn with a beige jersey dress and simple beige hat it makes an excellent wrap for the street in the morning. It may even be worn over an informal, sleeveless dinner dress of chiffon, lace or velvet, thus tripling its value to the woman who can have only one daytime coat.

Our second model is the astrakan trimmed frock a good many Parisiennes are wearing. Drecoll has made this dress of a flat crêpe, dull of surface. The long lines of the silhouette are diagonal, flaring toward the bottom at the left side, which droops lower than the right at the hemline. The side front seams and the under arm ones are diagonal, merging into flaring gores, between which are placed slightly circular godets, creating a beautiful asymmetrical line that gives cachet to the frock. The diagonal closing is outlined with a narrow band of astrakan, this band passing beneath a square buckle at the right hip. The sleeves are cuffed with the same fur and with the crêpe of the frock.

Our fourth model shows the astrakan trimmed suit that is seen often around Paris. This Nicole Groult model varies the color scheme a bit, combining navy blue broadcloth with gray astrakan bands, a color combination that will be flattering to a woman whose skin is too sallow to support black. The jacket is of the cardigan type, banded all around with gray astrakan, and lined with gray tricot. The inset pockets are also banded with the fur.

The skirt of this model has a wide panel at the front, ending in deep plaits at the sides, so that while the lines are straight and narrow the skirt is comfortably wide. It is made of navy blue broadcloth. The sweater blouse is of dark blue tricot, with small square motifs of gray, navy and rose.

The band at the neck and the hips is of gray tricot with figures in dark blue and rose, and the narrow knitted sash is also of gray. This suit is nominally sports, but is suitable for general daytime wear. The wool lining to the jacket and the fur trimming give sufficient warmth so that it is practical to wear in mid-winter.

EXIT—STAGE ENTRANCE.

(The show flops. Mamie Hickey finds herself stranded with two days' pay, a business college diploma and a half stocked makeup box.)

The lady star is smashing things back in her dressing room;
The sheriff strikes the last act set while stage hands stand and gloom;
Our pale director hands the show's fat treasurer a clout.
They mix to fight
With scratch and bite—
A spotlight flickers out.

Tears make a mess of makeup as Yvettes and Geraldines
Pack up their little stepins (that's a lace-edged word for jeans).
The tenor's kissed routine good-by; the backer gets his slam;
Why rage or sigh
Or alibi?
All that is said means—damn.

LONG ODDS.

One never meets the hero gay
Who lives in newsstand tale,
All full of luck and juniper
And selling talk and kale.
Across the slick mahogany
He always makes his yards—
He weds the boss' daughter or
Gets "vice pres" on his cards.

(However)
Hard Fact still deals with men of toil
Whose destiny can harry them;
The world is full of bookkeepers,
And some one has to marry them.

THE POET OF COMMERCE.

(Cyrano and Villon would be stare in a modern advertising agency—probably hired to write perfume and washing machine accounts. . . . Overheard.)

Rare toys? Or idols? Were we that?
The symbol changes with the hour
And erstwhile goddesses descend
To rank as "so much buying power."

Love lost the lure of glamoured words
And poets now are prospered lads
Who write—to catch a lady's eye
And pin her fancy to—their ads.

YOU AND YOUR CHILDREN by MRS. GLADYS HUNTINGTON BEVA

Following the Trail Together.

CONVINCED, as we showed ourselves to be in last Sunday's article, that children should understand the natural, fundamental facts of life and its reproduction, many fathers and mothers still are completely in the dark as to how to go about enlightening their childen. And because they don't know what to do and don't feel themselves competent to study it out, they let it all slide, which is wrong. The problem must be solved.

In the first place, before any one can lead a child's mind along this path in the most natural way, he has to realize that a little child is intensely interested in everything in this world he has come into. He is a walking interrogation point. His questions embrace everything. All is grist that comes to the mill of his eager mental acquisitiveness.

So when his questions touch upon those facts of life which many of us have not learned to talk about and think about in a natural way, don't draw back, and whatever his or her age may be, don't regard this as an inordinate curiosity. It is a very normal curiosity and if you can't feel that it is, you're the wrong person to tell him anything.

Such curiosity has no more significance and is no more persistent than his curiosity about anything else.

Learning from Nature.

As to supplementing their direct questions with general information, let that cover all other forms of life than our own. Every part of it is absorbingly interesting, beginning with plant life and going on up into higher forms.

Do your children realize that when the big, brown bumbling bee gets himself powdered with golden pollen he's unwittingly going to fertilize the pistil (the mother, the female) of another flower with it? Do they know the almost unbelievable story of the salmon who leaps up streams and even waterfalls because nature has put in them the strong impulse to perpetuate their kind?

Do they know anything about the life of bees and how it is organized to allow no possibility of a slip-up on the future of their race? Have they ever seen a female moth emerge from her cocoon and lay her eggs immediately so that, if she does get her wings smashed up or meets with some animal whose menu she's on, it really doesn't matter, because she has done what nature intended her to—reproduced her species?

Have they been in close touch with dogs or cats that have had puppies or kittens? Let them learn these things and how nature has created everything male and female and implanted in them the urge to reproduce their kind. You will have to choose your words to fit their understanding, but you will find the idea well within their scope.

Older Children.

Naturally one answers the questions of little children differently from the way one answers the questions of older children. How you do that no one can prescribe exactly—it depends largely upon how much they already know and upon the child's mind and temperament.

Many parents who might otherwise answer their children's questions quite frankly are held back by a fear: "If I answer this question, how do I know what he'll ask next? How do I know how far he'll go?"

Don't let that worry you. Let him go just as far as he will. There's nothing he will ask you that you shouldn't answer. If you don't know, tell him you'll find out and that you'll find out and tell him so. Or if you feel that a few things he will ask you when he is older and you sincerely to tell him them when he comes, explain it to him in a way.

This handling of this which there have been for generations a dangerous false modesty, is a stumbling many mothers and fathers want to enlighten their perplexity has been the books being written with helping. But few of good. A well known long ago, when asked one, said, "I cannot."

The United States had prepared under its simply written, helpful are obtainable by any one inal cost. I know they great assistance to fathers ers who did not feel with their children along tant and interesting have a deep desire to follow together. Information booklets is available column.

BUILDERS OF QUALITY VACUUM CLEANERS FOR SEVENTEEN YEARS

Patterns by Clotilde

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off. Copyright, 1927, by The Chicago Tribune.

755—Woman's dress. Sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, and 46 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 3⅛ yards of 40 inch material with ⅞ yard of 36 inch contrasting.

833—Women's and misses' apron and cap. Sizes small, medium, and large. Two yards of 36 inch material and 5¾ yards of binding will be required.

3010—Girl's dress. Sizes 6, 8, 10, 12, and 14 years. Size 8 requires 1⅞ yards of 32 or 36 inch material with ¾ yard of 36 inch contrasting.

HOW TO USE THE PATTERNS

AN attractive cap and apron are shown here, the apron having strap extensions that cross at the center back and button there. Pattern No. 833 is cut in one piece, covers the dress well in the front, and in fact gives ample protection all around.

After the apron is cut, all the edges are bound, and it will be well before starting to do the binding to baste and stitch small pieces of the apron material where the buttonholes and buttons are to be put. If a single thickness of the material is all that is used, there soon will be tears. Baste these pieces to the straps and apron corners all around, turning the material in across the lower edge of each piece and stitching. The binding will hold the pieces in place around the edges.

It is possible to buy binding in all colors at the notion counter of any store, and this will make the finishing much easier.

Two large patch pockets are set on the front, and these add to the jaunty appearance of the apron, and are a great convenience. Green sateen, bound in a deeper shade of the same color, is pictured. Printed sateen, chintz, chambray, striped percale, and English prints can be chosen for service.

Pattern No. 3010 is a design for a dress for a girl that is just as particular as it is dainty. The two piece skirt is shirred and attached to a long waisted bodice closed at the center back. The cunning bolero has kimono sleeves and the neck is finished with a flat, round collar. Both the sleeve edges and the bottom of the bolero are shown with scalloped edges, but if you prefer, they can be made straight. There is something so pretty, though, about the scallops that I imagine most mothers will be willing to do the extra work that binding these edges will entail.

A straight, wide hem finishes the bottom of the skirt and if one of the wash materials is used, this may be stitched on the machine. If any other material is used, the hem should be put in by hand.

A French blue wool jersey with the underbodice and collar of tan, or a dark green velveteen, combined with flesh colored silk crêpe, or plain flannel combined with plaid are all exceptionally smart.

All wool challis is shown in delightful printed designs, and nothing could be more attractive or practical than to make the dress of this, using one of the washable crêpe de chines for binding. Such a dress will launder beautifully, making it an ideal choice for school wear.

The deep French V, extending to the waist line, makes the design of pattern No. 755 particularly suitable for large figures. The inverted plaits in the front add a graceful flare to the hemline, and the one piece sleeves cut rather wide at the hand, are given novel treatment, being set as they are into narrow bands at the wrists and allowing the extra width to flare beyond.

The back of the dress is in one piece and quite straight, while in the front the upper and lower parts are cut separately and joined. Perforations on the front skirt section show just where the inverted plait is to be laid each side of the center. Lay this front section out smooth on a table, and after the markings have been clearly put in lay the plaits from top to bottom. Baste them in place, basting from the top down.

There are two shoulder tucks on each side of the front. Perforations and instructions given with the pattern show exactly how they are to be laid and stitched. The fronts are underfaced and rolled back, forming revers. After this much has been done join the waist and skirt, following the directions carefully.

It will be pretty to have the facing, vestee, and sleeve bands made of something contrasting. Printed velvet with plain Canton faille crêpe contrasting, black crêpe satin with the dull side for the trimming contrast, wine red sheer velveteen, and supple tweed are smart combinations.

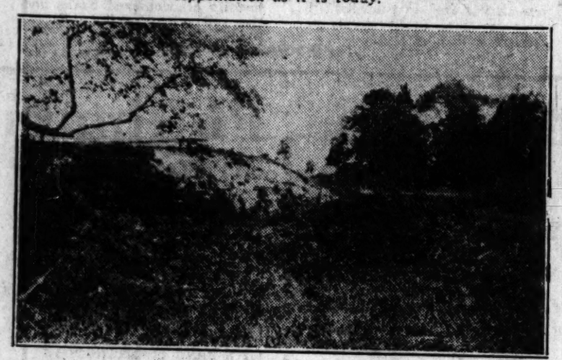
HISTORICAL AMERICA by CLIFFORD RAYMOND

Appomattox

APPOMATTOX is on the highway from Richmond and from Petersburg to Lynchburg. The Appomattox river rises from two small forks near it, and the James is a little to the north. It is Piedmont country, and Lynchburg, at the head of the Shenandoah valley, is not far away. The present village of Appomattox is on the concrete. The vestiges of old Appomattox Courthouse are a mile or so off the main highway. In the nearby region they call it the Surrender Ground.

Appomattox is a symbol in the life of the republic. It may be the greatest. It is the token of the union to which each state now agrees without reservation. The civil war was not the first assertion of the reserved or presumed right of withdrawal from the common bond. Nor prior to the civil war was South Carolina, with John C. Calhoun, the first to point to the possible use of this option. New England in 1814 had run its fingers over the cement to show how it crumbled and fell away if a state wanted to exercise its right to withdraw.

Appomattox as it is today.



A survival of a redoubt, now on the golf grounds which preserve much of the battlefield.

A WASTED SANCTUARY

At Appomattox these reservations died and, inasmuch as now all states willingly consent to the decree of fate and destiny there recorded, the spot to which the event is attached might be a national sanctuary. To an extent upon which it derives a sort of spiritual significance it is a waste.

Appomattox is a closed room in the house. On April 9, 1865, Grant, returning from his first meeting with Lee, stopped the booming of the 100 guns of his troops and begun to fire in celebration of the surrender of the army of northern Virginia. The guns were stopped. The smoke curled away. There was silence. It endures at the surrender ground today.

Appomattox remained outside the subsequent rancors and hatreds. It has not had any share in triumphs or memorials. The parade has passed it by. Weeds are its laurels. It is a name passing intangibly into the history of the nation, an event without a place, a symbol without substance.

THE SOUTH'S TABLETS

It contains now a few old houses, some empty, some occupied. There are patches of corn, tangles of vines, trees and briars, patches of pasture, and small metal tablets. The south, which has been too proud wholly to forget, has one small marker, inscribed:

"Here, on Sunday, April 9, 1865, after four years of heroic struggle in defense of principles believed fundamental to the existence of our government, Lee surrended 9,000 men, the remnant of an army still unconquered in spirit, to 118,000 men under Grant." The figures are wrong, but that seems unimportant.

Another tablet marks the spot of the courthouse, which was burned in 1892. There is a tablet indicating the site of the house owned and occupied by Wilbur McLean in which Gen. U. S. Grant, U. S. A., and Gen. Robert E. Lee, C. S. A., met and agreed upon the terms of the surrender of the army of northern Virginia on the afternoon of Sunday, April 9, 1865. The house was taken down in 1893 with a view to its removal and reërection elsewhere.

A few piles of brick in a deep tangle of locusts and vines remain to show where the house was.

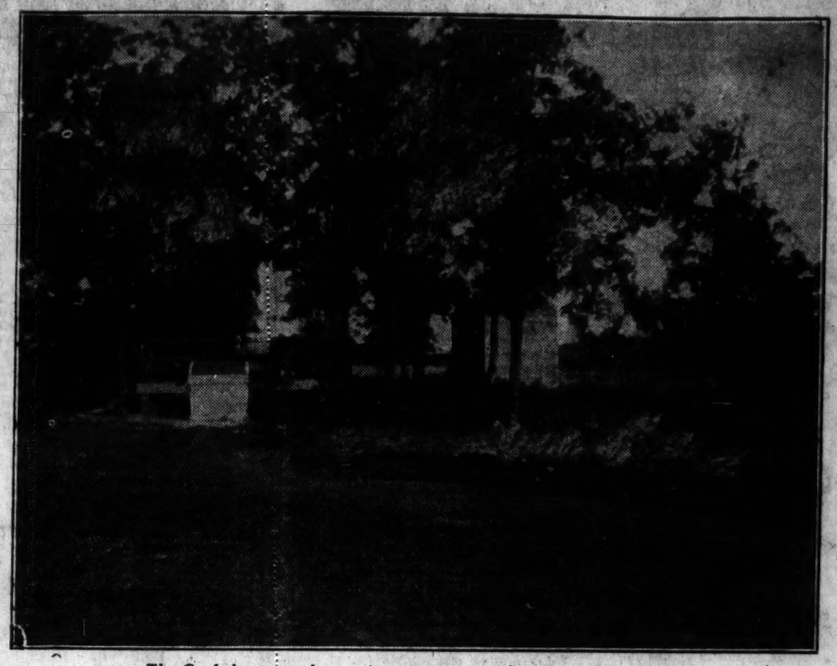
GEN. GRANT'S VERSION

The story of the meeting at the McLean house, as Grant told it in his memoirs, was:

". . . I found him [Lee] at the house of a Mr. McLean, at Appomattox Court House, with Col. Marshall, one of his staff officers, awaiting my arrival. The head of his column was occupying a hill, on a portion of which was an apple orchard, beyond a little valley which separated it from that on the crest of which Sheridan's forces were drawn up in line of battle to the south.

"Before stating what took place between Gen. Lee and myself I will give all there is of the story of the famous apple trees.

"Wars produce many stories of fiction, some of which are told until they are believed to be true. The war of the rebellion was no exception to this rule, and the story of the apple tree is one of those fictions based on a slight foundation of fact. As I have said, there was an apple orchard on the side of the hill occupied by the confederate forces. Running diagonally up the hill was a wagon road, which at one point ran very near one of the trees, so that the wheels of vehicles had on that side cut off the roots of this tree, leaving a little enbankment. Gen. Babcock of my staff reported to me that when he first met Gen. Lee he was sitting upon this enbankment with his feet in the road below and his back resting against the tree. The story had no other foundation than that. Like many other stories, it would be very good if it were only true.



The Confederate marker at Appomattox near the site of the courthouse.

GREETINGS

"I had known Gen. Lee in the old army, and had served with him in the Mexican war, but did not suppose, owing to the difference in our age and rank, that he would remember me, while I would more naturally remember him distinctly, because he was the chief of staff of Gen. Scott in the Mexican war.

"When I had left camp that morning I had not expected so soon the result that was then taking place, and consequently was in rough garb. I was without a sword, as I usually was when on horseback in the field, and wore a soldier's blouse for a coat, with the shoulder straps of my rank to indicate to the army who I was. When I went into the house I found Gen. Lee. We greeted each other and, after shaking hands, took our seats. I had my staff with me, a good portion of whom were in the room during the whole of the interview.

"What Gen. Lee's feelings were I do not know. As he was a man of much dignity, with an impassive face, it was impossible to say whether he felt inwardly glad that the end had finally come, or felt sad over the result and was too manly to show it. Whatever his feelings, they were entirely concealed from my observation; but my own feelings, which had been quite jubilant on the receipt of his letter, were sad and depressed. I felt like anything rather than rejoicing at the downfall of a foe who had fought so long and valiantly, and had suffered so much for a cause, though that cause was, I believe, one of the worst for which a people ever fought and one for which there was the least excuse. I do not question, however, the sincerity of the great mass of those who were opposed to us.

MEMORIES

"Gen. Lee was dressed in a full uniform, which was entirely new, and was wearing a sword of considerable value—very likely the sword which had been presented by the state of Virginia. At all events, it was an entirely different sword from the one that would ordinarily be worn in the field. In my rough traveling suit, the uniform of a private with the straps of a lieutenant general, I must have contrasted very strangely with a man so handsomely dressed, six feet high, and of faultless form. But this was not a matter that I thought of until afterward.

"We soon fell into a conversation about old army times. He remarked that he remembered me very well in the old army, and I told him that as a matter of course I remembered him perfectly, but from the difference in our rank and years [there being about sixteen years' difference in our ages], I had thought it very likely that I had not attracted his attention sufficiently to be remembered by him after such a long interval. Our conversation grew so pleasant that I almost forgot the object of our meeting.

"After the conversation had run on in this style for some time, Gen. Lee called my attention to the object of our meeting, and said that he had asked for this interview for the purpose of getting from me the terms I proposed to give his army. I said that I meant merely that his army should lay down their arms, not to take them up again during the continuance of the war unless duly and properly exchanged. He said that he had so understood my letter."

The little confederate graveyard.

THOUGHTFULNESS

No capitulation of surrender was signed. After the talk about the old army, Lee again asked what terms Grant would offer. Grant asked Gen. Parker, his staff secretary, for writing material, and wrote a letter addressed to Lee informing him that a surrender of arms, artillery, and public property, with officers giving their individual parole and with the men paroled by companies or regiments, would be accepted. As he wrote he thought of the need the southern soldiers would have for their horses when they were home again. He exempted the horses from the property to be surrendered. He exempted side arms in consideration of the possessors' feelings.

Lee read the letter and said the thoughtfulness regarding the horses would have a happy effect on his army. He wrote a letter accepting the terms, adding in comment to Grant that in the confederate army the cavalrymen and artillery men used their own and not government horses. Grant said that was not covered in his letter but the men, being small farmers, would need their horses and he would order that any man claiming a horse or mule should be allowed to take it home with him.

A SECOND MEETING

Lee said he would be obliged to ask for rations and forage. His provision trains had been captured. Grant asked him for how many men. Lee replied about 20,000, and Grant authorized the rationing. His own army was getting forage from the country.

The next morning Grant was going to Washington, but before he went—"I thought I would like to see Gen. Lee again." He rode out with a bugler and a staff officer with a white flag. Lee, learning who wanted to see him, rode out between the lines and the two generals had "a very pleasant conversation of over a half hour." Grant urged Lee to counsel submission on the part of other confederate armed forces to prevent further loss. That would require consultation with the confederate president first, the Virginian said, but he thought the south would be persuaded of the uselessness of further resistance.

Federal officers obtained permission of Lee to visit confederate officers they had known in the "old army" when the states were all in the family. Grant went on to Washington. There was no bitterness then. Reconstruction was yet to come.

SILENCE

Appomattox went to sleep and no one raises a voice there in moralizing or memoralizing. There are some young children in the families which live by cultivating the garden patches. They have Minie balls if the visitor wants them. They can find the metal tablets in the corn and weeds. One marks the position of a confederate battery to which legend attributes the last shot, another the position of some federal troops. There is a deserted general store, an occupied house which had been a hotel, a little confederate graveyard in which half the markers read: "C. S. A. Unknown Soldier."

Appomattox is neither a tragedy nor a triumph. It is merely a closed room.

PERFECTION BY ELIMINATION by Persis Standish

The Formal Dinner, Like Royalty, Is Rare; the Smaller, Simpler, Smarter Affair Is the Thing

AT the beginning of the winter season letters come in about the etiquette of dinner parties and are full of queries about serving, menus, etc. Many of the letters are about "formal dinners." Why formal? Formality, like royalty, is becoming scarce, if not extinct. It is only fitting when it inhabits palaces, and then the dwellers therein soon grow bored with it.

Some persons, I think, are suffering from a confusion of terms. If by formality they mean dignity, then dignity is a guest that can be invited to a cottage to dine as well as to the Quirinal or the Vatican and is just as much at home there.

Giving a dinner party of a number of courses is an art that requires either vast experience or a special talent to master. It requires more ingredients than those that go to make up the most complex of French menus. It requires, for instance, conversation, plenty of equipment, ingenuity in decoration, careful, efficient and smart service, and food that would make a dyspeptic hungry.

And on top of all these is required that hovering, intangible, exquisite spirit of hospitality that is omniscient, omnipresent and charitable, and which, with all these divine qualities, is yet a human thing. Such is the perfect dinner party and to its perfections each guest must contribute his share. Of course, the hostess must, first of all, select guests who have something to contribute either in spiritual, moral or mundane qualities. But having selected them, she expects every man to do his duty.

Be Agreeable.

So, if you are invited to a dinner party and you are a man, put in your most scintillating buttons and your most glittering mots. Expect to find each woman present a sister of Minerva or Helen, and tell her so—tell Helen, of course, that she is a sister of Minerva, and Minerva that she is a sister of Helen.

If you are a woman, burnish your hair, massage your face, put on your most attractive and subtle frock, the one that is too picturesque for cafés and yet too simple for the opera. Attune your ear to hear in even stupid male conversation the subtleties of Machiavelli and the lyrics of Abelard. Attune your laugh to respond like silver bells to the termination of anecdote.

Dispense with perfume if it is more than very faint, for perfume, dear sisters, has spoiled many a capricious appetite. I can speak with authority on this subject, having been told so by no less than ten males of varying status social and chronological. I have a great many male relatives of varying ages and tastes, and not fewer than five of them have at one time or another expressed decided views on the subject of perfume at meals.

On one occasion a beautiful and rather celebrated woman was dining with us, and my brother, the eldest male of the family, was, of course, to sit next her. Just before dinner he said to my mother, "Would you mind sitting her next to Blank?" (He named his younger brother.) "She made me sick at breakfast with that horrible scent of hers and I'd like to eat my dinner."

Aim at Perfection.

But to get back to the perfect dinner party, perhaps such perfection as one aims at is only accomplished on Olympus or in Valhalla. (Now I somehow have the impression Valhallesque table manners must be bad—too much swilling of celestial beer and too much attention to heavenly skittles.) However, the thing to do is to aim at perfection, and one may hit many a delightful mark lower down.

The way to aim at perfection is to aim at simplicity by elimination, to say to oneself, "I cannot have it thus and so, so I will not try it so and thus. Instead of having seven imperfect courses I will have three perfect ones. Instead of having twelve guests I will have four—or six. Instead of having three indifferent waitresses I will have one efficient one. Instead of having elaborate decorations of too exotic a character I will have a simple bowl of maidenhair and two candles.

"Instead of having too much on the table I will have too little. Instead of having that brilliant Jones girl, who is delightful for half an hour and a bore for two hours, I will have Maggie Brown, who is such a good listener and who has that divine gift of common sense.

"Instead of having small green strawberries out of season I will have ripe, luscious pineapple which is in. Instead of serving Turkish coffee (which I do not know how to make like Mrs. Blank de Blank, who does). I will serve the variety which is made with cold water and a tablespoon for each cup, and which is amber clear when a quarter of an egg is added thereto.

Resolved Not to Fret.

"I will read what Persis Standish promises to say about whether the plates should be removed from left to right and where the salad fork should be, and I will drill my waitress in these things and then forget them on the night of the dinner.

"I will not have about me that air of a clucking hen that rattles the servants and makes guests uncomfortable." Do this and your problem is solved.

BEAUTY ANSWERS by Catherine Donnelly

What's your beauty ill? Too fat? Too thin? Dry hair? Oily hair, oily skin, blackheads, pimples, or blackheads? Flat chested or flat footed? Write to me. I have a tonic, a diet, or a set of exercises for what ails you, and you're welcome to come and to all the advice I can give you. If you wish a personal reply, send a stamped, addressed envelope. Address Catherine Donnelly, The Tribune, Chicago.

MISS E. B. X.: YOU SHOULD brush your teeth every morning and night, and if possible after each meal. It is well to have two toothbrushes and use them alternately, giving each a chance to dry thoroughly. The mouth wash is an excellent one to use. It is recommended by dentists. Send a stamped addressed envelope for my booklet on "Mouth Hygiene."

L. S.: TO CORRECT ROUNDED shoulders you must learn to stand and walk correctly. Stand with the abdomen drawn in, chest out, and think of your back as in a straight line from the waist to the head. Allow the shoulders to fall naturally. Do not throw them back. Arms and hands should be relaxed. Try walking in this way several times a day for a period of ten or fifteen mintes each time, and send a stamped, addressed envelope for exercises to overcome the round shoulders.

BROWN EYES: THIN PEOPLE require an abundant supply of energy food or fuel foods, fats, starch, and sugar. They need to secure the largest number of calories in the most digestible form. Butter and oil are the best fats for them, as they are not likely to disturb digestion. Send stamped, addressed envelope for food to be eaten.

MISS M.: THERE IS NO WAY OF decreasing the size of the joints of the fingers, but by building up the rest of the hand the joints are made to appear smaller. Massage the hands with olive oil or a good cold cream. Swinging Indian clubs will be found helpful in developing the tissues.

MARTHA P.: STANDARD weight for a girl of 16, 5 feet 1, is 110 pounds. It will not be necessary, nor would it be wise for you to reduce, but you may eat sparingly of candy and sweets. They are most fattening.

Doris Blake's Answers to Love Problems

Have you a perplexing love affair on which you need the counsel of a friend? Write to Doris Blake, care The Tribune, Chicago. If you wish a personal reply please send a stamped addressed envelope.

Up to You.

"Dear Miss Blake: A certain young man has been asking me for dates. He seemed interested but as he had a steady girl I hesitated. Finally, I consented to go with him. After a pleasant evening together, he asked how long it would be before I would let him come back again. I laughed and went into the house without answering.

"He hesn't mentioned it again. Would it be proper to ask him to call?

"FLAPPER."

You weren't very encouraging, so naturally he didn't ask you again. It's up to you to let him know you'd be glad to have him come again, dear.

Apologize.

"Dear Miss Blake: My friend and I had an argument. I am willing to give in, but fear he will snub me.

"HEARTBROKEN."

If you were to blame, or you're equally guilty, don't hesitate to say so.

THE RETURN OF THE FEMININE

by Doris Blake

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Some Reasons Why Woman Is Laying Aside the Mannish Costume and Taking Up the Frills Again

A MAN was holding forth on "woman's present tendency towards masculinity."

"You surprise me," said an objector. "To my way of thinking, she is becoming more and more feminine. Look at the dress of the women in business, for instance. Compare it with the mannish clothes of their early entrance into the field of competition. It's only a freak you see nowadays in shirt and forbiddingly tailored suit. Take woman's patronage of beauty parlors as another example. Her cosmetic bills are mounting daily higher and higher. Surely these are not tendencies towards masculinity."

"O, so far as her personal self is concerned, yes—possibly she is reverting to type. But as to her rights, freedom, privileges recently won—wouldn't you say she's stolen man's weapons—"

"Yes," said an intruder, "and she's scared to death, herself, of what is going to happen with them in her hands."

The intruder proceeded to relate another one of those oft-heard tales of a great financial success missing so many of the joys dear to women by playing her masculine rôle too well.

Immediately the subject was directed into the channel of what the future holds for woman—whether she has been traveling in a circle that, at some early date, will bring her back to where she started.

The sex antagonism that has grown concurrently with woman's progress that woman herself does not like. She loses too much through it. The old biological urge keeps cropping up and calling for treatment as a woman, a slightly dependent woman. And the knowledge that in fighting a man with his own weapons she is hopelessly outclassed, discourages her. So the question is constantly rising in a woman's mind as to whether it is not better in the long run to play the woman game, even on a man's job. There is always a tinge of bitterness in the voice of a woman who has "asked no favors" when she speaks of the fluffy headed little creature who gets what she wants by playing the feminine.

Are women learning slowly that they succeed better when they stick to their own guns?

"Unfair" Competition.

A story is current of a clever, English authoress, sculptress, journalist, and beauty. She tells that in journalism she was unpopular with the men against whom she had to compete. They said that she used her femininity to get results that were impossible to them as mere males.

"Unfair competition," was their verdict.

Blandly admitting the charge, the woman argued: "But what was I to do? If I had not exploited the last ounce of value to be got out of my friendships and the fact that I was a woman, the men would have beaten me. I had a living to get for myself and my children. Not to have used all my weapons would have been a criminal kind of chivalry."

Unfair or wise, women are finding out that the best way to beat a man at his own game is to lure him on with their own.

There is a French aphorism to the effect that "a clever woman never meets a man on his own ground," a reason advanced by a well known Parisian designer for the unreadiness of his countrywomen to adopt sports clothes.

"The best she can ever hope to achieve is a bad imitation of men. With her own abundant equipment, why be a bad imitation of anything?" the designer naively argued.

And that, trained observers confide, is what is going on in the minds of a good many of the so-called independents whose motto heretofore was to eliminate sex entirely in the field of competition.

Not that there are any signs on the horizon of a speedy return to the bad old days when one could be "poor but genteel," or when one had to accept marriage as the only course open.

But there is something slightly ominous in the steadily increasing acceptance of the more graceful frock of an earlier period. If you look back over history, nothing, you will find, epitomizes the spirit of a period as its dress. Whether the clothes produce the period, or vice versa, does not matter. Dress is a frank reflection of the moment's psychology.

The Ultimate in Elimination.

Woman, in her dress, has reached the ultimate limit of elimination. Nothing more can be decently eliminated or abbreviated. So alteration in style is bound to come. It is unlikely that the trailing skirt will reappear any more than the Victorian type of woman, but dress already shows that "we are rounding our curve into femininity again," as an English writer puts it.

"The significant thing," this writer says, "is that you cannot be a Madame Pompadour in a one-piece bathing suit, or a Cleopatra in a stiff little business suit, and neither can you be a boy—even an imitation one—in a real girl's frock."

How much the man is responsible for the temporary phase of masculinity that swept the post-war girlhood, it is difficult to say. One authority argues that women could not be expected to be women or even pretend to be clinging and semi-helpless when so many men are giving bad imitations of flappers. There is nothing to cling to and the work has to be done, and if women are getting sick of playing at being boys and men it is because so many of the male sex are lamentably incapable of playing the part, themselves.

"It is the effeminacy and incompetency of so many modern men that is creating seventy-five per cent of the so-called masculinity among women," says our authority. "Look about. See the number of women who are the best 'men' of their families—the number of women who are looked to by their families to keep them going."

Those who have been the best "men" will tell you that it is a weary, rending business that would be left quickly enough to men if they were fit to shoulder the burden. Being woman, it is impossible not to let the head drop wearily into the hands and pray that the burden be lifted.

The TRIBUNE COOK BOOK

The Cook, with Her Cookies, Is Imitating the Fruit Trees in Giving Us Sweet Food Pieces to Eat Out of Hand.

All recipes have been scientifically tested by Miss Eddington with current market materials and are endorsed by her.

By Jane Eddington

A COOKIE is a convenient and diverting dainty. How could the old eggnogg makers have got on without it? Pleasant drinks of many sorts, and ices and cheeses, are enhanced by a little sweet piece as a companion. And when cookies are freshly made they have an alluring aroma, a delicious flavor, and other gratifying qualities which they usually do not have when they have aged, but there are exceptions—fruit cookies, like fruit cakes, may require ripening. But the pleasant sweet smell and taste of a freshly baked sugar cookie should yield impetus to drive one to make them at home. How to begin? We are about, and below, to suggest the sour cream drop cookie as a starting point.

But the making of drop cookies is no great help to one who would make rolled out dough cookies, though just as good experience can be got in baking drop cookies as in baking rolled cookies, and, since the baking of cookies may make such a difference in the quality of these sweet bits, a good experience with dropped cookies is not to be despised.

Yet we must remember that a good cookie recipe, whether for dropped or rolled cookies, is but a starting point. Extremely poor cookies may be the finish. And when the recipe is poor, what can be done? It is too bad that there are a confusing number of cookie recipes to be found—fine, good, bad, and indifferent. Even an inexperienced cook might feel baffled when she started out for new experience unless she gritted her teeth and put all her wits to work.

To Make Cookies Soft.

Thin and crisp cookies have their place, but so do those which are soft and thick. The thin sort come from expert rolling and baking. Most people get cookies half way between these two.

To get the soft and somewhat thick cookies the dough must be worked as little as possible, patted out, and not rolled thin. The softest cookies can never be secured by taking the scraps from one cutting, even when these are molded with a fresh ball of dough, as is often done.

How to Get a Dough.

A famous cookie maker once wrote me that she thought she had an infallible rule for getting her dough of the right consistency. She stirred flour in until the dough was quite thick; then she used an ordinary dinner knife and cut in flour until the dough would not stick when she pressed down upon it. Then she let the dough stand in a cold place over night, but not in a refrigerator. A cold and dry room is better when the dough stands and slowly stiffens, but ice can be used for quick work—on ice. This rule seems to me to be helpful, but there are other ways yet.

This rule went along with the statement that the author of it had just made eleven different batches of cookies for Christmas gifts—1,600 cookies in all. And the eleven batches did not at all represent her variety, for she had collected many cutters and forms and she decorated the tops of her cookies in the most various ways so as to make them not only attractive to look at but to vary in flavor or taste.

Substitutes for Doughs.

The inexperienced cook who has not learned to make and roll a cookie dough can use a drop cookie batter with a bit more flour; make this up into a roll, chill it, and then cut slices from it to bake. Such cookies are also made from chilled doughs and have names like "ice box cookies" and "sausage cookies."

To get a dough that will roll out as thin as a wafer and then to roll it requires skill and experience of somewhat the same sort as pie crust making. One who wishes to excel in either or both of these expertnesses can gain skill for one when she works with the other.

On Baking Cookies.

Some doughs and batters will stand more heat than others, and the amount of butter used influences this matter. An experiment has recently been going on in this vicinity with one single batter given many environments and various additions. When it was a drop batter and cooked on an ascending heat the cookies were thick. When it was baked on a descending heat they were thin.

The maker, who gave them much loving attention and thought, was amazed at her results, thinking it was extraordinary that blood sisters, as she called them, should vary so much in appearance. Then she went on and made other members of her final family with many "in-laws." As she cooked them she hovered near the oven much of the time. The cooking time is rather brief for cookies, and she could see through the glass door, helped by a flash light, what the heat was doing to her prodigies and she enjoyed seeing. You see, cookie making can be recommended as a fine diversion, if approached unnervously and with curiosity and ambition.

Sour Cream Cookies.

To call a cookie a sour cream cookie is not to be at all specific, for there can be found many formulas with this name and with directions for cookies in which one of the ingredients is sour cream. In some, brown sugar is used. Most of them have eggs, but we can get good effects without them. Sometimes graham flour is used instead of white, and there are barley cookies, also. Fruit and chocolate and seeds, like caraway, are also made with sour cream.

Sour Cream Recipe.

The base for many variations made as described above "On Baking Cookies" was the following:

One-half cup of sour cream, one-half cup sugar, one cup flour, one-third teaspoon soda, one-half teaspoon salt, one-fourth teaspoon nutmeg. Whip the cream until it is smooth. Save out half a teaspoon of it in which to dissolve soda and beat into it one-half cup of sugar, the salt and nutmeg. Before adding the flour to this mixture sift it twice, and mix it in a little at a time, getting finally a stiff dough into which mix the dissolved soda.

Take up teaspoons of the dough and drop them on a buttered and floured tin. Bake them from ten to twelve minutes on either an ascending or descending temperature, according to what you want. Hot ovens do one thing to cookies and cooler ones another.

Experiments.

First the above drop batter was experimented with. Some drops of it baked on a descending temperature, starting with 400 degrees and rapidly descending to 350, being spread out with a wet spoon first could be rolled while they were hot. Some which were baked on an ascending temperature starting at 325 ran together and were like a thin tea cake. Five different kinds of hermitlike cookies were secured with this sort of batter, thickened up only as much as the flour used on raisins and fruit would do so, but a rather generous amount was used—four tablespoons to the above with four tablespoons of chopped raisins and four of chopped walnuts.

Then, to one part of the fruited batter, a little clove and cinnamon, melted butter and brown sugar were added, and to another part some molasses and a teaspoon of pulverized coffee. The total number of changes were enough to be confusing, but they did not show how the batter could be pleasantly varied by quite slight effort.

Finally, one of the fruited batters, thickened, was formed into a roll, chilled for an hour, then cut across with a silver fruit knife dipped in hot water. The thin slices, when baked, were cookie shaped, although the experiment was tried of perfecting the shape with fingers wet in cold water.

Sugar Cookie Dough.

The following recipe yields a high grade cookie, or a base that is excellent to use when many forms are to be made with different cutters and many varieties secured by different icings and garnishes. It requires quick skill in massing the dough to make it sufficiently compact. Squeeze it hard if you cannot get it right, but only for once or twice: Two egg yolks, one and one-fourth cups of flour, three-eighths cup of butter, one-fourth cup sugar, flavor to suit. Combine the egg yolks, flour, butter and sugar, and work the whole as a pie crust is worked or mixed, then when the whole can be massed into a dough of uniform consistency, knead it for fifteen minutes, or until it is rather shining and stretchy. (This is a German way, and the formula is German and excellent.)

Next, put it away, covered up in a cool place for half an hour, then roll out in a thin and even shape, on a board into which flour has been rubbed to smoothness.

Finally, cut out cookies in a pleasing variety of shapes, and garnish variously, or bake the cookies and then ice them. Unless exceedingly thin, these can be baked in an oven as hot as 375 degrees. Remember there is more or less loss of heat in opening the oven.

Cookie Shapes.

With a nice dough like the above a cookie cutter which will give a fleur-de-lis shape will give a chance for some "dressy" effects. Put icing where the conventional band is and also some on the tips. Stars are also attractive, and colored icings can be used with great effect on such cookies, as they cannot on the thinnest of all cookies.

Sweet Graham Wafers.

The following recipe for an excellent little thing is repeated after a rather long rest, partly because an amateur cook can get good results with it: One half cup of sour cream, one-half cup of granulated sugar, one cup or one cup and about two tablespoons more of graham flour, measured after sifting it once; one-half teaspoon salt, one-half teaspoon soda, white flour to handle or knead with. Beat up cream in mixing bowl, beat in soda or dissolve it last, as in sour cream cookie recipe, add sugar, salt, and flour and stir to a stiff dough.

Put the white flour on to a bread board and rub it smooth, having made the dough into a ball, roll it thin, then cut it into strips and these into domino sized pieces or oblongs three inches long and less than an inch wide. Or cut it into round about two inches in diameter. Prick with a fork before baking. These are best if sprinkled with sugar before they are baked. Bake in a slow oven until they are crisp, but not greatly browned.

Sick Stomach Teaches Her a Good Lesson

The Strange Adventures of Young Robinson Grewso

By KEMBLE

He called him Robin, his dad called him Son;
He grew like a weed and thought it great fun,
As he called himself Robinson Grewso.

ROBIN and his pals were tickled pink over the way "Yap" had scared the Cannibal King and Queen out of the cabin. He was certainly some dog.

"Yes, sah," chimed in Chocolate Sundae, "dat ole Kiyi knows more dan most folks. I'se knowed him ever since he come on dis island. Why, when Robin, he used ter bury all de scraps what he kin find and inside of eight months small bushes would be growing up an' hangin' on each little limb would be de nicest, fat, juicy steak or meat yer ever tasted."

Everybody laughed at Sundae and told him he was spoofing, but the little tar baby stuck to his story. "All right, you laugh at me. Jis git him outer dis ole bones an' see what's gwine happen."

"Why not give him a pie and let him bury it?" chuckled Chin-Chin. "Maybe it'll grow some pieplant," and the cook giggled and sputtered at his own joke.

"Talking about pies," chimed in Bunny, "I'm just plain hungry. There's that hot bread you were going to bake for us, Sundae?"

The little black cook batted his eyes. "Goodness gracious," he exclaimed, "I most done forgot it. It must be done and ready to bake by dis time."

Then he beat it out for the outdoor kitchen where the huge mess of dough was already bulging over the edges of the big pan. Soon it was freer, way clear of the pan, and as it rose deftly Sundae made a flying leap and wrapped his arms around the huge mass.

"Help! Help!" he called in a frightened voice. "Come quick, everybody." But before Robin and his pals could reach the spot the unbaked bread was borne ten feet above them with Sundae hanging on for dear life.

'Round and round in circles darted the swelling ball. Higher and higher it rose. Chin-Chin started in pursuit, but his stubby wings could make no headway and he tumbled back to the earth.

"Call it Yeaster Sundae."

"It's carrying him out to sea," shouted Roy. "Man the boat and start after him!"

All was turmoil now, the sail was hoisted and out shot the little craft. High in the air sailed Sundae, over the rough waters of the lake.

Sweet Marie wept and wrung her hands. "I told him not to put in so much yeast, but he wouldn't mind me."

And now a new terror was looming up through the darkening clouds. The old airplane bird was making for the big dough ball with its precious freight.

On shot the boat, sailing beneath the frightened tar baby and his big balloon.

With a sudden nose dive the old bird scared friend. Soon he had him safely on board, but the old airplane bird, her head covered with a huge mass of dough, came down "kerplunk" into the lake, and there she floated.

"Now, stay there," yelled Robin, "and give the fish a treat."

One by one the fishes, large and small, began nibbling at the unbaked bread, and they, too, began to rise and skim over the crest of the waves.

"I know a good name for this day," giggled Bunny, "Let's call it Yeaster Sundae."

Young Margaret was busy scribbling and her mother inquired what she was doing.

"I'm writing a letter to Edna," she answered. (Edna is her 4 year old cousin.)

"You can't write," her mother commented.

"Well, Edna can't read," was Margaret's retort. A. W.

Little Jimmy usually eats Sunday dinner with his grandfather. We were having chicken at home and as Jimmy is fond of it he called his grandfather to say he wouldn't be there.

His grandfather chided him saying, "All right for you, Jimmy, you don't like what I like."

Jimmy, not wanting to hurt him, thought a minute and said, "Well, grandfather, I like your dravy, but I des love chicken." J. R.

The Cheekiest Person I Ever Met

Her Only Thanks.

Last summer a classmate of mine had a week's vacation between jobs. She had either to pay her way while in town or stay with me. She chose the latter. I was glad to have her and tried to make her visit in my home as pleasant as possible.

Several months later a pouring rain made it necessary for me to stay at the college during the noon hour. She insisted upon my eating lunch at the dormitory with her. Pleased with this thoughtfulness, I accepted her invitation, but when the waiter brought the bill, placing it between us, my friend graciously showed me how to fill in the blank and I realized I was a paying guest. G. C. G.

Showing Her the Town.

A young man, who was a mere acquaintance of mine, called me up one night and asked for my mother. He said her if he could use her auto to take some friends of his from the train. Mother consented although she only knew the man, having seen him once in her life.

After keeping the car for two days, he found he had parked in front of the house. By that time I was so upset I called him up for an explanation. He said his friend wanted to see the sights of the city so he used the car until the gas was low and then returned it. S. S. B.

Self-Invited Guest.

We live on the outskirts of a small village. The cheekiest person around here is a woman who brings her sewing and mending over to my house every day, because she says it costs too much to keep up a fire all day while her husband is away from home.

As he is often gone all week, it is not pleasant nor convenient for me to have her, as she stays for lunch and frequently for supper, too. We ask her, of course, when we sit down to meals, and she always stays.

If I have to be away from home, she says sweetly, "I'll keep up the fires for you and get the lunch." L. W. K.

Enough to Make One Cynical.

While coming upstairs I noticed something dark on a stair step. I stooped to see what it was. To my amazement I found it to be a two dollar bill.

Being a rooming house, I immediately took it down to the landlady. She stared at me and remarked, "Where is the other one? I had 2 two dollar bills, and I certainly dropped both in the same place."

I didn't even get "Thank you," for my honesty. M. M.

Pattern Borrower.

A neighbor of mine is a woman who has plenty of cheek. I have a little girl, 12, and she has one of about the same age. I never buy a pattern for a dress for my daughter but she asks for it so she can make her girl a dress exactly like the one I make.

She has not bought a single pattern since I have known her, and that is about three years. L. D. C.

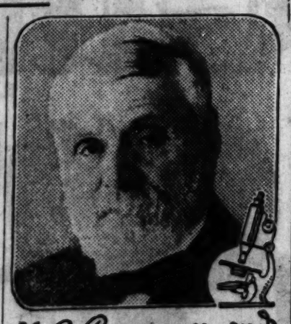
Prescription He Wrote in 1892 is the World's Most Popular Laxative

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as they are today. People lived normal, active lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air and sunshine. But even that early there were basic physics and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings to put into their system. So he made a prescription for a laxative to be used by his patients.

The prescription for constipation which he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores, in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable laxative intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just a mild, safe, gentle bowel stimulant as Syrup Pepsin.

Under successful management this prescription has proven its worth and become the largest selling liquid laxative in the world. The fact that millions of bottles are used a year proves that it has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from constipation, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds and fevers.

Millions of families are now never without Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and if you will once start using it you will always have a bottle handy for emergencies.



Dr. W. B. Caldwell M.D.
AT AGE 83

It is particularly pleasing to know that the most of it is bought by mothers for themselves and the children, though Syrup Pepsin is just as valuable for elderly people. All drug stores have the generous bottles.

We would be glad to have you prove at our expense how much Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can mean to you and yours. Just write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, and we will send you prepaid a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE.

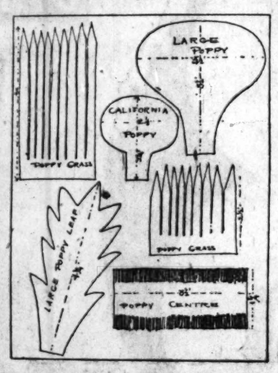
Practical and Fancy Needle Work
By Clotilde

These Artificial Poppies Make Gay Decorations for a Party.

What is your sewing problem? Do you have trouble in following a pattern? Do you find difficulty in making a skirt hang evenly or making a sleeve that doesn't twist? If there is anything you would like to know about these or other problems of needlework, write to Clotilde, The Tribune, Chicago, inclosing a stamped addressed envelope, if a personal reply is desired.



GREEN, black and the colors you wish to use for the poppies will be needed for these very natural and lovely flowers. Fine wire is also necessary.

After the green and black strips of paper are cut making them 1½ inches long, fold them together and cut to form a fine fringe. Roll them between the palms, hold in the right hand and press the ends into the palm of the left hand, thus curling the ends. Then unroll the fringe.

If a ball center is preferred, make a small ball of paper, putting the fringe around it. Ready made poppy stamens may be used, if preferred.

Gather a piece of double fringe four or five inches long; fasten with wire in the center. Cut four petals for each flower, and flute the top edge and make cup shape with thumb and forefinger. Arrange the petals around the center, space evenly and wind tightly with wire. Then fasten to a piece of rather stiff wire for the stem.

Cut one-half inch wide strips of green paper and wind over the wire stem, folding in two leaves.

Waxing Flowers—To one pound of paraffin use 10 cents' worth of spermaceti and 10 cents' worth of white wax. Put the ingredients in a deep saucepan and heat until it is all melted. Remove from the fire and let cool to about 98 degrees.

Slip the complete flower into the liquid quickly, shake off the surplus paraffin and reshape the petals, if necessary. Make three dippings and then let cool. These flowers will keep in the warmest weather and may be washed by dipping in a deep pan of lukewarm water in which a little suds of some pure white soap has been made.

HINTS TO THE BUSINESS GIRL

by Antoinette Donnelly

She Needs Her Energy and Her Good Looks, and Here Are Ways of Keeping Them

NEW YORK. — [Special Correspondence.]—An enterprising investigator discloses the interesting fact that the average school girl hikes eleven and a half miles in a day about her work and play.

From school she ventures into business, and while we have not the investigators word for it, we have reason to believe that the average working girl engaged in sedentary office work does not get one-half of that amount of daily exercise.

Proof of her lack of muscular activity, once she becomes a breadwinner, and of lack of the observance of other good health rules, you see in the gradual dissipation of the "bloom" with which she started downtown that first eventful morning.

The day of a working woman has its limitations. There is no gainsaying the fact. The old freedom is no longer hers. But the job of maintaining her health and efficiency is. So, some compromise must be made with conditions as they are.

The Industrial Hygiene bulletin of the New York State department of labor details a health program that does recognize the limitations of the working girl's time and resources. A digest of the rules outlined follow:

Food. Eat regularly, slowly and chew your food thoroughly. Eat a varied diet, including plenty of fruit and vegetables, with meat only once a day. Drink two glasses of milk every day and very little tea and coffee. Do not eat many sweets. Avoid fried, greasy, and highly spiced foods. If you are more than ten pounds overweight, eat less starch, fats, and sugar. If you are more than ten pounds underweight, eat more at each meal, get more rest, and learn to relax. If you feel worried or nervous, eat less than usual.

Water: Drink six or eight glasses of water a day. Drink a glass on rising in the morning. Drink water with your meals, but do not use it to wash down food insufficiently chewed. Cool water is better than iced.

Clothing: Do not dress too warmly indoors. Wrap up when going outdoors. Wear comfortable shoes to work. Do not wear a corset or brassiere that pushes the abdomen down. Do not wear rubber garments to reduce.

Fresh air: Keep the windows open in your home all the year round. The room temperature should be 68 F. in the daytime and 50 F. at night. Try to stay outdoors at least an hour and a half every day. Get outdoors at the lunch hour and walk to and from work. Spend your day off outdoors, as often as possible.

Recreation: Vary your recreation with outdoor exercises, such as skating, tennis, hiking. Dancing is healthful, if not overdone. Do not go to the movies too often, especially if your work is sedentary. Movies mean poor air, no exercise, late hours. Go to a gymnasium or swimming pool if there is one near.

Bathing: Take a warm bath every day and follow it with a cold spray to help prevent colds.

Sleep: Sleep at least eight hours every night with the windows open, using plenty of blankets in cold weather to avoid being chilled. If you do not sleep well, consult your doctor.

Teeth: Brush the teeth in the morning and before going to bed. Keep them in good repair.

Menstruation: Painful menstruation can often be prevented by keeping the bowels regular and by taking plenty of fresh air and exercise. Continue your normal exercise and the warm tub bath and get more sleep than usual during this period.

Constipation: Eat plenty of fruit and vegetables and coarse foods, such as bran, whole wheat bread and brown rice.

Cold: Follow the rules for fresh air, food, exercise, clothing and bathing and you will not usually take cold.

Headache: Constipation and eye-strain most frequently cause headache. Find out the cause and remove it permanently. Do not take powders and medicine of any kind.

Happiness Helps.

Try to get fun out of your work and the satisfaction that comes with trying to do your work well. Few things contribute so much to good health and a sense of well being.

In a recent report of an insurance company it was noted that the physique of the working girl was slowly undergoing a change for the worse. Wrong food, bad posture and lack of exercise were given as the outstanding reasons for the change and for reduction in efficiency of a number of young women after they had followed the bad habits for several years.

Food is the difficult problem of the breadwinner, particularly of the younger woman whose salary is not sufficient to meet the average restaurant demand. Fortunately, those organizations employing large numbers of workers recognize the efficiency value to them of a well cooked, well planned, nourishing luncheon. It is on her noonday meals that the average worker, for reasons of economy or haste, or a combination of both, does neglect this important phase of health building.

The perfect luncheon place for the worker is amid quiet, restful surroundings, but this ideal spot is difficult to find unless one's luncheon bill is not a matter of concern. To the average young worker the amount she spends for food at noon is a serious matter.

I would suggest that the day start with a good breakfast. In fact, I plead for this, knowing how many young women neglect to eat a nourishing meal in the morning. Some I know are foolish enough to do it as a reducing measure; others because they will not arise a few minutes earlier and give themselves sufficient time for the morning meal; others again because they have cultivated the habit of a light breakfast. My theory is that if a girl will take a good meal in the morning and another at night, her noonday meal and its expense can be considerably lightened without serious consequences.

Eat a Hearty Breakfast.

Coffee and a prepared breakfast food and a bakeshop roll or doughnuts are not a good breakfast. The period of longest fast, from six or seven the night before, makes better breakfasts imperative. Fruit should never be omitted from the morning meal. Apples, oranges, grapefruit, grapes, bananas, pears, pineapple are all desirable first foods of the day. A cereal with cream should follow, egg, or crisp bacon or both are recommended and buttered rolls or toast, with sufficient time to consume the meal slowly. Coffee, particularly, should not be gulped down hot. Hot pancakes and waffles smothered under syrup or honey have none too good an effect on the digestive tract. They are all right occasionally, but not frequently.

The dinner at night should have a salad made of fresh fruits or vegetables, in addition to the usual meat, potato and separately served vegetable.

Milk is a protective and a rebuilding food and it is also a "stay with you" food. Take milk, then, with your luncheon.

The rules laid down by the state department of labor for the working girl are simple, sane and of inestimable value, not only in health upkeep but in the interests of pure physical attractiveness. And while an occasional male employer will go on record as never intending to hire another pretty girl, most business men will frankly admit their preference for the good looking one. He demands not a professional beauty, but the type of girl who pleases with the sheer vibrancy of health and youth, a quality sustained only through attention to the items of hygiene outlined in the rules above.

THE HOME HARMONIOUS

This room is furnished with cleverly renovated castoffs.

The Guest Room Need Not Be Expensively or Elaborately Furnished in Order to Be Hospitable and Charming

Phyllis Marsh will be glad to assist the homemaker in any problems pertaining to home building and home furnishing. Address your letter to Phyllis Marsh, The Tribune, Chicago. Inclose stamped addressed envelope for personal reply.

By Phyllis Marsh

THERE is always a distinctly hospitable and delightfully charming atmosphere about the guest chamber that has been carefully furnished and decorated. The room need not be elaborately or expensively done in order to achieve the desired effect. It simply requires a little thought and care on the part of the home decorator.

In the first place a guest chamber should be so arranged in its decorative scheme that any one may enjoy occupying it. Few are the men who would enjoy a prolonged visit with a family who had nothing but a "frilly" taffeta adorned bedroom to offer them. The same thought holds true of the women who favor "frilliness." They would not be exactly happy in a room displaying much that was severely plain or masculine in decorative treatment. So it behooves the home decorator to bear these facts in mind and plan the guest chamber accordingly.

In any event, simplicity should be the keynote of the room, whether it is to display printed or plain fabrics, or furniture in the natural wood finish or enameled. For the family which is in the habit of entertaining guests for extended periods of time, it is advisable to furnish the room in somewhat the bed-sitting room style, where the guest is privileged at any time to retire in order to read, write letters, or sew.

If there is more than one guest chamber in the home and the room is small, a single or three-quarter sized bed may be selected. But if there is only one guest chamber and that of generous size, twin beds should be the choice. Keeping in mind that the room is to bear some resemblance to a sitting room, a large chiffonier or chest of drawers and a dresser with the mirror separate should be the choice.

Then there should be either a small secretary type of writing desk or a small oblong one drawer table over which could hang a good sized book shelf, which could substitute for the desk. A straight backed chair should accompany this group, as well as a small waste basket.

In another convenient corner of the room should be placed an "easy" overstuffed chair, possibly boasting a slip-cover of chintz or cretonne. Next to it should be a reading table upon which there is ample room for a few books, magazines, and a simple type of parchment shaded reading lamp. A comfortable little footstool or an old fashioned hassock would not be amiss if placed in front of the "easy" chair.

At the side of the single bed or between the twin beds is the place for the usual convenient night stand and lamp. If there is sufficient space in the room it is always convenient to have a chaise longue comfortably placed.

Last, but not least, there should be a slipper chair placed in a suitable corner of the room and also a three or four paneled decorative screen, which always serves well when ventilating a room to break direct drafts.

Pictures in the form of colored prints, etchings, or simple water color landscapes of a type to be sufficiently interesting to any one should adorn the walls of every guest chamber. Unless the walls are covered with an elaborately designed paper, there is always a place on them for pictures of one kind or another. Colorful wall hangings also serve their purpose in a decorative manner quite as effectively as pictures, although the use of more than two hangings in any room is not advisable. India prints, cretonnes, chintzes, toiles de Jouy, and many of the colorful prints emulating the famous Sardinian embroideries now so much in vogue make ideal wall hangings for any bedroom.

Probably the one thing which interests the average home decorator more than any other one thing pertaining to the guest chamber is the bedspread and the draperies. What material to select and the style in which they should be made are always of interest to those who sew. With a world of fabrics of every conceivable description to select from, there only remains the character of the room to decide the proper choice to be made. The room of simple, unassuming furnishings calls for fabrics of like nature, and under this heading come many of varied type, such as cretonne, chintz, hand-blocked linen, toile de Jouy, calico prints, rayon and cotton taffeta, striped and also checked prints and crashes, etc.

The bedroom of more than simple character, but hardly of the sumptuous type, calls for such fabrics as silk rep, silk poplin, moire, and similar materials, while the room of extremely sumptuous style may be arrayed in silk damasks or taffeta, or brocaded taffeta, or satin.

Cleverly renovated "cast-offs" in the form of furniture was the inspiration for the guest chamber described and illustrated today. To begin with, the room is of northeast exposure, so, in order to make it appear cheerful, pleasant and inviting, the color scheme decided upon was cedar, green and gold. The room is of average size, being 11x13 feet, so only those pieces of furniture necessary to the comfort of the guest were chosen.

A simple type of walnut finished metal bed in a single width size is placed between two doors. A small night stand in walnut finish has been placed close to the head of the bed and displays a small pottery lamp topped with a plaited glazed chintz shade in tones of gold and green. On the opposite wall [north], between two windows, is a resurrected old fashioned chiffonier. The attached mirror was removed and hung above it on separate cords. Since the finish was golden oak and rather badly marred, it was decided that it should be enameled and in a brown as nearly like the bed as possible. The trimmings in it consist of hairline stripes and wooden knobs done in gold enamel to give it character. It is adorned with two brass candlesticks at each end, between which is placed an inexpensive paper covered box.

A small oblong one-drawer table flanks the west wall and has been converted into a dressing table and was enameled to match the chiffonier. Over it hangs a plainly framed long, narrow mirror, the upper part of which is a little colored print. A chintz dresser cover and a parchment shaded glass lamp are all that grace the table top.

In front of it is a high, ladder-backed chair. The one window on the east wall is centered and to the right is a four paneled, chintz covered screen, in front of which is a comfortable slipper chair in a slip cover of a cotton striped fabric. Just in front of the window is a dropleaf gum-wood table in walnut finish so arranged that it may be used for either reading or writing purposes. To the left of the table is a generously proportioned barrel chair, upholstered in a green denim and having a pillow of cedar colored rep.

A wrought iron floor lamp with parchment colored paper shade and a tiny end table and waste paper basket complete the interesting corner group.

The floor is covered here and there with oval shaped wool fiber rugs in imitation of braided rugs, and the walls are done in a paper of creamy tone, while the long draperies are of a striped rayon taffeta in gold, green and cedar tones. Topping the windows are narrow shaped lambrequins of the same material.

The spread is also of the same material and made perfectly plain and merely corded where it is seamed on both sides.

A FRIEND IN NEED

by Sally Joy Brown

A LITTLE AID OFTEN GOES A LONG WAY.

I want to be the medium through which the friends in deed and the friends in need may be brought together. It may be you have some discarded article which has not outgrown its usefulness that will make some less fortunate one happy and you would gladly give it if you knew how to go about it. Write to me and I shall be happy to be of service to you. Please write on one side of the paper.

When information is wanted by mail, a stamped, addressed envelope should accompany the request. Please do not send article to The Tribune but write for the address of the applicant and send direct.

WOULD you like to see what the gifts we are giving through this department really accomplish for many of the families receiving them?

Then you will be interested in this case. Several weeks ago the husband and father came home from seven weeks of sickness in the County hospital, to try to get another start. But his clothes were so shabby, and with all the expenses of his illness he could not afford to buy new ones. Worse than that, his wife was expecting a baby within two months—and they were about to be evicted from the furnished room they had been occupying. Both were in despair, when we heard of their plight through a neighbor, and published a request for help.

That was their situation several weeks ago. The following letter tells how their prospects changed, and how the change was brought about.

"Dear Sally Joy Brown: It is hard to come down to earth, and that is why I haven't written before this to thank you and all the others. But don't think we were not grateful, for I truly think my life was saved.

"The first we knew about it was when we had word from you that some one had offered us a room for a week or two until we got straightened around. My husband and I didn't quite know what to make of it—but we knew we weren't going to be in the street, and that was wonderful.

"Late that afternoon a man called and left a fine blue suit, in fact a complete outfit, hat, shoes, and all, for my husband—and it put new courage into both of us, for we felt it would be much easier for him to get work if he looked presentable. He didn't get work the next day, but he did by the end of the week and then how happy we were! It was like being saved when we were drowning.

"Now we have a room of our own that we can pay for. My husband is making enough to pay for food and rent, with a little more, and we'll make it go farther soon, because we've been given some furniture and we can take unfurnished rooms, which will be cheaper. And I have received a lot of clothes for the baby and we are just bursting with happiness.

"You'll hear more from us soon, because we're going to be able in a short time to help somebody in the same wonderful way we have been helped—and we won't lose a minute letting you know when that time comes. MRS. N. B."

Doesn't that letter tell its own story? And simple gifts did it all. Weren't they worth while, when they did so much, and wouldn't you be happy to do the same for some of the others in need?

Not Prepared for Winter.

"My husband is tubercular and the dispensary has sent him to Texas for his health. I have two children and support them myself, but now winter is here I find I am not well prepared. I would be grateful for any warm blankets and any dresses and a coat, size 38 or 40, for myself and some things for the children. They are a boy, 5, and a girl, 8. MRS. L. B."

With the main support of the family snatched from them by the cruel tentacles of this disease, the rearing and support of her children becomes a discouraging problem for the mother. She is calling to you for help. Won't you do what you can?

Children Need Coats.

"I am asking for warm coats for two little girls, 9 and 10, who are rather small for their age. Their father had an operation recently and, while he is recovering, he is as yet able to work only a few days a week. He is deeply in debt, but is anxious to support his family. G. S. R."

Won't you help these children by sending them the coats your young daughters have outgrown? There's lots of cold weather ahead of us, and unless these youngsters have sufficient clothing their chances of keeping well are slim.

Unable to Lie Down.

"I have a sick husband who can't lie down day or night. Do you know of some one who has an old morris chair or any kind of a chair with a high and reclining back he could have?

"MRS. A. M."

This man's condition will not improve if he doesn't have the rest he needs. Have you the chair which will give him this comfort?

Sweater and Bathrobe Needed.

"I have a daughter, 21, in a tuberculosis sanitarium. She is badly in need of a woolen sweater and a bathrobe, size 36, and I am unable to buy them. Can you help me get them for her? Mrs. F. M."

It's hard enough to do without necessities when one is well. Just think how much worse it must be when disease has set in and these articles become even greater necessities. Help this mother, won't you, to help her daughter?

Family in Trouble.

"Last week a friend of mine came to me for assistance for her family. They come from a small mining town and the husband has been out of work for 9 months. My sister and I have been trying to house them and feed them, but our salaries are small and we have all we can do to keep ourselves. They are all in need of clothing, especially the children, for school. The girls are 12, 8 and 6 years of age, and the boy is 10. Their shoe sizes are 11, 11½, 7½, and 8. The mother wears size 36 and the father 42. Anything you may be able to do for them will be greatly appreciated. L. S."

This is just one of many letters we have about families where the father is out of work with no relief in sight. Perhaps the help you can give them will be the means of putting them on their feet again and relieving the family of the misery it is suffering.

Jealousy

We're all acquainted with jealousy, the monster that smashes love affairs, wrecks homes, causes business quarrels, and generally plays havoc with us mortals. We'd like to know your most notable experience with a jealous person or persons. If you have encountered a situation where jealousy led to a tragic or ridiculous climax, tell us about it. The Tribune will pay $1 for every story published. Address Jealous Editor, Chicago Tribune.

Rebuked.

When I was a young girl my father kept several riding and driving horses. For several years he had a young boy working in the stables, upon whom I usually called when I wanted my own horse harnessed or saddled.

Finally, the young fellow, then grown up, married, and soon after the wedding his wife sent me a note, asking me not to call her husband by his first name any more, "as it was not necessary." A. B. H.

He Wanted Notice.

Jimmy was 9, and jealous of his brother, Tommy, 11. One day Tommy came home with a black eye, the outcome of a fight to save a kitten from the destroying hands of a bad boy. Mother and father were worried—and proud, too, of their son's motive in fighting—and lavished attention and affection on him.

And little Jimmy felt he was forgotten and longed to be a hero himself. At last he could bear it no longer and hastened out to demand a black eye of the first street urchin he met. It was freely given, and a broken nose along with it. Poor little Jimmy got the attention he wanted—and more, for it was months before the nose, injured in a serious way, was healed. D. B.

Child Suffers.

A friend of mine had a little girl about 3 years old. She was fond of me and somehow got into the habit of calling me "mama," which I could see made her mother furious.

One day when I was visiting at her home the little one was even more persistent in calling me by that name than usual. The mother lost her temper and grabbing the poor little thing slapped her soundly. M. D.

Infant Care

Mothers, you can't start too early to establish a child's serene and tranquil disposition. Even an infant can have a happy, fretless state of uninterrupted health. What will help do this? A simple, purely vegetable product as old as you are: plain Castoria.

A few drops of Castoria will settle all uneasiness in a jiffy. Will dispel colic or ward off constipation; and just as surely check diarrhea.

In real sickness, call a physician. But many physicians urge only Castoria for those little childish disorders that need nothing more. You need never be afraid to give pure Castoria. It is safe and perfectly harmless, for it contains no paregoric, no opiates, no dope of any kind. At least, this is true of the genuine Fletcher's Castoria*—and that is the kind doctors tell you always to buy.

Fletcher's Castoria is fine for any child. All children love to take it. Delicious tasting, and as good as it tastes. Just look for the Fletcher signature on the package and you will know you have the genuine and pure Castoria.

*SPECIAL NOTE: With every bottle of genuine Fletcher's Castoria is wrapped a book on "Care and Feeding of Babies" worth its weight in gold to every mother or prospective mother.

Strange Weddings

Have you ever seen a wedding so outlandish that it upset all your ideas of the traditional ceremony? Some marriages are foreign and quaint in their adherence to ancient customs; others are ultra modern in their haphazard speed and unconventionality. The Tribune would like to know the story of the strangest wedding you've ever seen. We will pay $1 for every letter published. Address Strange Weddings, Chicago Tribune.

All Wet.

It was to be a garden wedding. The day had been perfect until one-half hour before the ceremony was to take place when clouds quickly gathered.

At the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march the attendants started toward the altar in the garden and at the same time a light rain began to fall. As the bride, leaning on her father's arm, appeared coming down the steps, it rained even harder and they sought shelter under a tree near by.

The guests scattered for their wraps and umbrellas. But the procession having been started, the bride wanted to continue. So they walked up to the altar under an umbrella, all the attendants with umbrellas and guests standing in groups under trees and the rain simply pouring down.

It sure was the wettest wedding I ever attended. F. L. J.

Loaded with Bills.

We live in a section where there are a great many foreigners. They usually get married on Saturday and the bride always wears white with a long veil. A reception is always held in the church hall and every one is invited. Lunch is served to all those present.

In the evening the men try to break a plate with silver. If they succeed they dance with the bride and either put the silver money in a basket or pin bills on her veil.

Before the evening is over the bride has fives, tens and twenties pinned all over her veil. She is exhausted, but has as high as $500 or $600 pinned on her. Sometimes the veil is so full that they pin money on her dress. The highest amount I know of one bride getting was $850. C. W.

MOTHER

Cross, Feverish Child Needs this Harmless Laxative

Every mother realizes, after giving her children "California Fig Syrup," that this is their ideal laxative, because they love its pleasant taste and it thoroughly cleanses the tender little stomach, liver and bowels without griping.

When cross, irritable, feverish, or breath is bad, stomach sour, look at the tongue, mother! If coated, give a teaspoonful of this harmless, "fruity laxative," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. When the little system is full of cold, throat sore, has stomach-ache, diarrhea, indigestion, colic—remember, a good "inside cleansing" should always be the first treatment given.

Millions of mothers keep "California Fig Syrup" handy; they know a teaspoonful today saves a sick child tomorrow. Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Fig Syrup," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups printed on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here, so don't be fooled. Get the genuine, made by "California Fig Syrup Company."

FOLKS WHO GET INTO THE LIMELIGHT SIDEWISE

A Handful of Obscure Celebrities Who Bask in Reflected Glory

Did You Ever Hear of Father Machree or Mr. Corson?

By Genevieve Forbes Herrick.

NEXT to Father Machree, Lyle Womack is today probably the most widely known obscurity in the world; also the most obscure celebrity.

Fame has given him an oblique glory. Fame has touched him, but from a tangent. The white light of publicity has been upon him, but only so long as he basked in the glamorous, dazzling radiance of his wife, Ruth Elder.

Nobody knows just what Father Machree did to amuse himself while his wife, with Mother Machree, was being sung to and about by all the balladeers of these many decades. But everybody knows what Womack has been doing these last few weeks while the world has been placing its crown of laurels on the brow of his famous wife, the girl who almost flew the Atlantic. He has been doing exactly nothing.

THE ANSWER IS "NO"

If there were few little odd jobs for him sitting behind the palms in the lobby of smart hotels, killing time for him while his wife occupied the throne chair at the center of the speaker's table in the big ballroom across the hall. Or elbowing policemen so that he might get within whispering distance of Miss Elder. What he wanted to whisper was that she stop flying and come back home. The answer was "No."

But Lyle Womack is not alone in his plight. Nor is the more or less imaginary Father Machree its only other member. The world is so full of a number of things, I am sure Mr. Womack will find many other echoes, and shadows, and human tangents to keep him company. Sometimes it is the woman who is the carbon copy; sometimes it is the man. Now and then it is a mother, a father, a brother, or a daughter.

"Who's Who" doesn't give special family rates.

For instance, in the important red book we find, under the initial "C," this entry:

"COOGAN, Jackie; actor; b. Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 24, 1914; s. John Henry and Lillian [Dolliver] C."

There is no separate heading for Papa John Henry nor for Mother Lillian Dolliver. Once an actor himself, and the one who carried young Jackie, an infant of 16 months, onto the stage for his debut, Mr. Coogan, père, now goes through life identified as Jackie Coogan's father. Even the presence of a fat wad of bills from the 13 year old star may not be an entirely satisfactory psychological solace. Or it may be.

But there is some one even more akin to Lyle Womack than Mr. and Mrs. Coogan.

Did you ever hear of Clemington Corson? He is the husband of the first mother to swim the English channel.

Beyond that his chances for publicity are slim. Even his picture is catalogued under his wife's name. In the bulky envelope in THE TRIBUNE morgue which houses his wife's clippings and photographs (and, by the way, she is known most frequently as Mlle. Gade, or Mlle. Gade Corson) we at last found a domestic picture. Mrs. Corson was seated, holding her two children, Sonny and Sister. Mr. Corson was standing, in the background. His left hand was extended to keep Sonny from falling. There were such deep wrinkles in his forehead.

Buried deep down in a two column story we at last found the information about Mrs. Corson's husband. Here it is: "Mrs. Corson was Danish born, but is naturalized, and the wife of an American New Yorker."

Sometimes, even in this day of feminism, it is the man who casts the shadow.

For example, you hear a lot of former Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis; but there is hardly a newspaper paragraph about Mrs. Landis.

Queen Victoria of Sweden rarely makes the front page, or the back page. She did break into the news about a year ago, but it was when she was very ill. Her husband, the genial King Gustaf, has his name and fame cabled across the Atlantic frequently. And there are pictures of him, pictures of him riding, of him about to play tennis, of him playing tennis, of him having played tennis.

The most perfect example of self effacement is, well, now, who in the world would it be but Madame Mussolini? We never hear of her; we never see a picture of her. About the only time she gets a stickful of type is when the stork comes to her house. And then it's a safe bet that the headline will feature Il Duce, and the story will end with a casual mention that the "mother and child are doing well."

RED'S LITTLE BROTHER

Which leads to the speculation as to just what would happen to Il Duce, to his wife, and indeed, to all Italy, if one fine morning Madame Mussolini should decide to swim the English channel, or fly the Atlantic, or go in for interior decorating.

Fame can be fickle.

There was Gertrude Ederle, the first woman to swim the channel. She had a crowded hour of plaudits. Then Father Ederle began to edge into the picture, and to take the curtain calls. Now, so the story goes, he gets as much fun out of it as if he had smeared himself with grease and slipped into the waves for a record swim. His fame is oblique, but he clings to it as if it had come in a straight line.

With the Grange brothers it is different. Grange No. 2 is earning his fame, not resting on that of player No. 77. Nothing, for a long, long time at least, will take away from the glory of Harold ("Red") Grange, the Illini half back of a few years ago. But "Red's" younger brother, Garland, who played at end this year on the Orange and Blue team, is said to be coming right along. He started first in a dark semi-circle lighted only by the limelight that played about his big brother. Gradually he got some of the spot for himself.

COME IN BUNCHES

There is still another group of comrades for Lyle Womack and Father Machree. They come in bunches. Often their names are forgotten; but their classification remains as a tag of identification which lifts them above the heads of their fellow men and women.

In this department we have, for instance, the husbands of Peggy Joyce. And the wives of De Wolf Hopper.

Then there are the men who have been reported as engaged to marry Mary Landon Baker.

And those hundreds of girls and women and older women who have never forgotten they once danced with the Prince of Wales.

And then, once in a blue moon, comes along a couple whose fame is so neatly and so nicely balanced that it forms an equation. Take the Coolidges.

He is the President of the United States.

But she has that smile.

A SLEUTH AND A MYSTERY COFFIN

Another True Story of the Master Detectives of Scotland Yard

A "Dead Man's" Joke Is Turned Upon Himself

By George Dilnot.

SO FAR every step that had been taken to solve the affair only added to its complexity. A crime of some sort—it might be a mere insurance fraud, it might be something much worse—had been committed, but it was not easy to visualize a solution that would fit all the circumstances. There were gaps which it was difficult to fill in.

For instance, between the time that "Roberti" had arrived in England, and the time that "Bernardi" had shown up at Plaistow there was a hiatus. If the detective could find out where Douat—if it was Douat—had spent that time, he might find a key.

Druscovich spent days in exploring hotels and lodging houses where a newly arrived provincial Frenchman, anxious not to be too conspicuous, might have put up in London. At last he stumbled on a little hotel, handy to the Strand, where the staff remembered a jolly, fat Frenchman who had registered himself as Roberti. A comparison of dates was convincing evidence, if any more was needed, that here was the place which Douat had made his first retreat.

He undertook to see the body in the coffin and to screw down the long box.

THE VERBOSE WAITER

There was one French waiter in the establishment and Druscovich calculated this was the man most likely to know any details concerning the stranger. He ordered a bottle of wine and engaged the waiter in amicable conversation. Among his other accomplishments Druscovich spoke French like a native. The waiter, stimulated by a glass of Burgundy, was easily led to discuss Bernardi.

"A complaisant gentleman," was his verdict. "He made me little trouble and he frequently did me the honor, like m'sieu, of inviting me to share a glass of wine. We talked much together—for he rarely left the hotel—and as we were compatriots it was but natural."

Druscovich looked over the edge of his glass. "Do you happen to know what he came to London for?"

"But surely. He was a traveler in wines. He had business here."

"Ah, of course. I suppose he would write a great deal to his clients. Did he speak English well?"

A HUMOROL'S MAN

The waiter made a gesture of dissent. "Indeed but he knew little about the language. He wrote, it is true, to France. Why, there was a little joke he got me to help him in—he was a humorous man, M. Roberti—a joke to play on a friend of his. He got me to write something out in English for him."

The detective filled the waiter's empty glass. "Really."

"Yes, moonsieur. He had a friend, a M. Vital Douat, who, he said, would never answer his letters. So he got me to write a mock death certificate of M. Douat, which he was to send on to him with a letter saying that he now understood his silence, since he was dead."

"That was a great joke," laughed the detective. "I suppose you have not heard from him since he left?"

IN MOURNING

The other had not. And since Druscovich had gained a solution of the only point in the case on which the waiter could throw any light he abruptly concluded the interview.

There remained the cemetery. The authorities remembered the burial of a man called Vital Douat. The arrangements had been made by a friend of the dead man, a Sig. Rubini—Douat seems to have had a partiality for the Italian suffix.

Rubini had presented a certificate from the registrar of deaths, paid the fees, and arranged for the ceremony to take place on the following Sunday. The funeral service had been conducted according to the rites of the Roman Catholic church by the Rev. Father M'Quoid, and Rubini had been the chief—in fact, the only—mourner. Druscovich's informant gave the name of the undertaker.

This individual also remembered M. Rubini. That gentleman had ordered a full-sized, ready made coffin with a lead lining of abnormal thickness. He had insisted that the handles be altered from the sides to the ends of the coffin, as is the custom in France.

"And what kind of a person was put into this coffin?" asked the detective.

SECRETS OF THE GRAVE

The undertaker hesitated: "To tell you the truth, I don't know," he said. "We delivered it by instruction at Ann street. Rubini said it was unnecessary for us to do anything more. He undertook to see the body in the coffin and to screw down the long box. He had a hearse and a mourning carriage to go to St. Patrick's cemetery on the Sunday."

Whatever views Druscovich may have had on the innocence or ignorance of the undertaker, he said nothing then. The man was legally right in accepting the certificate of the registrar. There was no obligation on him to put the body in the coffin. As for the registrar, he had made out the formal certificate on the presentation of the forged medical notice of death. No provision of the law had been neglected.

But Druscovich had enough information now to warrant an application that the grave should be made to yield up its secret. He applied to the proper authorities and an order for exhumation was granted.

All this was done quietly. The detective had no intention of allowing any hint of his activities to reach Douat if it could be avoided. There was, he hoped, something more than a chance of catching that gentleman off his guard. At his request a couple of men who knew Douat well were induced to take a trip from France and were sworn to secrecy.

THE COFFIN'S CONTENTS

In the cold light of a raw winter morning a temporary screen was erected around the grave to hide it from accidental outside observation. Within this inclosure Druscovich, a doctor, officials, and the two witnesses stood in a little group while men with picks and shovels attacked the frozen earth. The coffin was drawn to the surface and there was a little stir among the onlookers as the officials knelt to unscrew the lid. What they expected to see they scarcely knew. The detective alone had by this time arrived at a conclusion, but, like a wise man, he kept it strictly to himself.

The lid was thrown back. They looked into a coffin which contained nothing but a few odd scraps of metal placed there to make up the weight of the supposed body. The whole elaborate burial was now demonstrated as an obvious sham.

"I don't seem to be wanted," remarked the doctor.

"I scarcely expected that you would be," said Druscovich with a half smile.

LADY IN WAITING

As the waiter had said, M. Douat was a humorous man. Druscovich saw the joke, and it was appreciated the more by the insurance company officials, as their caution had prevented their concern being several thousands of dollars out of pocket.

To complete the amusement of the various parties it was only necessary to lay hands on Douat. To this task Druscovich addressed himself with energy, and he asked the Surete in the meantime to look after Mme. Douat.

The lady, however, was not to be found. Something had frightened her—no doubt the stiff attitude of the insurance company—and she had disappeared.

Druscovich, armed with a warrant for the arrest of Douat on charges of fraud and attempted fraud in France, followed the trail of his man to Liverpool. There he was conclusively satisfied that immediately after the bogus burial the other had set out for America under still another assumed name. Probably Douat had felt that, having done his share, he could safely leave the collection of the spoils to his efficient wife.

DEAD MEN MUST LIVE

The Scotland Yard men could do no more. It was doubtful if Douat's actions in England constituted a legal offense. Druscovich had done all and more than could have been expected from him. The running down of the fugitive now became a matter for the French police. He handed over a report to them and officially dropped the case.

For some reason or other the French people did not go to the trouble of searching for and extraditing Douat from the United States. That subtle individual, finding that the hue and cry was suspended, came to the hasty conclusion that he was forgotten. His enterprise did not find a full scope in America—and a man must live.

So he came back to Europe and took up his abode in Antwerp, where he took another name and called himself an export merchant. The sense of the theater that he had evinced at Bordeaux and in London served him adequately for a time among the Dutchmen, and he succeeded in inducing insurance companies to issue policies on a shipment of laces, clocks, and other goods to certain foreign ports by the ship Duc de Brabant.

THE FADEOUT

An unfortunate incident at the quayside before these goods were loaded onto the boat resulted in their total destruction by fire. M. Douat put in a claim for $25,000, and produced invoices to show that the goods were worth at least twice as much.

He might have got away with this but for an unfortunate oversight in the matter of detail. An insurance official nosing among the ruins found two barrels of tar, and the debris of cases which close examination showed had contained resin, chips, alcohol, powder, and charcoal.

Despite his protests the "export merchant" was arrested and during his trial he was identified as Vital Douat of Bordeaux, much wanted in France.

After a lengthy trial he was found guilty, but the French government asserted it held a prior right to deal with him. The common sense Dutchmen, who probably felt they might as well be spared the expense of maintaining him in one of their own prisons, conceded the point and Douat was sent on to Paris.

There Druscovich, sent over to give evidence, saw for the first time the man against whose vivid ingenuity he had matched himself. The tale of the empty coffin was unfolded, and the legal advisers of the prisoner saw that the well dressed young dandy of a detective had left no loophole by which their client could escape.

Douat was tried only for the fraud on the insurance company and was condemned to a long period of penal servitude. The elusive Mme. Douat kept well out of the way, and no more was heard of her.

SNOWSHOE'S HOT NEWS FROM ARCT

Noted Correspondent Gives Choice Excerpts from Hell Hole Howl.

By Snowshoe Al.

The following are excerpts clipped from the latest issue of the Hell Hole Howl, an evening paper published at Hell Hole, Alaska. This little mining town is situated 300 miles north of Fairbanks, but you won't find it on the map. The paper is printed regularly every night, but don't forget that a night lasts six months.

ROUGH-HOUSE ROSIE, the hash slinger in the Cockroach Café, wishes to announce her engagement to Fish-face McGuire. Fish-face ain't heard about it yet, but will be handed the sad news as soon as he sobers up, which usually takes place each June. The Last Chance Gambling House is offering odds of 8 to 3 that Mr. McGuire will leave for Seattle about six minutes after the glad tidings sink through his scalp. Rosie, as you probably know, is the winner of the Hell Hole Beauty Contest, having received twelve more votes than Arctic Annie, the only other white gal in town.

AN ALASKAN ADONIS

Speaking of our recent Beauty Contest, this paper deplores the fact that at least 50 of our 72 citizens were so ungentlemanly as to look at the two contestants and then cast their votes for Lon Chaney, whoever he is. Arctic Annie says she don't give a damn, but Rosie claims to have saw Mr. Chaney in a moving picture when she was visiting in Nome two years ago and she is certainly on the warpath, fellows.

Friends of Mr. & Mrs. White Eagle will regret to learn that their infant daughter, age two weeks, recently almost choked to death while eating a large piece of stewed dog meat. The parents feel pretty rotten about it and have decided not to wean any of their future children so speedily.

John Soc-wena and Chief Yamikan, a couple of local Cigar Signs, have opened a drug store, and they is having swinging doors put on the front of their establishment. Their entire stock, which consist of 4 barrels of hair tonic, arrived yesterday morning. The Yukon Kid brought it in from Canada by dog sled.

George Laughing Crow, who was recently separated from his wife, wishes us to announce that he will not be responsible for the purchase price of any fish, tallow candles, or gumdrops eaten by Lizzie Laughing Crow from now on. We get a wow of a kick out of this because, to the best of our knowledge, George ain't yet paid for a damn thing that either of them has ever ate in the past.

A WHALE OF AN IDEA

Notice: I will disclose the whereabouts of a large dead whale to anybody that will give me a good pair of pants in exchange for the information. The whale is in fairly good condition. Lots of meat. THE YUKON KID.

After paying us to print the above advertisement, the Yukon Kid got very intoxicated and started telling all his friends where the whale is anyhow; so hell, we might just as well tell the rest of youse. The whale is laying on the rocks at Anxiety Point in the Arctic Ocean, about fifty miles northwest of here. It's been resting there peacefully for the last five months, so if you ever get within two miles of it you won't have no trouble locating same. You're welcome.

The little son of Mr. and Mrs. Chief Yamikan will be seven years old next Wednesday or Thursday or Friday (the parents ain't sure which day) and he will be given his first bath in honor of the event. The chief is very proud of the fact that his son is now old enough to go to work.

This paper wishes to announce another "scoop." The Hell Hole Howl frequently prints important news items several months before they appear in any other paper within a 500 mile radius of here. We therefore take pride in informing our readers of the unfortunate death of Nicholas II., czar of Russia. We have always looked upon Nick as a sort of "near neighbor" because Siberia lies less than sixty miles west of Cape Prince of Wales. The czar died a few years ago, and further details will be given in our next issue if possible.

ADV.

Special for Saturday only: Eggs, strictly fresh, $13 per dozen. Two dozen for $25. Tallow candles, wonderful for flavoring soup, fifty cents each. Fresh seal blubber, two pounds for a dollar. Live rabbits, three for a quarter. French post cards, $5 for set of six. Polar bear steak, rib of walrus, and fresh caught salmon at most reasonable prices. An electric fan given away free to every customer as a souvenir. Sitka Jim's new store. [Third shanty east of the abandoned gold mine.]

We learn that Snowshoe Al, who used to hang around Dawson City and Fairbanks with old Buzzard Bill, is now bumming around in a town called Chicago, which we understand is way down southeast of here. We hear that he is now married, and we sure feel sorry for Mrs. Snowshoe Al unless her husband is working a helluva lot steadier than he did around these parts. He sure was a lazy hound, damn if he wasn't! We have also been informed that he recently spoke before an Intercollegiate Convention held in a place called Detroit. That's hot news! When he left here he hadn't even finished his sophomore year in the college of hard knocks.

Eskimo Ike was shot and killed a few days ago. Nobody knows who did it, and furthermore nobody cares. Nobody went to his funeral. That's one nice thing about our town—a guy can be anything he wants; he can be a Prohibitionist or he can be popular.

O, DEER!

John Fishtale, the well known Eskimo architect who recently built a flock of igloos on an ice floe in Harrison Bay and called his property the Floating Subdivision, has just bumped into a hunk of hard luck. Somebody tossed a keg of blasting powder among his Zero Bungalows and blew the entire property all to hellengone. John attributes the incident to labor trouble, as he has been using non-union reindeers to haul the blocks of snow and ice which the houses are made of.

Our town should be very proud of the fact that it is soon going to have a moving pitcher show. Half-breed Hogan, who will run it, announces that he has contracted for some lively films including a serial entitled "The Perils of Pauline," starring Pearl White; also some Western pictures featuring Broncho Billy Anderson; also some comedies which feature John Bunny and Flora Finch. This town is sure getting ahead!

Warning! The party what stole seven wolf skins from my shanty is known, and unless he returns same immediately his future address will be Hell. His present address is two doors west of the drug store.

[Signed] BILL L...

"Goofy" Smith, who spends most of his time trying to figure out what don't make much difference, just made the world's most necessary discovery. After experimenting for two months he has discovered that genuine whiskey, if used in sufficient quantities, will remove grease spots from clothing. We wouldn't be bothered to print the news, but we figured that maybe a couple of you would like to shoot him. You must remember, however, that this is not a serious paper.

JOIN A SLOW CLUB

The town of Circle recently went on record to an attack on this city through the medium of the press. They claim that our flourishing village is behind the times. We can't think of anything funnier than the town of Circle. Nothing anything on earth of humor reminds us of the polecat with the onion of having a burro. Your outfit is so damn slow that the Mah Jong craze has just landed there. Hell, up here we've already had the croas word puzzles.

The boys hereabouts have decided that Polar Bear Pete has just taken a grammar school education correspondence, and they sure are calling the guy with lots of awe. It is quite a surprise, because to know Pete you wouldn't think he had sense whatever. However, he is a cuss and the chances are that he will try to high hat anybody or make them feel inferior, which a lot of people would do if they was in his class. The diploma has just arrived and is now on exhibition in the drug store. However, Pete asks us to assure his friends that he will continue to be his old self, so evidently you can expect him loafing around town looking ignorant as ever.

German Telegraphers Carry Off Prizes

BERLIN.—(AP)—German telegraphers carried off the honors in competition held in Cologne. A Breslau girl, Fraulein Cisenbend, won the first prize of 100 marks. Herr Suhre of Emden, came second.

In this year's contest three thousand entries from fourteen countries were received, many was represented with the exception of Japan.

The contestants received their messages with fifty code words on each page, and one hour to transmit the messages. When the current was turned off at the end of that time, Miss Sonnabend had transferred 1,200 words out of a possible 2,500, having made 22,243 ticks in 3,600 seconds.

A JUNIOR LEAGUER'S LIFE IS NO BED OF ROSES

Society Buds Labor Hard and Long in the Name of Sweet, Sweet Charity

...ighing Babies and ...ling Tickets ...ep Them Busy

By Mildred Jaklon.

DON'T ever intimate to a Chicago Junior leaguer that you think the life of a society girl is one of carefree bliss, devoid of toil, replete with such luxuries as sleeping late of mornings and attending lunches, teas, and dances, or you'll have a small tempest descend around your ears! Wait until the aforesaid has it well out of hearing before you call her "social butterfly" or "idle rich" if you have consideration for her auditory organs!

Every one of the 303 active members of the organization and every one of the 41 provisional members—yes, even the provisional members—will tell you emphatically and volubly, that there is no life of ease, but one requiring energy and labor, all in the name of sweet, sweet charity. Every last tale of woe and they'll tell it to you. And what's more, there seems to be a great deal in what they say.

ISN'T HALF OF IT

Take these provisional members. In order to pay the annual active membership dues and acquire the other full privileges of real, honest-to-goodness Junior Leaguehood, they must attend a half dozen prescribed lectures, must work eighty hours of charitable work, and must pass an examination on their training course. And take it from any former debutante who has countless social obligations during her first season out, those stipulations necessitate a not inconsequential amount of time and energy to devote to life being real and earnest being earnest.

And the active members. They'll tell you that really the required eighty hours that active membership entails during the first five years isn't the half of it, dearie. And even the young women who gain associate membership and the freedom from "doing their hours" after their half decade of gruelling application, can tell you that the claims of the League continue to be many and arduous.

CHARITABLE ENDEAVOR

And we must admit that enlightenment on the subject does reveal that the contingent of ladies is grievously misunderstood and their status grossly underrated. Very few groups of citizens can boast such a record as they have to present—303 times 80 hours of charitable endeavor, in the past year and a net income of over $16,000 through their energies.

That charitable endeavor means weighing and measuring infants at one of the charity hospitals, doing social settlement work, acting as clerks and saleswomen at the White Elephant Rummage shop or the Eli Bates shop, serving in a variety of capacities ranging from models to demonstrators for beauty products, waiting on table at the League tea room, "The Cake-box" in Lake Forest, and performing any of the hundreds of jobs connected with the Junior League's children's theater.

And glance over the imposing list of charities that the Junior Leaguers serve—Arden Shore camp, Christ Child society, Chicago Nursery and Half Orphan asylum, Eli Bates settlement, Emerson house, Erie chapel, Grant hospital, Girl Scouts, Hull house, Immigrants' Protective league, Legal Aid, Lighthouse, Lower North Community Council, Lake Forest Y. W. C. A., Margaret Etter crèche, North Avenue Day nursery, Presbyterian hospital, Ridge Farm preventorium, Service Council for Girls, St. Luke's hospital, United Charities, Visiting Nurse association, and the Vocational Society for Shutins. And besides, the organization opened its own Infant Welfare station during the last year.

HOW TO GET IN

In view of these revelations, a little information about the mechanics of the society may be of interest. To become a member, a girl must be proposed by one member and seconded by two, her proposal sent to the committee on elections, approved by that body, which may require three letters if the proposed candidate is unknown to two of its members, and then submitted for final election to the board of directors.

Lectures, eight of them, are given for the benefit of the provisional members. This year's talks, which began on Oct. 15 and were given every Tuesday and Friday until Nov. 18, included dissertations by Miss Jane Addams at the Tudor room of the Palace theater, Judge Mary Bartelme of the Juvenile court at the Romany club, Miss Mary Cudahy on the work of the Visiting Nurse association at the Visiting Nurse association, Mrs. W. Scott Linn on the aims and workings of the Lake Shore League of Women Voters, and Mrs. Benjamin F. Langworthy of the Women's City club at the Tudor room of the Palace, Mrs. John L. Cochran, the president of the league on the constitution of the league, Miss Dorothy Schmidt on the Children's theater, and Mrs. Theodore Tieken on Art and Schools, an exposition of the work of Eli Bates settlement by Miss Little of that organization, and the final one by Mrs. Stewart of the Children's Memorial hospital.

These lectures were for the purpose of acquainting young women with the field of activities in which as representative persons they must operate to carry on the civic and welfare projects of their predecessors.

CHECK OF HOURS

Since it is in her debutante year that a young woman first becomes liable to her obligations and entitled to her recognition as a social somebody, it is perfectly fitting that she should also take her part in the more serious aspects of a public spirited life.

Although it is presumed that there is honor among leaguers, a record of the time she has put in at each and every charity is kept and turned over to the secretary. She may also be called on to sell advertising for the children's theater program, put up posters announcing the theater's productions, or be in any way useful and agreeable to tasks prescribed by the active sisters.

So much for the individual proselyte. When she has successfully passed her tests, she assumes the responsibilities of greater initiative. It is her place to suggest ideas for money making if she has them, and she may know that if she has a suggestion it will be pounced upon and she will be delegated to put it into action. Her dues are $10 a year, and should she be absent from one of the semi-annual meetings she is fined $1.

KINDS OF MEMBERS

There are five classes of membership, provisional, and active, already explained, associate members who have no voting privileges and are not required to attend meetings or do Junior league work, sustaining members who have reached the age limit of 40, having no voting privileges, need not attend meetings and are not required to work, and professional members who are engaged in paid work and cannot attend meetings. Provisional members pay no dues, associate members pay $15 annual dues, and professional members, $5. Dues are payable on and before Nov. 1. By Dec. 1 members who are delinquent are considered resigned, but may be reinstated on payment.

The league supports an executive secretary and an office for necessary business.

CHILDREN'S THEATER

The Chicago league, which is one of ninety-five similar and associated leagues throughout the country, is justly proud of its children's theater. Of the ninety-five leagues, twenty-five have organized such theaters, but the Chicago league is the only one which has made its project financially successful. Telegrams and letters from the other leagues beg advice on the subject, and at the annual conference the Chicago members are looked at with awe because of their distinction and regarded as a composite oracle on the subject. Miss Dorothy Schmidt runs the theater.

Not only has the theater come to rank among the best children's theaters in the country, but it has made strides forward in an artistic direction. Modernistic lines are being carried out in the stage designs conceived and executed by Mrs. Walter Paepcke and Mrs. Philip B. Maher, the costume designs by Mrs. Shreve Badger, the properties superintended by Miss Helen Bournique, Miss Portia Bartlett, Mrs. Richard Fleming, and Mrs. J. Bernard Mullen, and the music arrangements made by Mrs. George Haskell.

Plans for the new year include the transferring of the plays from the Playhouse to the Harris theater, which is 50 per cent larger in capacity, and a tour of the east with one of the new plays. The opening performance of the season, "The Rose and the Ring," was held Nov. 19.

The theater is acquiring funds also by renting its costumes and settings to other Junior leagues. Last year's successful Aladdin properties have just been shipped to Kansas City.

SERVE AS MODELS

All of the production work and most of the construction of settings and the making of costumes is done by the workers. Mrs. John R. Winterbotham Jr. and Miss Emily Hamill are credited by their co-workers for helping in making last year's ticket sale profitable, as also is Miss Louise Tyler, who handled the ticket sale.

The Chicago league is also proud of its accomplishment in corralling and entertaining the first children's theater conference last December. Seven leagues from other cities were represented, those of Detroit, Cincinnati, Buffalo, Brooklyn, Columbus, St. Louis and Kansas City. Miss Alice Gerstenberg, who has been one of the most active leaguers in the children's theater work; Mrs. Russell Barnitz, and Miss Harriet McLaughlin spoke before the conference about establishing a national headquarters for children's plays, the possibility of interchanging scenery and costumes, and the children's theater problems common to all such organizations. The establishment of a bureau of information in Chicago was the most important outgrowth of the conference.

The league feels that it has gone a long way since the time when it annually gave a Junior League Follies, which was disrespectfully termed by some of the town wags "The Junior Leg show."

Other activities for last year included the benefit opening night of the professional ice hockey series at the Coliseum, at which $5,470.24 was cleared. A group of Junior league girls served as models at one of the loop department stores, for which they received $500, and another group received a like amount for serving as beauty specialists at the opening of the Elizabeth Arden beauty salon.

Weighing babies is only a part of the Junior Leaguers' work.

Junior league general manager of the plays for children.

MRS. JOHN LEWIS COCHRAN,
president of Junior league (above).

MRS. PHILIP B. MAHER,

A new member of the league receives information of the various duties she may find to complete her "hours," which she must accomplish before the ensuing May of the opening of the season in which she is nominated.

...icotine Given Alibi; Methyl Alcohol Blamed

BERLIN.—(AP)—It's not nicotine, but methyl alcohol, that causes all the trouble in smoking, according to the researches of Professor Neuberg here.

Experiment revealed that the nicotine content of tobacco varied without relation to the strength of the cigar as tasted by the smoker, and that smoking continued to be harmful in spite of denicotinizing tobacco. Prof. Neuberg discovered that the veins of the tobacco leaf contain methyl alcohol, which fermentation weakens but does not altogether remove. The decrease is greater in cigars than in cigarettes.

Burning does not destroy the methyl alcohol. Freed from the lighted cigar, it mixes with the smoke and, inhaled, mixes with the saliva instead of being again exhaled with the smoke. Whether it is possible to remove the methyl alcohol from tobacco entirely is as yet undetermined.

...Service Station ...r Paris Smokers

BERLIN.—(AP)—Cigaret lighters, like automobiles, now have a "service station."

Down on the Rue de la Paix enterprising Anglo-Saxon firm has set up a corner of its store to take care of smokers who run out of gas, whose lighters get clogged with soot, or otherwise act up.

A "trouble" man at a bench gives prompt fire attention—usually without charge—much to the amazement of the customers, who are accustomed to the usual French delay of eight or fifteen days for repairs.

Did Not Choose to Run.

Our alumnae were having a luncheon. The luncheon was to be followed by an election of officers. One of the girls left immediately after the meal was served. She said she did not wish to remain for the election, because she knew she would be selected for some office. Because this girl was decidedly unpopular, we nicknamed her "Egoitis." C. C.

Vox Feminae.

Asked if she would sing, Claire willingly consented.

"However, I must ask you folks not to coax me to sing more than twice," she said. "Usually people insist that I sing too much and my throat becomes irritated, and that is a detriment to my voice. I would not for worlds have anything happen to my voice, as it gives the public so much pleasure." The sad part of the story is that Claire could not sing. W. G.

What Fur?

A friend of mine purchased a fur coat at a sale in a downtown department store. I was with her when she made the purchase, and knew the price. I had to gasp when I heard her telling a neighbor that she had paid a large price for the finery and had bought it at one of the most exclusive shops in town. When I questioned her about this, she laughingly said: "That woman will tell the other neighbors about my coat, and naturally they will be green with envy." R. H. Y.

Maid in America.

The highly unpopular young woman who bought many useless things to get the most votes in a local popularity contest is a real big head. Now she's gloating over her manufactured glory. Z. S. S.

Try These POETIC POSERS

By Norman Lustig and William J. Fadiman.

Could you still pass a poetry test if some one gave it to you, or has your memory for once well known poems gone back on you? Try it and see.

This may help to unravel some of the hidden mystery. The author of the first was known as the "Quaker Poet"; and the fourth excerpt was written by the same man who wrote "The Last Rose of Summer." The fifth quotation is from a comedy by England's greatest dramatist. The last name of the sixth author is the same as that of a celebrated New York lawyer. The tenth author wrote "Paul Revere's Ride." The poem, "Idylls of the King," is another work by the author of the second. No. 8 was written by the "Hoosier Poet;" the author of the seventh also wrote "The Song of the Sword." No. 9 is the work of an author who wrote "Luck of Roaring Camp" and other stories. The third excerpt was written by the author of "The Light That Failed."

Give yourself 5 for naming the author correctly and another 5 for the title of the poem. If you achieve 60 per cent you have passed. Anything above that is highly commendable. If you are stumped, you can always find the answers in another column on this page.

King's Coat and Vest Up for Sale

BERLIN.—(AP)—After the ex-kaiser's bathtub, a Bavarian king's coat and vest are now to be knocked down to the highest bidder.

A Munich Neueste Nachrichten advertisement runs:

"Dark blue coat and vest, worn by his majesty, King Ludwig II., for sale. Warranted genuine. Write, etc."

FIFTY-FIFTY.

The steamer was just leaving the pier when a man rushed up and shouted: "Hold on a minute; there's a party of 50 coming aboard."

The steamer backed in again and the man walked on board and sat down. After five minutes of waiting the captain went across to him and asked him if the party would be much longer.

"What party?" asked the man.

"The party of 50 you spoke about."

"O, I'm the party! I'm 50 today."—Youth's Companion.

HOLLERAN YELL

Broad Minded Policies Are Announced

By Westbrook Pegler.

ONE fine trait about my character is that I am not inclined to be narrow minded, as I have a very broad mind myself and I am constantly crusading against narrow mindedness among my fellow brothers of the human race.

Personally, I have not got any use for narrow minded people, as I think they are a lot of hypocrites, and if I could have my way I would get up some kind of a law so every narrow minded hypocrite in the country would be housed up in the jails. I feel sure that every broad minded citizen would be in favor of this, because narrow mindedness has been sweeping the country like hot cakes and the only way to treat such people is to show them no consideration.

Furthermore, I would not bother with any jury trials for this kind of characters, because every one of them is a sneak in the grass and they might get some of their fellow hypocrites on the jury to cause a disagreement and defeat the ends of justice.

GIVE 'EM THE LIMIT

So instead of having jury trials, it would be my idea to hold an examination of the hypocrites and if they answered the questions in a narrow minded way I would simply give them the limit.

I suppose I feel the effects of narrow mindedness worse in my profession than they do in some other lines, because the first thing that these hypocrites always pick on is the sport of the squared circle, and whenever they wish to cause trouble for their fellow men they start casting charges on the great body of sportsmen who are working themselves to the quick to provide clean recreation for red blooded citizens. I do not know why they do this, because if I had to cast any charges I would start casting them at the king of England or the bolsheviks.

You can get contributions just as well that way, and instead of causing any harm you just cause a lot of innocent amusement and enjoyment for young and old.

FOREIGN DANGERS

My idea is that if you are sincere and you really wish to help the public to escape from some terrible danger you can always pick out a foreign danger without picking out some home industry and ruining a fellow citizen's business. I have never engaged in this line of work myself but I can easily see where I could create a great deal of public interest and collect a large amount of contributions by attacking some evil like the kaiser.

If I decided to attack the king of England I would hire a band and an auditorium and I would get up and make a speech stating that the minute the king of England's armies set foot on the fair soil of wherever I happened to live, I would shoot them down like dogs and I would then call for volunteers to follow me into the fray, charging them a nominal fee of ten dollars each for privates and all the way up to $50 each for generals, with special rates for clubs joining as a body, to defray the cost of administration.

"And," I would state, "I want to tell you right here and now that I believe in defending our soil against a lot of dissolute kings and dukes and lords to the last ditch, one hundred per cent, and the minute I see one of their cowardly sneaks of rotten, dirty, beer guzzling soldiers walking up Elm street or Pine street leering at my loved ones I believe in taking stern measures, absolutely."

BOLSHEVISM MUST GO

Or if I happened to be attacking the bolsheviks I would make a speech demanding that our government catch all the bolshevik spies in our country and kick them into New York harbor and make them swim home.

"Of all the foul, no good bums in the world, the bolsheviks are the worst and they are nothing but a lot of no good loafers and bums," I would state. "And," I would state, "if I had Trotsky up here on this platform I would haul off and hit him a paste in the kisser, because my ideals are all for good government and I believe positively in clean streets and that I am not afraid to state my position fearlessly and without fear."

But, of course, there might be a time when I would want to attack some danger right here at home to show my followers that I am a fighting leader and not picking on a lot of foreign menaces just because they are setups. So in that case I would attack New York City, because New York City is full of immorality and it is practically nothing to ride along Riverside drive on the top of a bus and look into the windows of the exclusive society mansions and see society debauches going on at all hours of the day and night.

"The society debauch has got to go," I would announce in a voice, "as it is un-American when I think of a lot of Wall street brokers in full dress suits and doing nothing but riding in limousines from one debauch to another with slimy tentacles of temptation reaching out for our clean minded boys and girls to enmesh them into the labyrinth of this modern madness, not hesitate that I am opposed to it.

"Gotham," I would say, "is an American sink hole, rearing its head in a country where one million home loving citizens have no use for debauchers, and I give word that I will not rest until I have gone to New York and investigated these debauches first hand, so as to now receive subscriptions of dollars each from all those who are opposed to debauching in order to pay the expenses of this investigation."

NIPPED IN THE BUD.

By W. M. Schwimmer.

It's pretty tough when you're in love
To get a cruel parental shove.

It gripes me when in slumber deep,
The pest alarm impedes my sleep.

It irritates me when I'm late
And then the red light makes me wait.

It burns me up with discontent
When I would forcefully give vent

To language quite profanely stressed——
The wife walks in and I'm suppressed.

It drives me daft and makes me moan
When I am cut off on the phone.

I gnash my teeth and loudly wail
When I peruse some gripping tale,

To learn when I conclude the text
That it's continued in the next.

It's sad when something of this sort
Bobs up to disconcert and thwart.

But though these snags are most severe,
And spike your guns and interfere;

There's one far worse than all of these,
It's this—an interrupted sneeze!

THE DUKE GOES TO WORK FOR THE CITY

He Judges His Fellow Man from the Jury Box

By Duke Bakrak.

A CUPPLE of weeks ago Thursday some friend of old man Grabfelder went duck shootin' and brought him a couple of Mallards. He don't like duck but his wife is crazy about it so he gave them to me. The next day tha B. and C. stuffed and roasted them and O! Boy! talk about eats, well I guess I finished pretty near a whole one myself. That bound of ares was hanging around tha legs of a table so long that I got to thinking that maybe he was a bird dog.

Well, I had to open up a cupple buttons when I got through and I was in no mood to do dish washing so I pull tha headache act. Tha Mama says she didn' believe me as no one was ever known to get GOUT in tha head. Anyway she shampoos and massages tha crockery alone. Me and tha kids went in tha parlor and played orchestra, me at tha drum. This brings a howl from the kitchen to the effect that "Music hath charms to soothe tha savage pest" and she hoped it wood improve my head; also, that there was lots of room for improvement. Ain't it funny how getting out of tha dishes for one night gets their goats for a month?

TELL IT TO THE JUDGE

About eight o'clock tha door bell rings and some gent hollers up tha tube that he wood like to see Mr. Bakrak. I didn' reckognize his voice and for a minute or two I tried to think which outfit got a stall this month. Well, it wasn't a collector at all. The guy was from the court and he serves a paper on me which is printed on the top JURY SUMMONS. This is the first time I ever got one and I was feeling pretty damn good about it. To me it meant two weeks' vacation in tha middle of tha winter.

Well, tha next morning I show tha paper to tha chief and he puts a damper on my feelings by telling me not to worry about tha summons as he has plenty of friends who cood get me off. I didn' dare tell him that I didn' want off. He gets busy on tha phone and pretty near every drag he runs tells him that there's a helova howl going tha rounds and that it ain't so damn easy at tha present time. About noon he informs me that it looks pretty black. To me it looked rosy. The next suggestion he shoots sounds pretty good to me 'cause there seemed to be room for a little double crossing. His dope was for me to appear at tha court and tell tha judge that I was either hard of hearing or that I didn' believe in capitol punishment, or perhaps try and get by with an excuse that it was our busy season. I told Grabfelder I'd do my darndest and that if none of tha excuses worked I might tell his honor I had a slight touch of leprosy.

HE GOES A-COURTING

Monday morning I appear on tha scene promptly at nine o'clock which was according to the instructions. At 10 o'clock his Honor blows in, puts on a black kimona and thanks us gentlemen for being prompt. Tha guy sittin' next to me says "What tha hell does he mean, prompt?" So I had to explain to tha bird that judges are on Fiji Island time which is one hour later than ares.

The first happening was a guy (which they called a bayleave) hitting his desk with a wooden hammer and mumbling something which sounded to me like "Here you! Here you! Iss onrubble cort now 'n seshun, selp m' God." Then he unloaded a mouthful of Farmers' Delight and when it hit tha spitoon it sounded like a wave hitting tha side of a boat. Next, tha judge remarks that if any of tha gentlemen cood show cause why they shoodn' serve they should step forward. Fifty-one of tha fifty nearly broke their legs gettin' up to tha bench.

The first geezer has got a excuse which old man Grabfelder overlooked. He tells tha judge that his wife is expecting a baby. This judge guy ain't no slouch and I guess he also noticed how nervous tha punk was so he starts to twist tha punk all up. Here's his system.

"Well, young man, your to be congratulated."

"Th-tha-thank y-yo-you."

"Baby? Well, that's fine!"

"Ye-yes s-sir."

"It's wonderful to have a new son."

"I'll sa-say so."

"Boy, isn't it?"

"Ye yes sir."

"Your a fast worker, five minutes ago you was expecting a baby and now you got a boy."

"W-we-well it's——"

"Take a seat in tha jury box."

TRAGICOMEDY

The next bloke gets asked real quick, "Are you married?" the guy says, "No," and the judge says, "Well, if your expecting an addition tha kid will be 10 years old when you get out." This bird's excuse is that his mother-in-law ain't expected to live and his honor says "Some men get all the breaks, take seat number two."

A foreign-lookin' egg is next and when he's asked his name he makes off he don't understand English. Just then the judge looks towards tha rear of tha courtroom an' says, "Young lady, you can't sit here with skirts above your knees." When tha Scandanavian turned around to get a look tha judge says, "Seat No. 3."

You could of died laughin' at the next egg. Before tha judge ever got a chance to question him, he says, very lady-like, "Your Honor, I don't believe in capitol punishment." The judge says "That's capitol, take No. 4."

There was one more bloke before I was called and he pulls tha "hard of hearing racket." When his honor asks him his name he cups his ears with his hands and says, "What?" The judge then says in a tone so low you coodn' of heard it a foot away, "Your excused, we can't use deaf jurors." Just before tha gink got to the door he was called back and told to keep chair No. 5 warm for a cupple of weeks.

BLIND JUSTICE

Me, being a wise cracker, always wantin' to give tha folks a sample of real wit an' humor so as they cood split their sides laughin, I says, "Your honor, I was gonna tell you that I was deaf and dumb but I've changed my mind and I ain't gonna use any excuse." He says, "You might of fooled me on tha deaf part but I'd a believed you were dumb." Then he wise cracks me by saying, "I hope you won't mind our wooden upholstery for 2 weeks."

By noon twelve of us were working for tha city and tha court adjourned until two o'clock. This gave me a chance to beat it over to tha office and tell the ole man how I pleaded and begged to get let off but that they woodn' listen. "Grabby" was sore as hell even after I told him that when the judge asked me where I worked, his reply was, "A truly great corporation." Sometimes a line of bull braces up the old man but this time he just says, "When you see him again tell him for me to fly-ta-hell."

Two o'clock we're all back in are seats and there gonna start a case. I had an idea we wood be trying some big murder case and whadda ya think they dish? A poor soak gets himself full of Moon, slips his squaw a cupple of shiners and on tha way out to get another pint he slops in at tha floor below. Seems tha door was open but tha neighbor wasn't home so he accidentally borrows 21 bucks from under their mattress.

This here system what are city has got is way beyond me. In tha first place, here's us twelve guys drawing down 5 bucks a day apiece wich is 60 dollars. Whatever the judge and tha State's Attorney draw must be aplenty. Then their's electric light and heat. As far as I can figure out if a guy cops 21 simoleans somebody is gonna be out a cupple hundred. Maybe that's why my taxes are so high (provided I owned a building).

Before tha case got well under way I was in favor of lettin tha bird off 'cause annybody that drinks Moon has been punished enough and as far as his messin up his squaw is concerned there seems to be a law that you kin do what you want with yer own property.

EXPERT TESTIMONY

For tha best part of three hours tha State's Attorney is pulling high brow language on us birds like "Preponderance of evidence," "Malice aforethought," "Habus Corpus," in fact everything except "Tempis Fugit." This one he coodn' of fooled me on 'cause I happen to know it means something about a clock that runs fast.

At five o'clock we were excused for tha day and told to report again at nine in tha morning. All Tuesday was taken up by tha witnesses. Every guy what got on the stand had a different story to tell. One guy who tha State's Attorney was trying to get bawled up gives us a good laugh with tha following:

Atty.—"Mr. Gutchkufsky, you said you boarded with tha Zinkovitches."

Gutch.—"Yez but da beds iz rottun."

Atty.—"Never mind about the beds."

Gutch.—"Sure, you dun't hafta zleep in 'em."

Atty.—"Have you ever seen Zinkovitch take a drink?"

Gutch.—"He noffer takes less as six."

Atty.—"Are you naturalized?"

Gutch.—"No, I'm Polish."

Atty.—"If Zinkovitch took six drinks would he be inebriated?"

Gutch.—"No, soused."

Atty.—"How much board do you pay?"

Gutch.—"Too much."

Other Lawyer—"Object."

Judge—"Jeckshun stalned."

Well, this goes on for a helova long while and I got to thinking that if every witness was gonna take that long we woodn' get out of tha trenches till Xmas. The following day they put tha defendant, Zinkovitch, on tha stand and he fixes up a story worthy of not only gettin' aquitted but one that wood entitle him to a German iron cross and a paid up membership in tha "Liars Club."

His dope was that he came home with a terrible stomach ache and thought a little brandy wood do him good. The wife got peeved cause he woodn' eat any of tha ox joints she set in front of him and in pushing tha plate to one side tha whole mess went on tha floor. As she was going after tha mop to clean things up she slipped on tha gravvy and struck her eyes on tha leg of tha kitchin stove. He got scared and decided to go over to tha drug store and get some vaseline and as he was going down the steps tha neighbor came out and he told all about what happened to tha wife. The neighbor asked him if he had enough money to pay for tha vaseline and he said he wasn't sure so tha neighbor says here's twenty-one dollars.

THE INJUSTICE OF IT

Wednesday morning tha case was decided in Zinkovitch's favor as he only got 2 years instead of 20. After finishing two weeks of chair-warming by listening to about six more cases we got discharged with a vote of thanks by his Honor for being citizens who were willing to do what he terms a civic duty.

We all got about seventy bucks a piece and Saturday afternoon I get mixed up in a domino rolling contest and get took for 35 beans. When I get home I had to tell tha B. and C. that 35 was all they pay so she said we'd split it and I cood take her out Sunday night and blow her to a show. She sticks her seventeen and a half in tha bank and Monday morning when I get to tha office my check is waiting for me with 70 berries deducted. It that ain't a cheap trick I'm a Spaniard.

If I'd a known that things were going to turn out this way old Zinkovitch would be dead one year next November.

P. S.—And the tombstone wood say: "He Died From a Pain in Tha Neck."

Stock Dividend Tax Sometimes Takes All in France

PARIS.—(AP)—France has the world's record in taxing stock dividends. Premier Poincare, as minister of finance, takes every red cent of the dividends on two stocks and more than half the dividends on a great many others.

Taxes on unregistered stocks are so heavy and they vary so much that the chamber's budget report calls for help for security owners.

The two stocks whose owners have all their dividends taken by the state are the light and power company at Nantes and a Moroccan development firm. Part of this taxation can be avoided by investors who register their securities, but they then subject themselves to other assessments.

Of the 245 stocks and bonds listed in the budget report four others have 90 per cent or more of the dividends taken by the government. The lowest share the state gets on any of the bonds is 27.4 per cent. The average is a little more than a third.

Besides these assessments, the government collects income tax from security owners and a corporation tax that often exceeds the amount of the dividend.

North Avenue Wins Dominance in the "Battle of the Neighborhoods"

UNTIL a few years ago North Avenue, from Western to California, was a street of little one and two story frame shops. Their small dark windows were cluttered. The proprietors emerged from the seclusion of their living quarters in the rear only when a loud buzzer warned them of an occasional customer. They took what business came along, as they had done for years, and made no further effort to attract trade.

Families of the neighborhood shopped there only for necessities. Their larger purchases were made in other sections. Other neighborhoods were getting the profitable business.

Then They Woke Up - -

About five years ago, North Avenue merchants began to realize that the business they were losing was making other merchants prosperous. And they decided to bring these customers to their stores—to make their district one of the major shopping centers of Chicago. They followed the example of Chicago's most successful merchants and began to advertise.

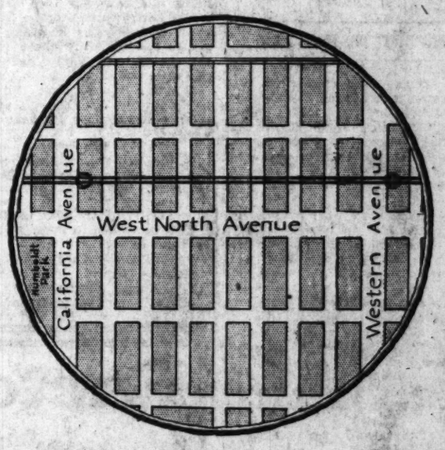
Today, the shacks that once lined North Avenue are rapidly being replaced with modern, brightly lighted stores. Furniture and department stores, specialty shops, hotels, one of the city's largest drug stores, several excellent restaurants. A few years ago there were no banks—none was needed. Today there are two, with six millions on deposit. There are six large theaters offering first run pictures.

The entire district bustles with activity. An air of prosperity prevails. Twenty-five foot shops that used to bring about $60 a month now rent for $400. Business frontage that could have been bought for $700 or $800 a foot sells for more than $3000 a foot today. North Avenue is taking its place among Chicago's finest neighborhood shopping centers. Merchants no longer wait for business; they go out after it. Aggressive merchandising and advertising are expanding their trading areas, bringing customers from Austin, Oak Park, Rogers Park.

A Billion Dollar Opportunity - -

Chicago offers a market of more than a billion dollars a year. Eleven hundred million dollars annually for the necessities and luxuries of life. It is one of the richest markets in the world—a market worth fighting for.

The families in your neighborhood spend millions of dollars every year. They will spend this vast sum with the merchants who advertise most aggressively. You who have done so much toward bringing success to your neighborhood can insure continued prosperity in no surer way than by concentrating your advertising in the newspaper that reaches the greatest number of your customers.



Constant Competition

Chicago, in little more than an average lifetime, has grown from a crude village into one of the world's greatest cities. It has passed countless older cities in size, in commercial importance, and in prosperity.

This rapid growth has brought many changes. It has transformed prairies into thriving metropolitan districts and small corner shops into great stores. It has brought commercial supremacy to some districts and left others behind, forgotten. It means a tremendous opportunity for neighborhood merchants, but it also means the constant competition of rival shopping centers—a continual "battle of the neighborhoods."

Don't let other merchants in other sections, with more vigorous merchandising and advertising, reap the golden harvest that should be yours—that can be yours if you continue to fight for it.

Act Now!

The Chicago Tribune is an important factor in the success of many of Chicago's greatest merchants. They know, because years of experience have proved it to them, that the responsiveness of Tribune readers to Tribune advertising makes it the greatest sales-producing force in Chicago.

The Metropolitan Sections of The Sunday Tribune enable neighborhood merchants to reach families living in their trading area—near enough to shop conveniently at their stores—and pay for that circulation only. With a circulation of about a quarter of a million, each part of the Metropolitan Section offers you "coverage" of a million people, at a cost of about one-third the rate for full Sunday Tribune circulation.

In no other way can you reach so large a percentage of your potential customers at so low a cost. In no other way can you secure such positive insurance of continued prosperity, at a cost so easily within the means of every neighborhood merchant. One of Chicago's greatest neighborhood merchants says: "The Metropolitan Section of The Sunday Tribune is helping us materially to show the greatest gains in the history of our business."

Decide now to use this great business-building, sales-producing force. The Metropolitan Section will do for you what it is doing for an increasing number of Chicago's leading merchants—bring you dominance of your trading area.

Phone Superior 0100 and ask a Tribune man to call with facts and figures.

Chicago Tribune

THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER

METROPOLITAN SECTION

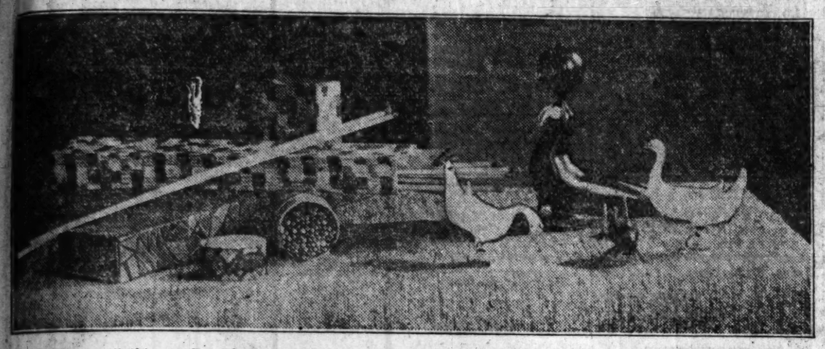
The Chicago Tribune publishes as a part of its regular Sunday issue a Metropolitan Section, the circulation of which is divided so that local neighborhood merchants may advertise in any one or more of the three sides of Chicago and suburbs as follows:

North and Uptown Section—West and Northwest Section—South and Southwest Section

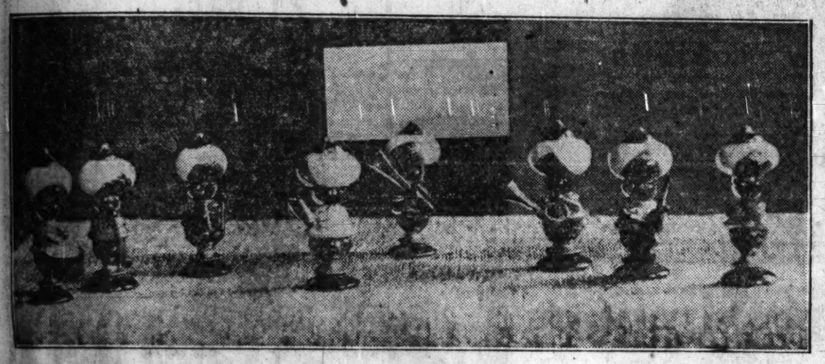
CHRISTMAS GIFTS FOR HER

The latest feminine manifestations from Paris: handkerchiefs a good six-teen inches square made of sheerest chiffon, some lace trimmed, some printed, some initialed in a waterproof paint. Earrings and choker of amber and a jeweled box.

Paging Mr. Ziegfeld, only this lady is porcelain and she sits atop a French powder puff of eiderdown. The other object is a tiny vanity made of gold and silver sequins.



A group of small things, all enchanting. There are two swans and a fish that will float in your flower bowl, a trained seal, holding perfume, fireside matches, and small matches of rainbow hue. Charming small gifts, all of them, and none over $2.



A busy wife gives a dinner party soon to welcome a traveler home. She cannot well hire a band, so she will have these Nubian musicians to hold the place cards. The implication will be plain.

Duchess of York Purchases Purse She Cannot Lose

LONDON.—(AP)—The reasons for the unbounded popularity of the duke of York and his little family may be many, but certainly one one of these is their human qualities.

The duke and duchess were doing some early Christmas shopping at the exhibition of work by disabled war veterans at the Imperial Institute. They bought a number of articles for their royal baby, Princess Elizabeth. A little wicker stool caught the duchess' quick eye and she turned to her husband to say:

"That's just the thing for the nursery—for Elizabeth to sit on if she won't learn her ABC's."

The duke approved this choice and the disabled man in attendance remarked, "A kind of stool of repentance."

The duchess exclaimed over a little leather bag which, she said, was like one a friend had given her before their visit to Australia. The ducal husband also seemed to remember it.

"Yes," he said with a sly smile, "that bag was one of the few things you never lost, and the one thing you never dropped anything out of. We'll have that bag."

Only 20,000 Listed in World Who's Who

PARIS.—(AP)—Of the 1,800,000,000 inhabitants of the earth 20,000 have a right to be considered members of a world aristocracy of brains and achievement.

This is the opinion of Robert Wilberforce, editor of an international super-who's-who now being compiled with the assistance of the league of nations institute of intellectual coöperation. He formerly was with the news department of the British foreign office and spent many years in America.

The volume, later to be expanded in size, will contain biographies of the world's leading men and women. In order to get a balanced representation in the various fields of thought and activity, proportions will vary in accordance with the type of activity most developed in each nation. Thus America will furnish a large number of industrialists and bankers, France many artistic and literary figures, India philosophers, and England statesmen. The first edition will be ready before the end of 1928.

DRESS PARADE

THE FORLORN KAYDET with never a girl to call his own is William Boyd, and this scene is from "Dress Parade," which is at the Majestic this week.

IT SHOCKS ME, IT SHOCKS ME

Let's know what shocks you most in a brisk, brief rhyme, and we'll pay you $2 if we print it. Address Shocks, Sunday Tribune.

No, We're Shock Absorbers.

For years I've been writing short stories,
Am sending them hither and yon
To editors all over the country,
But they always come back anon.
Then last week I sent out another;
I did not bid it adieu,
I expected to see it again, but—
Well, wouldn't it shock you, too?
D. H.

Cheap Skate.

I know a girl who had a shock;
She couldn't find her stocking.
Her brother used it for a skating cap.
Now don't you think that shocking?
E. S.

Rejuvenated.

I'm shocked when I see my dear old beau
Down in the baldhead row,
While I'm the limelight of the stage,
In roles of tender age.
L. D. L.

Station B-A-B-Y.

We had a shock last Monday eve;
Indeed, twas near a fright.
Our baby ceased his usual tune,
And gave us "silent night."
W. D. G.

He Misses the Point.

My husband is devoted, kind,
With words and deeds and kisses;
But shocks my very soul at times
By calling me "the missus."
M. R. J.

Back to Nature

It shocks me, it shocks me,
I must confess,
The way that the girls
Of these modern times dress.

Did I say dress?
For mercy's sake, No!
It's the way they don't dress
That shocks me so.
A. B. H.

Rare Occurrence

When hubby springs a new excuse
For staying out at night,
I'm shocked into believing him
And say: "Turn out the light."

The Last Word in Paris Fashions

Mid-Winter Finds the Smartly Dressed Woman Donning Costumes Trimmed with Astrakan.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

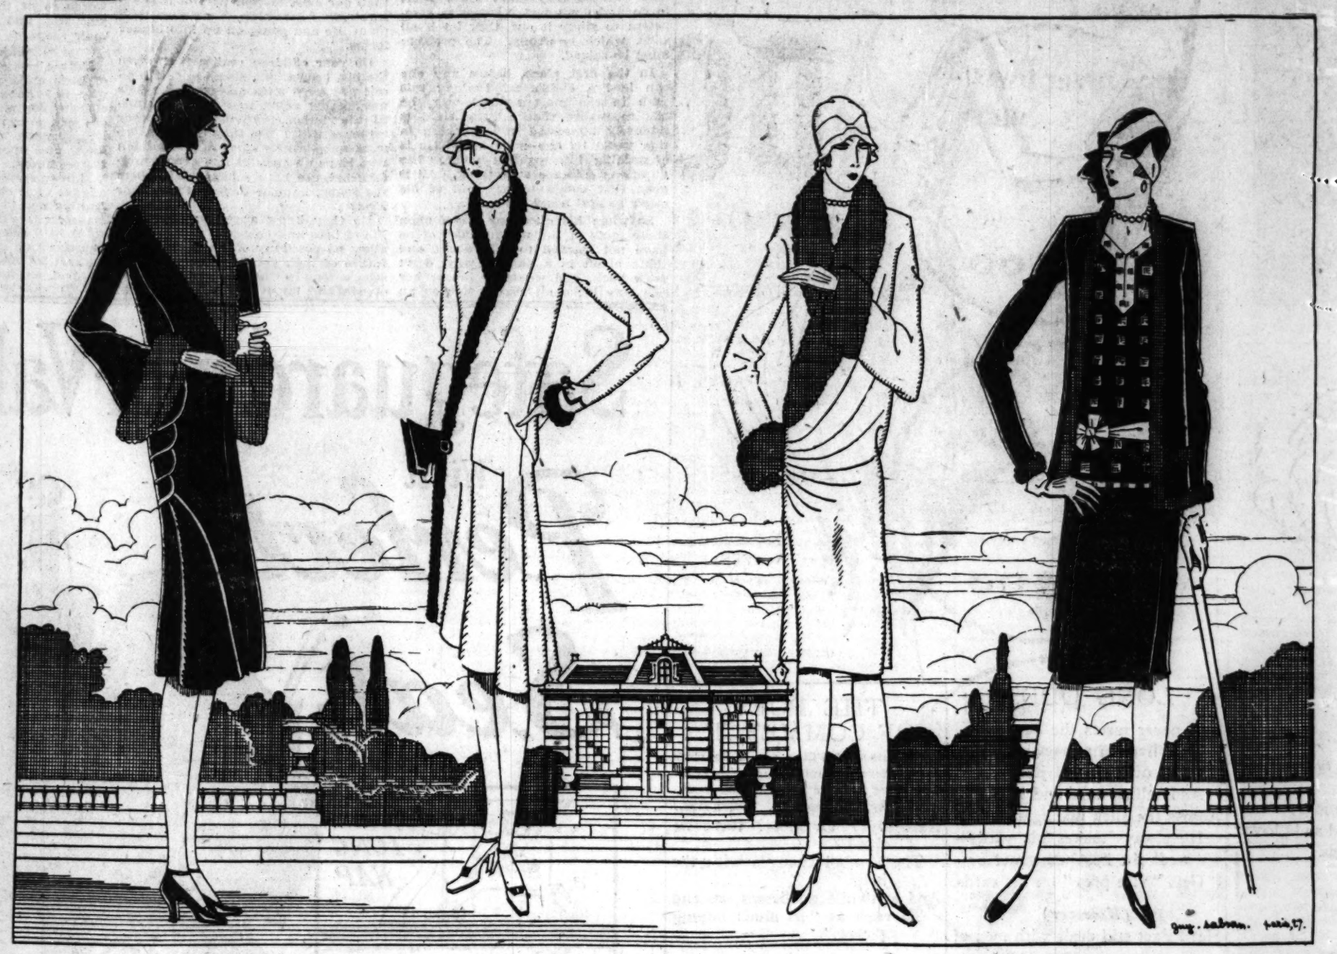
PARIS.—(Special Correspondence.)—One of the popular myths about fashion is the myth about the insatiable appetite of the Parisienne for novelty. She is pictured as a creature avid for the new in clothes, and continually changing what she has for something "just out." This pleasure in and desire for the different exists to a far greater extent in our younger and more restless women. The Parisienne retains the primitive feminine impulse to hang on to a good thing, even in clothes, once she gets it. Her adoption of styles is, thus, much more leisurely than that of the American. Witness her continued adherence to black, to beige hosiery, to the small hat throughout so many seasons, in spite of more colorful and newer offerings from the creators in the world's fashion mart.

Americans are coming around to her way of thinking in regard to the black costume for winter. The Parisienne clings to it because it is the surest short cut to a supreme chic sufficiently elastic to cover a multitude of occasions. As it is worn in Paris the black costume has cachet and distinction to a degree color rarely can attain. It is always right.

Black here is almost invariably combined in some way with astrakan fur for the coat and often, also, for the winter dress. This isn't anything to set the world on fire as news, but for the woman who must be well dressed and who has only a limited wardrobe, it is something to consider as a solution to most of her costume problems for daytime. The straight line black coat, well cut and trimmed with black or gray astrakan, is more often seen in smart places in Paris than any other. It is supremely practical when made of broadcloth, as it usually is, and it doesn't look dowdy as so many utilitarian clothes do, unfortunately. It has a smart, luxurious air and may be worn over so many different kinds of frocks that it has few rivals.

I observe, despite its usefulness, that the black broadcloth coat is chosen in a great number of cases by women who don't have to think at all of the practical side of the clothes they wear. They select it because it has a chic and aristocratic air, which is reason enough, indeed.

The first figure at the left in our sketch is an illustration of the most popular coat in Paris today among discriminating women. As you see, the lines are those familiar slender ones so becoming to the average feminine figure. The cut of this coat is sufficiently complicated to be distinctive, with curved bands at the back fitted across the hipline, and slightly flaring gores at the sides of the skirt portion.



This Beer model of black broadcloth and shaded gray astrakan, shown at the extreme left, is a successful coat for many occasions.

Drecoll trims the frock of black crepe marocain shown next, with narrow bands of astrakan. The diagonal lines and asymmetrical hemline of this model are distinguished details.

Curved tucks repeat the curved-line closing of the black astrakan collar on this Philippe et Gaston coat of black broadcloth, increasing the effect of slenderness at the hipline. Pictured third.

Last, the Parisienne also wears a simple suit of navy blue broadcloth trimmed with gray astrakan, from Nicole Groult. The sweater is of navy blue tricot with small motifs of gray and rose. The narrow sash belt and the bands at the neckline and hips are of gray.

Beer has made this coat of black broadcloth, the new very silky surfaced kind from Rodier, and has trimmed it with gray astrakan, shading from dark gray at the outside of the revers, collar and the base of the cuffs, to a light gray on the inside borders. The sleeves, which are fitted above the elbows and flaring below, increase a great deal the gracefulness of the lines. The astrakan of the collar extends to the hemline on the left side, being placed on the inside of the coat from the hipline.

Our third figure illustrates another, slightly different version of the black broadcloth and astrakan coat about which the Parisienne is so mad this winter. This Philippe et Gaston garment changes the same slender lines subtly by placing the bulk in the upper part of the silhouette, and draping the straight skirt in a wrap around manner. The closing of this coat is diagonal, the shawl collar of black astrakan extending from the left shoulder clear around on the right hip. This line is excellent as a device for slenderising the hipline, and Philippe et Gaston increases its effectiveness by a series of curved fanlike tucks that repeat the movement of the collar.

The sleeves are straight, comfortably roomy and cuffed with black astrakan. There is not much extreme novelty in such a coat, but there is a great deal of elegance, chic and real charm, to which trio mere newness is invariably sacrificed by the woman who is an expert in matters of dress.

A coat of this kind worn with a black satin frock is ideal for even the most formal afternoon affairs, and worn with a beige jersey dress and simple beige hat it makes an excellent wrap for the street in the morning. It may even be worn over an informal, sleeveless dinner dress of chiffon, lace or velvet, thus tripling its value to the woman who can have only one daytime coat.

Our second model is the astrakan trimmed frock a good many Parisiennes are wearing. Drecoll has made this dress of a flat crêpe, dull of surface. The long lines of the silhouette are diagonal, flaring toward the bottom at the left side, which droops lower than the right at the hemline. The side front seams and the under arm ones are diagonal, merging into flaring gores, between which are placed slightly circular godets, creating a beautiful asymmetrical line that gives cachet to the frock. The diagonal closing is outlined with a narrow band of astrakan, this band passing beneath a square buckle at the right hip. The sleeves are cuffed with the same fur and with the crêpe of the frock.

Our fourth model shows the astrakan trimmed suit that is seen often around Paris. This Nicole Groult model varies the color scheme a bit, combining navy blue broadcloth with gray astrakan bands, a color combination that will be flattering to a woman whose skin is too sallow to support black. The jacket is of the cardigan type, banded all around with gray astrakan, and lined with gray tricot. The inset pockets are also banded with the fur.

The skirt of this model has a wide panel at the front, ending in deep plaits at the sides, so that while the lines are straight and narrow the skirt is comfortably wide. It is made of navy blue broadcloth. The sweater blouse is of dark blue tricot, with small square motifs of gray, navy and rose.

The band at the neck and the hips is of gray tricot with figures in dark blue and rose, and the narrow knitted sash is also of gray. This suit is nominally sports, but is suitable for general daytime wear. The wool lining to the jacket and the fur trimming give sufficient warmth so that it is practical to wear in mid-winter.

EXIT—STAGE ENTRANCE.

(The show flops. Mamie Hickey finds herself stranded with two days' pay, a business college diploma and a half stocked makeup box.)

The lady star is smashing things back in her dressing room;
The sheriff strikes the last act set while stage hands stand and gloom;
Our pale director hands the show's fat treasurer a clout.
They mix to fight
With scratch and bite—
A spotlight flickers out.

Tears make a mess of makeup as Yvettes and Geraldines
Pack up their little stepins (that's a lace-edged word for jeans).
The tenor's kissed routine good-by; the backer gets his slam;
Why rage or sigh
Or alibi?
All that is said means—damn.

LONG ODDS.

One never meets the hero gay
Who lives in newsstand tale,
All full of luck and juniper
And selling talk and kale.
Across the slick mahogany
He always makes his yards—
He weds the boss' daughter or
Gets "vice pres" on his cards.

(However)
Hard Fact still deals with men of toil
Whose destiny can harry them;
The world is full of bookkeepers,
And some one has to marry them.

THE POET OF COMMERCE.

(Cyrano and Villon would be stars in a modern advertising agency—probably hired to write perfume and washing machine accounts. . . . Overheard.)

Rare toys? Or idols? Were we that?
The symbol changes with the hour
And erstwhile goddesses descend
To rank as "so much buying power."

Love lost the lure of glamoured words
And poets now are prospered lads
Who write—to catch a lady's eye
And pin her fancy to—their ads.

YOU AND YOUR CHILDREN by MRS. GLADYS HUNTINGTON BEVANS

Following the Trail Together.

CONVINCED, as we showed ourselves to be in last Sunday's article, that children should understand the natural, fundamental facts of life and its reproduction, many fathers and mothers still are completely in the dark as to how to go about enlightening their childen. And because they don't know what to do and don't feel themselves competent to study it out, they let it all slide, which is wrong. The problem must be solved.

In the first place, before any one can lead a child's mind along this path in the most natural way, he has to realize that a little child is intensely interested in everything in this world he has come into. He is a walking interrogation point. His questions embrace everything. All is grist that comes to the mill of his eager mental acquisitiveness.

So when his questions touch upon those facts of life which many of us have not learned to talk about and think about in a natural way, don't draw back, and whatever his or her age may be, don't regard this as an inordinate curiosity. It is a very normal curiosity and if you can't feel that it is, you're the wrong person to tell him anything.

Such curiosity has no more significance and is no more persistent than his curiosity about anything else.

Learning from Nature.

As to supplementing their direct questions with general information, let that cover all other forms of life than our own. Every part of it is absorbingly interesting, beginning with plant life and going on up into higher forms.

Do your children realize that when the big, brown bumbling bee gets himself powdered with golden pollen he's unwittingly going to fertilize the pistil (the mother, the female) of another flower with it? Do they know the almost unbelievable story of the salmon who leaps up streams and even waterfalls because nature has put in them the strong impulse to perpetuate their kind?

Do they know anything about the life of bees and how it is organized to allow no possiblity of a slip-up on the future of their race? Have they ever seen a female moth emerge from her cocoon and lay her eggs immediately so that, if she does get her wings smashed up or meets with some animal whose menu she's on, it really doesn't matter, because she has done what nature intended her to—reproduced her species?

Have they been in close touch with dogs or cats that have had puppies or kittens? Let them learn these things and how nature has created everything male and female and implanted in them the urge to reproduce their kind. You will have to choose your words to fit their understanding, but you will find the idea well within their scope.

Older Children.

Naturally one answers the questions of little children differently from the way one answers the questions of older children. How you do that no one can prescribe exactly—it depends largely upon how much they already know and upon the child's mind and temperament.

Many parents who might otherwise answer their children's questions quite frankly are held back by a fear: "If I answer this question, how do I know what he'll ask next? How do I know how far he'll go?"

Don't let that worry you. Let him go just as far as he will. There's nothing he will ask you that you shouldn't answer. If you don't know, tell him you'll find out and that you'll find out and do so. Or if you feel that it doesn't matter, because she has done few things he will understand when he is older and you sincerely to tell him these things when he comes, explain it to him in a way.

This handling of this subject which there have been for generations a dangerous false modesty, is a mistake many mothers and fathers who want to enlighten their children perplexity has been the cause of books being written with the helping. But few of those good. A well known psychologist long ago, when asked to one, said, "I cannot."

The United States government had prepared under its direction simply written, helpful booklets are obtainable by any one at inal cost. I know they would great assistance to fathers and ers who did not feel sure of with their children about tant and interesting subject have a deep desire to follow together. Information about booklets is available through column.

How to Order Clotilde Patterns.

Write your name and address plainly on dotted lines, giving number and size of such patterns as you want. Inclose 10 cents in stamps or coin [coin preferred; wrap it carefully] for each number, and address your order to Clotilde, Chicago Daily Tribune.

HOW TO USE THE PATTERNS

AN attractive cap and apron are shown here, the apron having strap extensions that cross at the center back and button there. Pattern No. 833 is cut in one piece, covers the dress well in the front, and in fact gives ample protection all around.

After the apron is cut, all the edges are bound, and it will be well before starting to do the binding to baste and stitch small pieces of the apron material where the buttonholes and buttons are to be put. If a single thickness of the material is all that is used, there soon will be tears. Baste these pieces to the straps and apron corners all around, turning the material in across the lower edge of each piece and stitching. The binding will hold the pieces in place around the edges.

It is possible to buy binding in all colors at the notion counter of any store, and this will make the finishing much easier.

Two large patch pockets are set on the front, and these add to the jaunty appearance of the apron, and are a great convenience. Green sateen, bound in a deeper shade of the same color, is pictured. Printed sateen, chintz, chambray, striped percale, and English prints can be chosen for service.

Pattern No. 3010 is a design for a dress for a girl that is just as particular as it is dainty. The two piece skirt is shirred and attached to a long waisted bodice closed at the center back. The cunning bolero has kimono sleeves and the neck is finished with a flat, round collar. Both the sleeve edges and the bottom of the bolero are shown with scalloped edges, but if you prefer, they can be made straight. There is something so pretty, though, about the scallops that I imagine most mothers will be willing to do the extra work that binding these edges will entail.

A straight, wide hem finishes the bottom of the skirt and if one of the wash materials is used, this may be stitched on the machine. If any other material is used, the hem should be put in by hand.

A French blue wool jersey with the underbodice and collar of tan, or a dark green velveteen, combined with flesh colored silk crêpe, or plain flannel combined with plaid are all exceptionally smart.

All wool challis is shown in delightful printed designs, and nothing could be more attractive or practical than to make the dress of this, using one of the washable crêpe de chines for binding. Such a dress will launder beautifully, making it an ideal choice for school wear.

The deep French V, extending to the waist line, makes the design of pattern No. 755 particularly suitable for large figures. The inverted plaits in the front add a graceful flare to the hemline, and the one piece sleeves cut rather wide at the hand, are given novel treatment, being set as they are into narrow bands at the wrists and allowing the extra width to flare beyond.

The back of the dress is in one piece and quite straight, while in the front the upper and lower parts are cut separately and joined. Perforations on the front skirt section show just where the inverted plait is to be laid each side of the center. Lay this front section out smooth on a table, and after the markings have been clearly put in lay the plaits from top to bottom. Baste them in place, basting from the top down.

There are two shoulder tucks on each side of the front. Perforations and instructions given with the pattern show exactly how they are to be laid and stitched. The fronts are underfaced and rolled back, forming revers. After this much has been done join the waist and skirt, following the directions carefully.

It will be pretty to have the facing, vestee, and sleeve bands made of something contrasting. Printed velvet with plain Canton faille crêpe contrasting, black crêpe satin with the dull side for the trimming contrast, wine red sheer velveteen, and supple tweed are smart combinations.

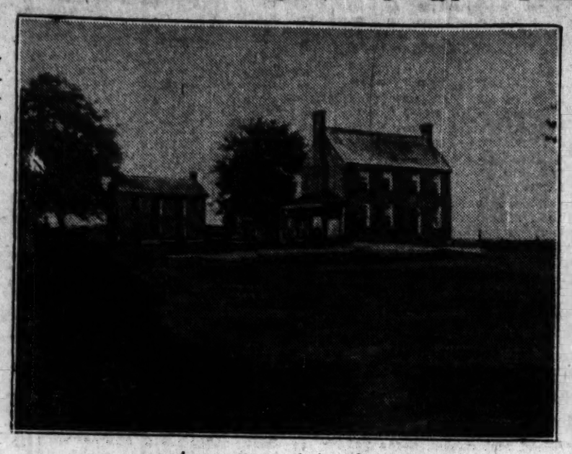
HISTORICAL AMERICA by CLIFFORD RAYMOND

Appomattox

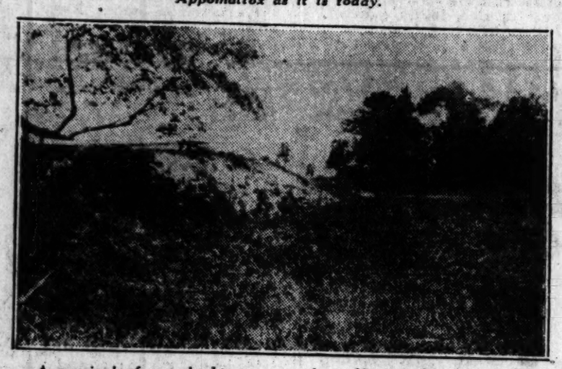
APPOMATTOX is on the highway from Richmond and from Petersburg to Lynchburg. The Appomattox river rises from two small forks near it, and the James is a mile to the north. It is Piedmont country and Lynchburg, at the head of the Shenandoah valley, is not far away.

The present village of Appomattox is on the concrete. The vestiges of old Appomattox Courthouse are a mile or so off the main highway. In the nearby region they call it the Surrender Grounds.

Appomattox is a symbol in the life of the republic. It may be the greatest. It is the token of the union to which each state now agrees without reservation. The civil war was not the first question of the reserved or presumed right of withdrawal from the common bond. Nor prior to the civil war was South Carolina, with John C. Calhoun, the first to point to the possible use of the option. New England in 1814 had run its fingers over the cement to show how it crumbled and fell away if a state wanted to exercise its right to withdraw.



Appomattox as it is today.



A survival of a redoubt, now on the golf grounds which preserve much of the battlefield.

A WASTED SANCTUARY

At Appomattox these reservations end, inasmuch as now all states willingly consent to the decree of fate and destiny there recorded, the spot to which the event is attached might be a national sanctuary. To an extent from which it derives a sort of spiritual significance it is a waste.

Appomattox is a closed room in the house. On April 9, 1865, Grant, returning from his first meeting with Lee, stopped the booming of the 100 guns of his troops and begun to fire in celebration of the surrender of the army of northern Virginia. The guns were stopped. The smoke curled away. There was silence. It endures at the surrender ground today.

Appomattox remained outside the subsequent rancors and hatreds. It has not had any share in triumphs or memorials. The parade has passed it by. Weeds are its laurels. It is a name passing intangibly into the history of the nation, an event without a place, a symbol without substance.

THE SOUTH'S TABLETS

It contains now a few old houses, some empty, some occupied. There are patches of corn, tangles of vines, trees and briars, patches of pasture, and small metal tablets. The south, which has been too proud wholly to forget, has one small marker, inscribed:

"Here, on Sunday, April 9, 1865, after four years of heroic struggle in defense of principles believed fundamental to the existence of our government, Lee surrended 9,000 men, the remnant of an army still unconquered in spirit, to 118,000 men under Grant." The figures are wrong, but that seems unimportant.

Another tablet marks the spot of the courthouse, which was burned in 1892. There is a tablet indicating the site "of the house owned and occupied by Wilbur McLean in which Gen. U. S. Grant, U. S. A., and Gen. Robert E. Lee, C. S. A., met and agreed upon the terms of the surrender of the army of northern Virginia on the afternoon of Sunday, April 9, 1865. The house was taken down in 1893 with a view to its removal and reërection elsewhere."

A few piles of brick in a deep tangle of locusts and vines remain to show where the house was.

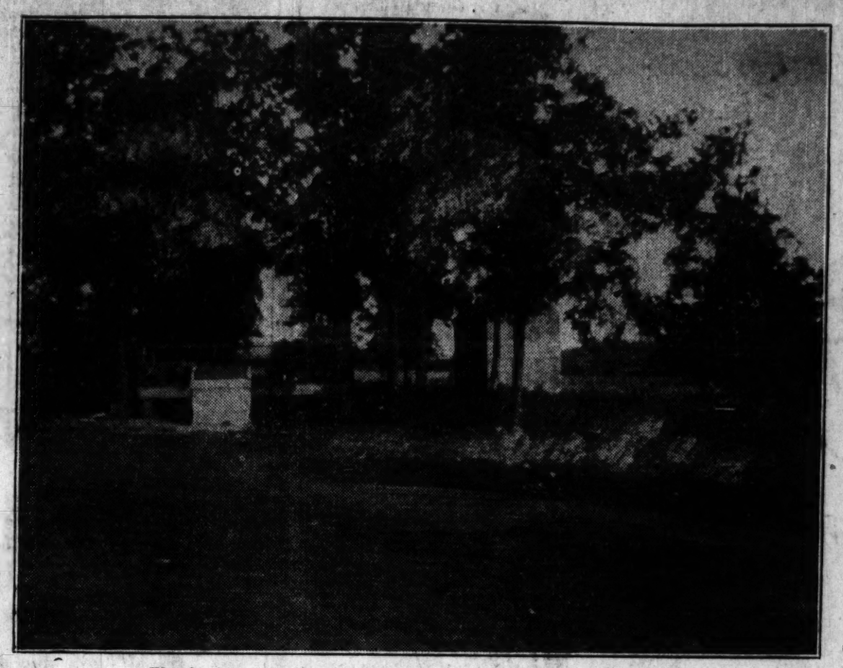
GEN. GRANT'S VERSION

The story of the meeting at the McLean house, as Grant told it in his memoirs, was:

". . . I found him [Lee] at the house of a Mr. McLean, at Appomattox Court House, with Col. Marshall, one of his staff officers, awaiting my arrival. The head of his column was occupying a hill, on a portion of which was an apple orchard, beyond a little valley which separated it from that on the crest of which Sheridan's forces were drawn up in line of battle to the south.

"Before stating what took place between Gen. Lee and myself I will give all there is of the story of the famous apple trees.

"Wars produce many stories of fiction, some of which are told until they are believed to be true. The war of the rebellion was no exception to this rule, and the story of the apple tree is one of those fictions based on a slight foundation of fact. As I have said, there was an apple orchard on the side of the hill occupied by the confederate forces. Running diagonally up the hill was a wagon road, which at one point ran very near one of the trees, so that the wheels of vehicles had on that side cut off the roots of this tree, leaving a little enbankment. Gen. Babcock of my staff reported to me that when he first met Gen. Lee he was sitting upon this enbankment with his feet in the road below and his back resting against the tree. The story had no other foundation than that. Like many other stories, it would be very good if it were only true.



The Confederate marker at Appomattox near the site of the courthouse.

GREETINGS

"I had known Gen. Lee in the old army, and had served with him in the Mexican war, but did not suppose, owing to the difference in our age and rank, that he would remember me, while I would more naturally remember him distinctly, because he was the chief of staff of Gen. Scott in the Mexican war.

"When I had left camp that morning I had not expected so soon the result that was then taking place, and consequently was in rough garb. I was without a sword, as I usually was when on horseback in the field, and wore a soldier's blouse for a coat, with the shoulder straps of my rank to indicate to the army who I was. When I went into the house I found Gen. Lee. We greeted each other and, after shaking hands, took our seats. I had my staff with me, a good portion of whom were in the room during the whole of the interview.

"What Gen. Lee's feelings were I do not know. As he was a man of much dignity, with an impassive face, it was impossible to say whether he felt inwardly glad that the end had finally come, or felt sad over the result and was too manly to show it. Whatever his feelings, they were entirely concealed from my observation; but my own feelings, which had been quite jubilant on the receipt of his letter, were sad and depressed. I felt like anything rather than rejoicing at the downfall of a foe who had fought so long and valiantly, and had suffered so much for a cause, though that cause was, I believe, one of the worst for which a people ever fought and one for which there was the least excuse. I do not question, however, the sincerity of the great mass of those who were opposed to us.

"Gen. Lee was dressed in a full uniform, which was entirely new, and was wearing a sword of considerable value—very likely the sword which had been presented by the state of Virginia. At all events, it was an entirely different sword from the one that would ordinarily be worn in the field. In my rough traveling suit, the uniform of a private with the straps of a lieutenant general, I must have contrasted very strangely with a man so handsomely dressed, six feet high, and of faultless form. But this was not a matter that I thought of until afterward.

"We soon fell into a conversation about old army times. He remarked that he remembered me very well in the old army, and I told him that as a matter of course I remembered him perfectly, but from the difference in our rank and years [there being about sixteen years' difference in our ages], I had thought it very likely that I had not attracted his attention sufficiently to be remembered by him after such a long interval. Our conversation grew so pleasant that I almost forgot the object of our meeting.

"After the conversation had run on in this style for some time, Gen. Lee called my attention to the object of our meeting, and said that he had asked for this interview for the purpose of getting from me the terms I proposed to give his army. I said that I meant merely that his army should lay down their arms, not to take them up again during the continuance of the war unless duly and properly exchanged. He said that he had so understood my letter."

The little confederate graveyard.

THOUGHTFULNESS

No capitulation of surrender was signed. After the talk about the old army, Lee again asked what terms Grant would offer. Grant asked Gen. Parker, his staff secretary, for writing material, and wrote a letter addressed to Lee informing him that a surrender of arms, artillery, and public property, with officers giving their individual parole and with the men paroled by companies or regiments, would be accepted. As he wrote he thought of the need the southern soldiers would have for their horses when they were home again. He exempted the horses from the property to be surrendered. He exempted side arms in consideration of the possessors' feelings.

Lee read the letter and said the thoughtfulness regarding the horses would have a happy effect on his army. He wrote a letter accepting the terms, adding in comment to Grant that in the confederate army the cavalrymen and artillery men used their own and not government horses. Grant said that was not covered in his letter but the men, being small farmers, would need their horses and he would order that any man claiming a horse or mule should be allowed to take it home with him.

A SECOND MEETING

Lee said he would be obliged to ask for rations and forage. His provision trains had been captured. Grant asked him for how many men. Lee replied about 20,000, and Grant authorized the rationing. His own army was getting forage from the country.

The next morning Grant was going to Washington, but before he went—"I thought I would like to see Gen. Lee again." He rode out with a bugler and a staff officer with a white flag. Lee, learning who wanted to see him, rode out between the lines and the two generals had "a very pleasant conversation of over a half hour." Grant urged Lee to counsel submission on the part of other confederate armed forces to prevent further loss. That would require consultation with the confederate president first, the Virginian said, but he thought the south would be persuaded of the uselessness of further resistance.

Federal officers obtained permission of Lee to visit confederate officers they had known in the "old army" when the states were all in the family. Grant went on to Washington. There was no bitterness then. Reconstruction was yet to come.

SILENCE

Appomattox went to sleep and no one raises a voice there in moralizing or memorializing. There are some young children in the families which live by cultivating the garden patches. They have Minie balls if the visitor wants them. They can find the metal tablets in the corn and weeds. One marks the position of a confederate battery to which legend attributes the last shot, another the position of some federal troops. There is a deserted general store, an occupied house which had been a hotel, a little confederate graveyard in which half the markers read: "C. S. A. Unknown Soldier."

Appomattox is neither a tragedy nor a triumph. It is merely a closed room.

PERFECTION BY ELIMINATION by Persis Standish

The Formal Dinner, Like Royalty, Is Rare; the Smaller, Simpler, Smarter Affair Is the Thing

AT the beginning of the winter season letters come in about the etiquette of dinner parties and are full of queries about serving, menus, etc. Many of the letters are about "formal dinners." Why formal? Formality, like royalty, is becoming scarce, if not extinct. It is only fitting when it inhabits palaces, and then the dwellers therein soon grow bored with it.

Some persons, I think, are suffering from a confusion of terms. If by formality they mean dignity, then dignity is a guest that can be invited to a cottage to dine as well as to the cardinal or the Vatican and is just as much at home there.

Giving a dinner party of a number of courses is an art that requires other vast experience or a special talent to master. It requires more ingredients than those that go to make up the most complex of French menus. It requires, for instance, conversation, beauty of equipment, ingenuity in decoration, careful, efficient and smart service, and food that would make a dyspeptic hungry.

And on top of all these is required that hovering, intangible, exquisite spirit of hospitality that is omniscient, omnipresent and charitable, and which, with all these divine qualities, is yet a human thing. Such is the perfect dinner party and to its perfections each guest must contribute his share. Of course, the hostess must, first of all, select guests who have something to contribute either in spiritual, moral or mundane qualities. But having selected them, she expects every man to do his duty.

Be Agreeable.

So, if you are invited to a dinner party and you are a man, put in your most scintillating buttons and your most glittering mots. Expect to find each woman present a sister of Minerva or Helen, and tell her so—tell Helen, of course, that she is a sister of Minerva, and Minerva that she is a sister of Helen.

If you are a woman, burnish your hair, massage your face, put on your most attractive and subtle frock, the one that is too picturesque for cafés and yet too simple for the opera. Attune your ear to hear in even stupid male conversation the subtleties of Machiavelli and the lyrics of Abelard. Attune your laugh to respond like silver bells to the termination of anecdote.

Dispense with perfume if it is more than very faint, for perfume, dear sisters, has spoiled many a capricious appetite. I can speak with authority on this subject, having been told so by no less than ten males of varying status social and chronological. I have a great many male relatives of varying ages and tastes, and not fewer than five of them have at one time or another expressed decided views on the subject of perfume at meals.

On one occasion a beautiful and rather celebrated woman was dining with us, and my brother, the eldest male of the family, was, of course, to sit next her. Just before dinner he said to my mother, "Would you mind sitting her next to Blank?" (He named his younger brother.) "She made me sick at breakfast with that horrible scent of hers and I'd like to eat my dinner."

Aim at Perfection.

But to get back to the perfect dinner party, perhaps such perfection as one aims at is only accomplished on Olympus or in Valhalla. (Now I somehow have the impression Valhallesque table manners must be bad—too much swilling of celestial beer and too much attention to heavenly skittles.) However, the thing to do is to aim at perfection, and one may hit many a delightful mark lower down.

The way to aim at perfection is to aim at simplicity by elimination, to say to oneself, "I cannot have it thus and so, so I will not try it so and thus. Instead of having seven imperfect courses I will have three perfect ones. Instead of having twelve guests I will have four—or six. Instead of having three indifferent waitresses I will have one efficient one. Instead of having elaborate decorations of too exotic a character I will have a simple bowl of maidenhair and two candles.

"Instead of having too much on the table I will have too little. Instead of having that brilliant Jones girl, who is delightful for half an hour and a bore for two hours, I will have Maggie Brown, who is such a good listener and who has that ulvine gift of common sense.

"Instead of having small green strawberries out of season I will have ripe, luscious pineapple which is in. Instead of serving Turkish coffee (which I do not know how to make like Mrs. Blank de Blank, who does). I will serve the variety which is made with cold water and a tablespoon for each cup, and which is amber clear when a quarter of an egg is added thereto.

Resolved Not to Fret.

"I will read what Persis Standish promises to say about whether the plates should be removed from left to right and where the salad fork should be, and I will drill my waitress in these things and then forget them on the night of the dinner.

"I will not have about me that air of a clucking hen that rattles the servants and makes guests uncomfortable." Do this and your problem is solved.

BEAUTY ANSWERS by Antoinette Donnelly

What's your beauty ill? Too fat? Too thin? Dry on hair? Oily hair, oily skin, freckles, pimples, or blackheads? Flat chested or flat footed? Write to me. I have a tonic, a diet, or a set of exercises for what ails you, and you're welcome to them and to all the advice I can give you. If you wish a personal reply, send a stamped, addressed envelope. Address Antoinette Donnelly, The Tribune, Chicago.

MISS K. B. X.: YOU SHOULD brush your teeth every morning and night, and if possible after each meal. It is well to have two toothbrushes and use them alternately, giving each brush a chance to dry thoroughly. The mouth wash is an excellent one to use. It is recommended by dentists. Send a stamped addressed envelope for my booklet on "Mouth Hygiene."

L. R.: TO CORRECT ROUNDED shoulders you must learn to stand and sit correctly. Stand with the abdomen in, chest out, and think of your back as in a straight line from the waist to the head. Allow the shoulders to fall naturally. Do not draw them back. Arms and hands should be relaxed. Try walking in this way several times a day for a period of ten or fifteen mintes each time, and send a stamped, addressed envelope for exercises to overcome the round shoulders.

BROWN EYES: THIN PEOPLE require an abundant supply of energy food or fuel foods, fats, starch, and sugar. They need to secure the largest number of calories in the most digestible form. Butter and oil are the best fats for them, as they are not likely to disturb digestion. Send stamped, addressed envelope for food to be eaten.

MISS M.: THERE IS NO WAY OF decreasing the size of the joints of the fingers, but by building up the rest of the hand the joints are made to appear smaller. Massage the hands with olive oil or a good cold cream. Swinging Indian clubs will be found helpful in developing the tissues.

MARTHA P.: STANDARD weight for a girl of 16, 5 feet 1, is 110 pounds. It will not be necessary, nor would it be wise for you to reduce, but you may eat sparingly of candy and sweets. They are most fattening.

Doris Blake's Answers to Love Problems

Have you a perplexing love affair on which you need the counsel of a friend? Write to Doris Blake, care The Tribune, Chicago. If you wish a personal reply please send a stamped addressed envelope.

Up to You.

"Dear Miss Blake: A certain young man has been asking me for dates. He seemed interested but as he had a steady girl I hesitated. Finally, I consented to go with him. After a pleasant evening together, he asked how long it would be before I would let him come back again. I laughed and went into the house without answering.

"He hesn't mentioned it again. Would it be proper to ask him to call?

"FLAPPER."

You weren't very encouraging, so naturally he didn't ask you again. It's up to you to let him know you'd be glad to have him come again, dear.

Apologize.

"Dear Miss Blake: My friend and I had an argument. I am willing to give in, but fear he will snub me.

"HEARTBROKEN."

If you were to blame, or you're equally guilty, don't hesitate to say so.

THE RETURN OF THE FEMININE

Some Reasons Why Woman Is Laying Aside the Mannish Costume and Taking Up the Frills Again

by Doris Blake

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

A MAN was holding forth on "woman's present tendency towards masculinity."

"You surprise me," said an objector. "To my way of thinking, she is becoming more and more feminine. Look at the dress of the women in business, for instance. Compare it with the mannish clothes of their early entrance into the field of competition. It's only a freak you see nowadays in shirt and forbiddingly tailored suit. Take woman's patronage of beauty parlors as another example. Her cosmetic bills are mounting daily higher and higher. Surely these are not tendencies towards masculinity."

"O, so far as her personal self is concerned, yes—possibly she is reverting to type. But as to her rights, freedom, privileges recently won—wouldn't you say she's stolen man's weapons——"

"Yes," said an intruder, "and she's scared to death, herself, of what is going to happen with them in her hands."

The intruder proceeded to relate another one of those oft-heard tales of a great financial success missing so many of the joys dear to women by playing her masculine rôle too well.

Immediately the subject was directed into the channel of what the future holds for woman—whether she has been traveling in a circle that, at some early date, will bring her back to where she started.

The sex antagonism that has grown concurrently with woman's progress the woman herself does not like. She loses too much through it. The old biological urge keeps cropping up and calling for treatment as a woman, a slightly dependent woman. And the knowledge that in fighting a man with his own weapons she is hopelessly outclassed, discourages her. So the question is constantly rising in a woman's mind as to whether it is not better in the long run to play the woman game, even on a man's job.

There is always a tinge of bitterness in the voice of a woman who has "asked no favors" when she speaks of the fluffy headed little creature who gets what she wants by playing the feminine.

Are women learning slowly that they succeed better when they stick to their own guns?

"Unfair" Competition.

A story is current of a clever, English authoress, sculptress, journalist, and beauty. She tells that in journalism she was unpopular with the men against whom she had to compete. They said that she used her femininity to get results that were impossible to them as mere males.

"Unfair competition," was their verdict.

Blandly admitting the charge, the woman argued: "But what was I to do? If I had not exploited the last ounce of value to be got out of my friendships and the fact that I was a woman, the men would have beaten me. I had a living to get for myself and my children. Not to have used all my weapons would have been a criminal kind of chivalry."

Unfair or wise, women are finding out that the best way to beat a man at his own game is to lure him on with their own.

There is a French aphorism to the effect that "a clever woman never meets a man on his own ground," a reason advanced by a well known Parisian designer for the unreadiness of his countrywomen to adopt sports clothes.

"The best she can ever hope to achieve is a bad imitation of men. With her own abundant equipment, why be a bad imitation of anything?" the designer naively argued.

And that, trained observers confide, is what is going on in the minds of a good many of the so-called independents whose motto heretofore was to eliminate sex entirely in the field of competition.

Not that there are any signs on the horizon of a speedy return to the bad old days when one could be "poor but genteel," or when one had to accept marriage as the only course open.

But there is something slightly ominous in the steadily increasing acceptance of the more graceful frock of an earlier period. If you look back over history, nothing, you will find, epitomizes the spirit of a period as its dress. Whether the clothes produce the period, or vice versa, does not matter. Dress is a frank reflection of the moment's psychology.

The Ultimate in Elimination.

Woman, in her dress, has reached the ultimate limit of elimination. Nothing more can be decently eliminated or abbreviated. So alteration in style is bound to come. It is unlikely that the trailing skirt will reappear any more than the Victorian type of woman, but dress already shows that "we are rounding our curve into femininity again," as an English writer puts it.

"The significant thing," this writer says, "is that you cannot be a Madame Pompadour in a one-piece bathing suit, or a Cleopatra in a stiff little business suit, and neither can you be a boy—even an imitation one—in a real girl's frock."

How much the man is responsible for the temporary phase of masculinity that swept the post-war girlhood, it is difficult to say. One authority argues that women could not be expected to be women or even pretend to be clinging and semi-helpless when so many men are giving bad imitations of flappers. There is nothing to cling to and the work has to be done, and if women are getting sick of playing at being boys and men it is because so many of the male sex are lamentably incapable of playing the part, themselves.

"It is the effeminacy and incompetency of so many modern men that is creating seventy-five per cent of the so-called masculinity among women," says our authority. "Look about. See the number of women who are the best 'men' of their families—the number of women who are looked to by their families to keep them going."

Those who have been the best "men" will tell you that it is a weary, rending business that would be left quickly enough to men if they were fit to shoulder the burden. Being woman, it is impossible not to let the head drop wearily into the hands and pray that the burden be lifted.

The TRIBUNE COOK BOOK

The Cook, with Her Cookies, Is Imitating the Fruit Trees in Giving Us Sweet Food Pieces to Eat Out of Hand.

All recipes have been scientifically tested by Miss Eddington with current market materials and are endorsed by her.

By Jane Eddington

A COOKIE is a convenient and diverting dainty. How could the old eggnogg makers have got on without it? Pleasant drinks of many sorts, and ices and cheeses, are enhanced by a little sweet piece as a companion. And when cookies are freshly made they have an alluring aroma, a delicious flavor, and other gratifying qualities which they usually do not have when they have aged, but there are exceptions—fruit cookies, like fruit cakes, may require ripening. But the pleasant sweet smell and taste of a freshly baked sugar cookie should yield impetus to drive one to make them at home. How to begin? We are about, and below, to suggest the sour cream drop cookie as a starting point.

But the making of drop cookies is no great help to one who would make rolled out dough cookies, though just as good experience can be got in baking drop cookies as in baking rolled cookies, and, since the baking of cookies may make such a difference in the quality of these sweet bits, a good experience with dropped cookies is not to be despised.

Yet we must remember that a good cookie recipe, whether for dropped or rolled cookies, is but a starting point. Extremely poor cookies may be the finish. And when the recipe is poor, what can be done? It is too bad that there are a confusing number of cookie recipes to be found—fine, good, bad, and indifferent. Even an inexperienced cook might feel baffled when she started out for new experience unless she gritted her teeth and put all her wits to work.

To Make Cookies Soft.

Thin and crisp cookies have their place, but so do those which are soft and thick. The thin sort come from expert rolling and baking. Most people get cookies half way between these two.

To get the soft and somewhat thick cookies the dough must be worked as little as possible, patted out, and not rolled thin. The softest cookies can never be secured by taking the scraps from one cutting, even when these are molded with a fresh ball of dough, as is often done.

How to Get a Dough.

A famous cookie maker once wrote me that she thought she had an infallible rule for getting her dough of the right consistency. She stirred flour in until the dough was quite thick; then she used an ordinary dinner knife and cut in flour until the dough would not stick when she pressed down upon it. Then she let the dough stand in a cold place over night, but not in a refrigerator. A cold and dry room is better when the dough stands and slowly stiffens, but ice can be used for quick work—on ice. This rule seems to me to be helpful, but there are other ways yet.

This rule went along with the statement that the author of it had just made eleven different batches of cookies for Christmas gifts—1,600 cookies in all. And the eleven batches did not at all represent her variety, for she had collected many cutters and forms and she decorated the tops of her cookies in the most various ways so as to make them not only attractive to look at but to vary in flavor or taste.

Substitutes for Doughs.

The inexperienced cook who has not learned to make and roll a cookie dough can use a drop cookie batter with a bit more flour; make this up into a roll, chill it, and then cut slices from it to bake. Such cookies are also made from chilled doughs and have names like "ice box cookies" and "sausage cookies."

To get a dough that will roll out as thin as a wafer and then to roll it requires skill and experience of somewhat the same sort as pie crust making. One who wishes to excel in either or both of these expertnesses can gain skill for one when she works with the other.

On Baking Cookies.

Some doughs and batters will stand more heat than others, and the amount of butter used influences this matter. An experiment has recently been going on in this vicinity with one single batter given many environments and various additions. When it was a drop batter and cooked on an ascending heat the cookies were thick. When it was baked on a descending heat they were thin.

The maker, who gave them much loving attention and thought, was amazed at her results, thinking it was extraordinary that blood sisters, as she called them, should vary so much in appearance. Then she went on and made other members of her final family with many "in-laws." As she cooked them she hovered near the oven much of the time. The cooking time is rather brief for cookies, and she could see through the glass door, helped by a flash light, what the heat was doing to her prodigies and she enjoyed seeing. You see, cookie making can be recommended as a fine diversion, if approached unnervously and with curiosity and ambition.

Sour Cream Cookies.

To call a cookie a sour cream cookie is not to be at all specific, for there can be found many formulas with this name and with directions for cookies in which one of the ingredients is sour cream. In some, brown sugar is used. Most of them have eggs, but we can get good effects without them. Sometimes graham flour is used instead of white, and there are barley cookies, also. Fruit and chocolate and seeds, like caraway, are also made with sour cream.

Sour Cream Recipe.

The base for many variations made as described above "On Baking Cookies" was the following:

One-half cup of sour cream, one-half cup sugar, one cup flour, one-third teaspoon soda, one-half teaspoon salt, one-fourth teaspoon nutmeg. Whip the cream until it is smooth. Save out half a teaspoon of it in which to dissolve soda and beat into it one-half cup of sugar, the salt and nutmeg. Before adding the flour to this mixture sift it twice, and mix it in a little at a time, getting finally a stiff dough into which mix the dissolved soda.

Take up teaspoons of the dough and drop them on a buttered and floured tin. Bake them from ten to twelve minutes on either an ascending or descending temperature, according to what you want. Hot ovens do one thing to cookies and cooler ones another.

Experiments.

First the above drop batter was experimented with. Some drops of it baked on a descending temperature, starting with 400 degrees and rapidly descending to 350, being spread out with a wet spoon first could be rolled while they were hot. Some which were baked on an ascending temperature starting at 325 ran together and were like a thin tea cake. Five different kinds of hermitlike cookies were secured with this sort of batter, thickened up only as much as the flour used on raisins and fruit would do so, but a rather generous amount was used—four tablespoons to the above with four tablespoons of chopped raisins and four of chopped walnuts.

Then, to one part of the fruited batter, a little clove and cinnamon, melted butter and brown sugar were added, and to another part some molasses and a teaspoon of pulverized coffee. The total number of changes were enough to be confusing, but they did not show how the batter could be pleasantly varied by quite slight effort.

Finally, one of the fruited batters, thickened, was formed into a roll, chilled for an hour, then cut across with a silver fruit knife dipped in hot water. The thin slices, when baked, were cookie shaped, although the experiment was tried of perfecting the shape with fingers wet in cold water.

Sugar Cookie Dough.

The following recipe yields a high grade cookie, or a base that is excellent to use when many forms are to be made with different cutters and many varieties secured by different icings and garnishes. It requires quick skill in massing the dough to make it sufficiently compact. Squeeze it hard if you cannot get it right, but only for once or twice: Two egg yolks, one and one-fourth cups of flour, three-eighths cup of butter, one-fourth cup sugar, flavor to suit. Combine the egg yolks, flour, butter and sugar, and work the whole as a pie crust is worked or mixed, then when the whole can be massed into a dough of uniform consistency, knead it for fifteen minutes, or until it is rather shining and stretchy. (This is a German way, and the formula is German and excellent.)

Next, put it away, covered up in a cool place for half an hour, then roll out in a thin and even shape, on a board into which flour has been rubbed to smoothness.

Finally, cut out cookies in a pleasing variety of shapes, and garnish variously, or bake the cookies and then ice them. Unless exceedingly thin, these can be baked in an oven as hot as 375 degrees. Remember there is more or less loss of heat in opening the oven.

Cookie Shapes.

With a nice dough like the above a cookie cutter which will give a fleur-de-lis shape will give a chance for some "dressy" effects. Put icing where the conventional band is and also some on the tips. Stars are also attractive, and colored icings can be used with great effect on such cookies, as they cannot on the thinnest of all cookies.

Sweet Graham Wafers.

The following recipe for an excellent little thing is repeated after a rather long rest, partly because an amateur cook can get good results with it: One half cup of sour cream, one-half cup of granulated sugar, one cup or one cup and about two tablespoons more of graham flour, measured after sifting it once; one-half teaspoon salt, one-half teaspoon soda, white flour to handle or knead with. Beat up cream in mixing bowl, beat in soda or dissolve it last, as in sour cream cookie recipe, add sugar, salt, and flour and stir to a stiff dough.

Put the white flour on to a bread board and rub it smooth, having made the dough into a ball, roll it thin, then cut it into strips and these into domino sized pieces or oblongs three inches long and less than an inch wide. Or cut it into round about two inches in diameter. Prick with a fork before baking. These are best if sprinkled with sugar before they are baked. Bake in a slow oven until they are crisp, but not greatly browned.

The Strange Adventures of Young Robinson Grewso

By KEMBLE

Ma ma called him Robin, his dad called him Son;
It grew like a weed and thought it great fun,
He called himself Robinson Grewso.

ROBIN and his pals were tickled pink over the way "Yap" had scared the Cannibal King and Queen out of the cabin. He was certainly some dog.

"Yes, sah," chimed in Chocolate Sundae, "dat ole Kiyi knows more dan most folks. I'se knowed him ever since he come on dis island. Why, Mistah Robin, he used ter bury all de chicken bones what he kin find and inside of eight months small bushes would be growing up an' hangin' on each little limb would be de nicest, fat, juicy chicken or meat yer ever tasted."

Everybody laughed at Sundae and all but he was spoofing, but the little darky stuck to his story. "All right, you laugh at me. Jis git him some chicken bones an' see what's gwine happen."

"Why not give him a pie and let him bake it?" chuckled Chin-Chin. "Maybe he can grow some pieplant," and the old bird giggled and sputtered at his own joke.

"Talking about pies," chimed in Bunny, "I'm just plain hungry. Where's that hot bread you were going to bake for us, Sundae?"

The little black cook batted his eyes. "Goodness gracious," he exclaimed, "I most done forgot it. It must be done and ready to bake by dis time."

Then he beat it out for the outdoor kitchen where the huge mess of dough was already bulging over the edges of the big pan. Soon it was freer, now clear of the pan, and as it rose steadily Sundae made a flying leap and wrapped his arms around the huge mass.

"Help! Help!" he called in a frightened voice. "Come quick, everybody." But before Robin and his pals could reach the spot the unbaked bread was some ten feet above them with Sundae hanging on for dear life.

Round and round in circles darted the swelling ball. Higher and higher it rose. Chin-Chin started in pursuit, but his stubby wings could make no headway and he tumbled back to the earth.

"It's carrying him out to sea," shouted Roy. "Man the boat and start after him."

All was turmoil now, the sail was hoisted and out shot the little craft. High in the air sailed Sundae, over the rough waters of the lake.

Sweet Marie wept and wrung her hands. "I told him not to put in so much yeast, but he wouldn't mind me."

And now a new terror was looming up through the darkening clouds. The old airplane bird was making for the big dough ball with its precious freight.

On shot the boat, sailing beneath the frightened tar baby and his big balloon.

With a sudden nose dive the old bird scared friend. Soon he had him dough as Sundae, releasing his hold, fell like a shooting star into the waters of the ruffled lake. Robin was overboard in an instant, striking out for the scared cannibal. Soon he had him safely on board, but the old airplane bird, her head covered with a huge mass of dough, came down "kerplunk" into the lake, and there she floated.

"Call it Yeaster Sundae."

"Now, stay there," yelled Robin, "and give the fish a treat."

One by one the fishes, large and small, began nibbling at the unbaked bread, and they, too, began to rise and skim over the crest of the waves.

"I know a good name for this day," giggled Bunny, "Let's call it Yeaster Sundae."

Her Only Thanks.

Last summer a classmate of mine had a week's vacation between jobs. She had either to pay her way while in town or stay with me. She chose the latter. I was glad to have her and tried to make her visit in my home as pleasant as possible.

Several months later a pouring rain made it necessary for me to stay at the college during the noon hour. She insisted upon my eating lunch at the dormitory with her. Pleased with this thoughtfulness, I accepted her invitation, but when the waiter brought the bill, placing it between us, my friend maliciously showed me how to fill in the blank and I realized I was a paying guest. G. C. G.

Showing Her the Town.

A young man, who was a mere acquaintance of mine, called me up one night and asked for my mother. He asked her if he could use her auto to bring some friends of his from the east. Mother consented although she hardly knew the man, having seen him once in her life.

After keeping the car for two days, he found he had parked in front of his house. By that time I was so upset I called him up for an explanation. He said his friend wanted to see the sights of the city so he used the car until the gas was low and then returned it. S. S. B.

Self-Invited Guest.

We live on the outskirts of a small village. The cheekiest person around here is a woman who brings her sewing and mending over to my house every day, because she says it costs too much to keep up a fire all day while her husband is away from home.

As he is often gone all week, it is not pleasant nor convenient for me to have her, as she stays for lunch and frequently for supper, too. We ask her, of course, when we sit down to meals, and she always stays.

If I have to be away from home, she says sweetly, "I'll keep up the fires for you and get the lunch." L. W. K.

Enough to Make One Cynical.

While coming upstairs I noticed something dark on a stair step. I stooped to see what it was. To my amazement I found it to be a two dollar bill.

Being a rooming house, I immediately took it down to the landlady. She stared at me and remarked, "Where is the other one? I had 2 two dollar bills, and I certainly dropped both in the same place."

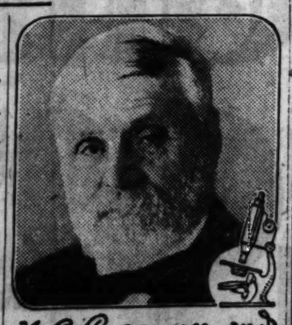
I didn't even get "Thank you," for my honesty. M. M.

Pattern Borrower.

A neighbor of mine is a woman who has plenty of cheek. I have a little girl, 12, and she has one of about the same age. I never buy a pattern for a dress for my daughter but she asks for it so she can make her girl a dress exactly like the one I make.

She has not bought a single pattern since I have known her, and that is about three years. L. D. C.

Prescription He Wrote in 1892 is the World's Most Popular Laxative



Dr. B. Caldwell M.D. AT AGE 83

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as they are today. People lived normal, quiet lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air and sunshine. But even that early there were those physics and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings to put into their system. So he wrote a prescription for a laxative to be used by his patients.

The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores, in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe, gentle bowel stimulant as Syrup Pepsin.

Under successful management this prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative in the world. The fact that millions of bottles are used a year proves that it has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds and fevers.

Millions of families are now never without Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and if you will once start using it you will always have a bottle handy in the house.

It is particularly pleasing to know that the most of it is bought by mothers for themselves and the children, though Syrup Pepsin is just as valuable for elderly people. All drug stores have the generous bottles.

We would be glad to have you prove at our expense how much Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can mean to you and yours. Just write "Syrup Pepsin," and yours. Just write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, and we will send you prepaid a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE.

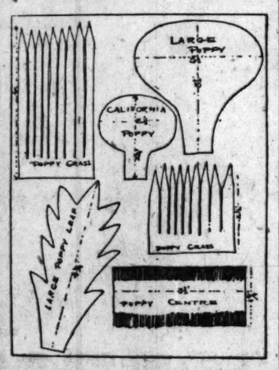
Practical and Fancy Needle Work
By Clotilde

These Artificial Poppies Make Gay Decorations for a Party.

What is your sewing problem? Do you have trouble in following a pattern? Do you find difficulty in making a skirt hang evenly or making a sleeve that doesn't twist? If there is anything you would like to know about these or other problems of needlework, write to Clotilde, The Tribune, Chicago, inclosing a stamped addressed envelope, if a personal reply is desired.



GREEN, black and the colors you wish to use for the poppies will be needed for these very natural and lovely flowers. Fine wire is also necessary.

After the green and black strips of paper are cut making them 1½ inches long, fold them together and cut to form a fine fringe. Roll them between the palms, hold in the right hand and press the ends into the palm of the left hand, thus curling the ends. Then unroll the fringe.

If a ball center is preferred, make a small ball of paper, putting the fringe around it. Ready made poppy stamens may be used, if preferred.

Gather a piece of double fringe four or five inches long; fasten with wire in the center. Cut four petals for each flower, and flute the top edge and make cup shape with thumb and forefinger. Arrange the petals around the center, space evenly and wind tightly with wire. Then fasten to a piece of rather stiff wire for the stem.

Cut one-half inch wide strips of green paper and wind over the wire stem, folding in two leaves.

Waxing Flowers—To one pound of paraffin use 10 cents' worth of spermaceti and 10 cents' worth of white wax. Put the ingredients in a deep saucepan and heat until it is all melted. Remove from the fire and let cool to about 98 degrees.

Slip the complete flower into the liquid quickly, shake off the surplus paraffin and reshape the petals, if necessary. Make three dippings and then let cool. These flowers will keep in the warmest weather and may be washed by dipping in a deep pan of lukewarm water in which a little suds of some pure white soap has been made.

HINTS TO THE BUSINESS GIRL

by Antoinette Donnelly

She Needs Her Energy and Her Good Looks, and Here Are Ways of Keeping Them

NEW YORK. — [Special Correspondence.]—An enterprising investigator discloses the interesting fact that the average school girl hikes eleven and a half miles in a day about her work and play.

From school she ventures into business, and while we have not the investigators word for it, we have reason to believe that the average working girl engaged in sedentary office work does not get one-half of that amount of daily exercise.

Proof of her lack of muscular activity, once she becomes a breadwinner, and of lack of the observance of other good health rules, you see in the gradual dissipation of the "bloom" with which she started downtown that first eventful morning.

The day of a working woman has its limitations. There is no gainsaying the fact. The old freedom is no longer hers. But the job of maintaining her health and efficiency is. So, some compromise must be made with conditions as they are.

The Industrial Hygiene bulletin of the New York State department of labor details a health program that does recognize the limitations of the working girl's time and resources. A digest of the rules outlined follow:

Food. Eat regularly, slowly and chew your food thoroughly. Eat a varied diet, including plenty of fruit and vegetables, with meat only once a day. Drink two glasses of milk every day and very little tea and coffee. Do not eat many sweets. Avoid fried, greasy, and highly spiced foods. If you are more than ten pounds overweight, eat less starch, fats, and sugar. If you are more than ten pounds underweight, eat more at each meal, get more rest, and learn to relax. If you feel worried or nervous, eat less than usual.

Water: Drink six or eight glasses of water a day. Drink a glass on rising in the morning. Drink water with your meals, but do not use it to wash down food insufficiently chewed. Cool water is better than iced.

Clothing: Do not dress too warmly indoors. Wrap up when going outdoors. Wear comfortable shoes to work. Do not wear a corset or brassiere that pushes the abdomen down. Do not wear rubber garments to reduce.

Fresh air: Keep the windows open in your home all the year round. The room temperature should be 68 F. in the daytime and 50 F. at night. Try to stay outdoors at least an hour and a half every day. Get outdoors at the lunch hour and walk to and from work. Spend your day off outdoors, as often as possible.

Recreation: Vary your recreation with outdoor exercises, such as skating, tennis, hiking. Dancing is healthful, if not overdone. Do not go to the movies too often, especially if your work is sedentary. Movies mean poor air, no exercise, late hours. Go to a gymnasium or swimming pool if there is one near.

Bathing: Take a warm bath every day and follow it with a cold spray to help prevent colds.

Sleep: Sleep at least eight hours every night with the windows open, using plenty of blankets in cold weather to avoid being chilled. If you do not sleep well, consult your doctor.

Teeth: Brush the teeth in the morning and before going to bed. Keep them in good repair.

Menstruation: Painful menstruation can often be prevented by keeping the bowels regular and by taking plenty of fresh air and exercise. Continue your normal exercise and the warm tub bath and get more sleep than usual during this period.

Constipation: Eat plenty of fruit and vegetables and coarse foods, such as bran, whole wheat bread and brown rice.

Cold: Follow the rules for fresh air, food, exercise, clothing and bathing and you will not usually take cold.

Headache: Constipation and eyestrain most frequently cause headache. Find out the cause and remove it permanently. Do not take powders and medicine of any kind.

Happiness Helps.

Try to get fun out of your work and the satisfaction that comes with trying to do your work well. Few things contribute so much to good health and a sense of well being.

In a recent report of an insurance company it was noted that the physique of the working girl was slowly undergoing a change for the worse. Wrong food, bad posture and lack of exercise were given as the outstanding reasons for the change and for reduction in efficiency of a number of young women after they had followed the bad habits for several years.

Food is the difficult problem of the breadwinner, particularly of the younger woman whose salary is not sufficient to meet the average restaurant demand. Fortunately, those organizations employing large numbers of workers recognize the efficiency value to them of a well cooked, well planned, nourishing luncheon. It is on her noonday meals that the average worker, for reasons of economy or haste, or a combination of both, does neglect this important phase of health building.

The perfect luncheon place for the worker is amid quiet, restful surroundings, but this ideal spot is difficult to find unless one's luncheon bill is not a matter of concern. To the average young worker the amount she spends for food at noon is a serious matter.

I would suggest that the day start with a good breakfast. In fact, I plead for this, knowing how many young women neglect to eat a nourishing meal in the morning. Some I know are foolish enough to do it as a reducing measure; others because they will not arise a few minutes earlier and give themselves sufficient time for the morning meal; others again because they have cultivated the habit of a light breakfast. My theory is that if a girl will take a good meal in the morning and another at night, her noonday meal and its expense can be considerably lightened without serious consequences.

Eat a Hearty Breakfast.

Coffee and a prepared breakfast food and a bakeshop roll or doughnuts are not a good breakfast. The period of longest fast, from six or seven the night before, makes better breakfasts imperative. Fruit should never be omitted from the morning meal. Apples, oranges, grapefruit, grapes, bananas, pears, pineapple are all desirable first foods of the day. A cereal with cream should follow, egg, or crisp bacon or both are recommended and buttered rolls or toast, with sufficient time to consume the meal slowly. Coffee, particularly, should not be gulped down hot. Hot pancakes and waffles smothered under syrup or honey have none too good an effect on the digestive tract. They are all right occasionally, but not frequently.

The dinner at night should have a salad made of fresh fruits or vegetables, in addition to the usual meat, potato and separately served vegetable.

Milk is a protective and a rebuilding food and it is also a "stay with you" food. Take milk, then, with your luncheon.

The rules laid down by the state department of labor for the working girl are simple, sane and of inestimable value, not only in health upkeep but in the interests of pure physical attractiveness. And while an occasional male employer will go on record as never intending to hire another pretty girl, most business men will frankly admit their preference for the good looking one. He demands not a professional beauty, but the type of girl who pleases with the sheer vibrancy of health and youth, a quality sustained only through attention to the items of hygiene outlined in the rules above.

Bright Sayings of Husbands and Wives

The snappy comeback of the other half when cornered has often been a source of wonder to husbands and wives. The husband or the wife has come across with a bright saying that will never be forgotten by the other half of the matrimonial sketch. What was that bright saying of Mr.? Mrs.? Send it to us, and we will pay you $1 for it if we print it. Address Bright Sayings of Husbands and Wives, The Chicago Tribune, Chicago.

Wait and See.

Husband—You should not have bought that dress. You spend too much on clothes. I don't like that dress on you, anyhow. It's too old.

Wife—It will be long enough before I get another.

Not So Good.

Browne—Did you give your wife a little lecture on economy you talked about?

Jones—Yes.

Browne—Any result?

Jones—Yes, I've got to give up smoking.

Taking Advantage of It.

Wife—This wonderful view leaves me speechless.

He—Er—ah—shall we stop here a nice long time, dearest?

More to the Point.

Wife—O, Henry, our new neighbors have no car, or radio, or Pomeranian dog, not even a grand piano. I can imagine what they have got.

Husband [sardonically]—Perhaps they have a bank account.

THE HOME HARMONIOUS

This room is furnished with cleverly renovated castoffs.

The Guest Room Need Not Be Expensively or Elaborately Furnished in Order to Be Hospitable and Charming

Phyllis Marsh will be glad to assist the homemaker in any problems pertaining to home building and home furnishing. Address your letter to Phyllis Marsh, The Tribune, Chicago. Inclose stamped addressed envelope for personal reply.

By Phyllis Marsh

THERE is always a distinctly hospitable and delightfully charming atmosphere about the guest chamber that has been carefully furnished and decorated. The room need not be elaborately or expensively done in order to achieve the desired effect. It simply requires a little thought and care on the part of the home decorator.

In the first place a guest chamber should be so arranged in its decorative scheme that any one may enjoy occupying it. Few are the men who would enjoy a prolonged visit with a family who had nothing but a "frilly" taffeta adorned bedroom to offer them. The same thought holds true of the women who favor "frilliness." They would not be exactly happy in a room displaying much that was severely plain or masculine in decorative treatment. So it behooves the home decorator to bear these facts in mind and plan the guest chamber accordingly.

In any event, simplicity should be the keynote of the room, whether it is to display printed or plain fabrics, or furniture in the natural wood finish or enameled. For the family which is in the habit of entertaining guests for extended periods of time, it is advisable to furnish the room in somewhat the bed-sitting room style, where the guest is privileged at any time to retire in order to read, write letters, or sew.

If there is more than one guest chamber in the home and the room is small, a single or three-quarter sized bed may be selected. But if there is only one guest chamber and that of generous size, twin beds should be the choice. Keeping in mind that the room is to bear some resemblance to a sitting room, a large chiffonier or chest of drawers and a dresser with the mirror separate should be the choice.

Then there should be either a small secretary type of writing desk or a small oblong one drawer table over which could hang a good sized book shelf, which could substitute for the desk. A straight backed chair should accompany this group, as well as a small waste basket.

In another convenient corner of the room should be placed an "easy" overstuffed chair, possibly boasting a slip-cover of chintz or cretonne. Next to it should be a reading table upon which there is ample room for a few books, magazines, and a simple type of parchment shaded reading lamp. A comfortable little footstool or an old fashioned hassock would not be amiss if placed in front of the "easy" chair.

At the side of the single bed or between the twin beds is the place for the usual convenient night stand and lamp. If there is sufficient space in the room it is always convenient to have a chaise longue comfortably placed.

Last, but not least, there should be a slipper chair placed in a suitable corner of the room and also a three or four paneled decorative screen, which always serves well when ventilating a room to break direct drafts.

Pictures in the form of colored prints, etchings, or simple water color landscapes of a type to be sufficiently interesting to any one should adorn the walls of every guest chamber. Unless the walls are covered with an elaborately designed paper, there is always a place on them for pictures of one kind or another. Colorful wall hangings also serve their purpose in a decorative manner quite as effectively as pictures, although the use of more than two hangings in any room is not advisable. India prints, cretonnes, chintzes, toiles de Jouy, and many of the colorful prints emulating the famous Sardinian embroideries now so much in vogue make ideal wall hangings for any bedroom.

Probably the one thing which interests the average home decorator more than any other one thing pertaining to the guest chamber is the bedspread and the draperies. What material to select and the style in which they should be made are always of interest to those who sew. With a world of fabrics of every conceivable description to select from, there only remains the character of the room to decide the proper choice to be made. The room of simple, unassuming furnishings calls for fabrics of like nature, and under this heading come many of varied type, such as cretonne, chintz, hand-blocked linen, toile de Jouy, calico prints, rayon and cotton taffeta, striped and also checked prints and crashes, etc.

The bedroom of more than simple character, but hardly of the sumptuous type, calls for such fabrics as silk rep, silk poplin, moire, and similar materials, while the room of extremely sumptuous style may be arrayed in silk damasks or taffeta, or brocaded taffeta, or satin.

Cleverly renovated "cast-offs" in the form of furniture was the inspiration for the guest chamber described and illustrated today. To begin with, the room is of northeast exposure, so, in order to make it appear cheerful, pleasant and inviting, the color scheme decided upon was cedar, green and gold. The room is of average size, being 11x18 feet, so only those pieces of furniture necessary to the comfort of the guest were chosen.

A simple type of walnut finished metal bed in a single width size is placed between two doors. A small night stand in walnut finish has been placed close to the head of the bed and displays a small pottery lamp topped with a plaited glazed chintz shade in tones of gold and green. On the opposite wall [north], between two windows, is a resurrected old fashioned chiffonier. The attached mirror was removed and hung above it on separate cords. Since the finish was golden oak and rather badly marred, it was decided that it should be enameled and in a brown as nearly like the bed as possible. The trimmings in it consist of hairline stripes and wooden knobs done in gold enamel to give it character. It is adorned with two brass candlesticks at each end, between which is placed an inexpensive paper covered box.

A small oblong one-drawer table flanks the west wall and has been converted into a dressing table and was enameled to match the chiffonier. Over it hangs a plainly framed long, narrow mirror, the upper part of which is a little colored print. A chintz dresser cover and a parchment shaded glass lamp are all that grace the table top.

In front of it is a high, ladder-backed chair. The one window on the east wall is centered and to the right is a four paneled, chintz covered screen, in front of which is a comfortable slipper chair in a slip cover of a cotton striped fabric. Just in front of the window is a dropleaf gumwood table in walnut finish so arranged that it may be used for either reading or writing purposes. To the left of the table is a generously proportioned barrel chair, upholstered in a green denim and having a pillow of cedar colored rep.

A wrought iron floor lamp with parchment colored paper shade and a tiny end table and waste paper basket complete the interesting corner group.

The floor is covered here and there with oval shaped wool fiber rugs in imitation of braided rugs, and the walls are done in a paper of creamy tone, while the long draperies are of a striped rayon taffeta in gold, green and cedar tones. Topping the windows are narrow shaped lambrequins of the same material.

The spread is also of the same material and made perfectly plain and merely corded where it is seamed on both sides.

A FRIEND IN NEED

by Sally Joy Brown

A LITTLE AID OFTEN GOES A LONG WAY.

I want to be the medium through which the friends in deed and the friends in need may be brought together. It may be you have some discarded article which has not outgrown its usefulness that will make some less fortunate one happy and you would gladly give it if you knew how to go about it. Write to me and I shall be happy to be of service to you. Please write on one side of the paper.

When information is wanted by mail, a stamped, addressed envelope should accompany the request. Please do not send article to The Tribune but write for the address of the applicant and send direct.

WOULD you like to see what the gifts we are giving through this department really accomplish for many of the families receiving them?

Then you will be interested in this case. Several weeks ago the husband and father came home from seven weeks of sickness in the County hospital, to try to get another start. But his clothes were so shabby, and with all the expenses of his illness he could not afford to buy new ones. Worse than that, his wife was expecting a baby within two months—and they were about to be evicted from the furnished room they had been occupying. Both were in despair, when we heard of their plight through a neighbor, and published a request for help.

That was their situation several weeks ago. The following letter tells how their prospects changed, and how the change was brought about.

"Dear Sally Joy Brown: It is hard to come down to earth, and that is why I haven't written before this to thank you and all the others. But don't think we were not grateful, for I truly think my life was saved.

"The first we knew about it was when we had word from you that some one had offered us a room for a week or two until we got straightened around. My husband and I didn't quite know what to make of it—but we knew we weren't going to be in the street, and that was wonderful.

"Late that afternoon a man called and left a fine blue suit, in fact a complete outfit, hat, shoes, and all, for my husband—and it put new courage into both of us, for we felt it would be much easier for him to get work if he looked presentable. He didn't get work the next day, but he did by the end of the week and then how happy we were! It was like being saved when we were drowning.

"Now we have a room of our own that we can pay for. My husband is making enough to pay for food and rent, with a little more, and we'll make it go farther soon, because we've been given some furniture and we can take unfurnished rooms, which will be cheaper. And I have received a lot of clothes for the baby and we are just bursting with happiness.

"You'll hear more from us soon, because we're going to be able in a short time to help somebody in the same wonderful way we have been helped—and we won't lose a minute letting you know when that time comes. MRS. N. B."

Doesn't that letter tell its own story? And simple gifts did it all. Weren't they worth while, when they did so much, and wouldn't you be happy to do the same for some of the others in need?

Not Prepared for Winter.

"My husband is tubercular and the dispensary has sent him to Texas for his health. I have two children and support them myself, but now winter is here I find I am not well prepared. I would be grateful for any warm blankets and any dresses and a coat, size 38 or 40, for myself and some things for the children. They are a boy, 5, and a girl, 8. MRS. L. B."

With the main support of the family snatched from them by the cruel tentacles of this disease, the rearing and support of her children becomes a discouraging problem for the mother. She is calling to you for help. Won't you do what you can?

Children Need Coats.

"I am asking for warm coats for two little girls, 9 and 10, who are rather small for their age. Their father had an operation recently and, while he is recovering, he is as yet able to work only a few days a week. He is deeply in debt, but is anxious to support his family. G. S. R."

Won't you help these children by sending them the coats your young daughters have outgrown? There's lots of cold weather ahead of us, and unless these youngsters have sufficient clothing their chances of keeping well are slim.

Unable to Lie Down.

"I have a sick husband who can't lie down day or night. Do you know of some one who has an old morris chair or any kind of a chair with a high and reclining back he could have?

"MRS. A. M."

This man's condition will not improve if he doesn't have the rest he needs. Have you the chair which will give him this comfort?

Sweater and Bathrobe Needed.

"I have a daughter, 21, in a tuberculosis sanitarium. She is badly in need of a woolen sweater and a bathrobe, size 36, and I am unable to buy them. Can you help me get them for her? MRS. F. M."

It's hard enough to do without necessities when one is well. Just think how much worse it must be when disease has set in and these articles become even greater necessities. Help this mother, won't you, to help her daughter?

Family in Trouble.

"Last week a friend of mine came to me for assistance for her family. They come from a small mining town and the husband has been out of work for 9 months. My sister and I have been trying to house them and feed them, but our salaries are small and we have all we can do to keep ourselves. They are all in need of clothing, especially the children, for school. The girls are 12, 8 and 6 years of age, and the boy is 10. Their shoe sizes are 11, 11½, 7½, and 8. The mother wears size 36 and the father 42. Anything you may be able to do for them will be greatly appreciated. L. S."

This is just one of many letters we have about families where the father is out of work with no relief in sight. Perhaps the help you can give them will be the means of putting them on their feet again and relieving the family of the misery it is suffering.

Jealousy

We're all acquainted with jealousy, the monster that smashes love affairs, wrecks homes, causes business quarrels, and generally plays havoc with us mortals. We'd like to know your most notable experience with a jealous person or persons. If you have encountered a situation where jealousy led to a tragic or ridiculous climax, tell us about it. The Tribune will pay $1 for every story published. Address Jealous Editor, Chicago Tribune.

Rebuked.

When I was a young girl my father kept several riding and driving horses. For several years he had a young boy working in the stables, upon whom I usually called when I wanted my own horse harnessed or saddled.

Finally, the young fellow, then grown up, married, and soon after the wedding his wife sent me a note, asking me not to call her husband by his first name any more, "as it was not necessary." A. B. H.

He Wanted Notice.

Jimmy was 9, and jealous of his brother, Tommy, 11. One day Tommy came home with a black eye, the outcome of a fight to save a kitten from the destroying hands of a bad boy. Mother and father were worried—and proud, too, of their son's motive in fighting—and lavished attention and affection on him.

And little Jimmy felt he was forgotten and longed to be a hero himself. At last he could bear it no longer and hastened out to demand a black eye of the first street urchin he met. It was freely given, and a broken nose along with it. Poor little Jimmy got the attention he wanted—and more, for it was months before the nose, injured in a serious way, was healed. D. B.

Child Suffers.

A friend of mine had a little girl about 3 years old. She was fond of me and somehow got into the habit of calling me "mama," which I could see made her mother furious.

One day when I was visiting at her home the little one was even more persistent in calling me by that name than usual. The mother lost her temper and grabbing the poor little thing slapped her soundly. M. D.

Strange Weddings

Have you ever seen a wedding so outlandish that it upset all your ideas of the traditional ceremony? Some marriages are foreign and quaint in their adherence to ancient customs; others are ultra modern in their haphazard speed and unconventionality. The Tribune would like to know the story of the strangest wedding you've ever seen. We will pay $1 for every letter published. Address Strange Weddings, Chicago Tribune.

All Wet.

It was to be a garden wedding. The day had been perfect until one-half hour before the ceremony was to take place when clouds quickly gathered.

At the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march the attendants started toward the altar in the garden and at the same time a light rain began to fall. As the bride, leaning on her father's arm, appeared coming down the steps, it rained even harder and they sought shelter under a tree near by.

The guests scattered for their wraps and umbrellas. But the procession having been started, the bride wanted to continue. So they walked up to the altar under an umbrella, all the attendants with umbrellas and guests standing in groups under trees and the rain simply pouring down.

It sure was the wettest wedding I ever attended. F. L. J.

Loaded with Bills.

We live in a section where there are a great many foreigners. They usually get married on Saturday and the bride always wears white with a long veil. A reception is always held in the church hall and every one is invited. Lunch is served to all those present.

In the evening the men try to break a plate with silver. If they succeed they dance with the bride and either put the silver money in a basket or pin bills on her veil.

Before the evening is over the bride has fives, tens and twenties pinned all over her veil. She is exhausted, but has as high as $500 or $600 pinned on her. Sometimes the veil is so full that they pin money on her dress. The highest amount I know of one bride getting was $850. C. W.

MOTHER

Cross, Feverish Child Needs this Harmless Laxative

Every mother realizes, after giving her children "California Fig Syrup," that this is their ideal laxative, because they love its pleasant taste and it thoroughly cleanses the tender little stomach, liver and bowels without griping.

When cross, irritable, feverish, or breath is bad, stomach sour, look at the tongue, mother! If coated, give a teaspoonful of this harmless, "fruity laxative," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. When the little system is full of cold, throat sore, has stomach-ache, diarrhea, indigestion, colic—remember, a good "inside cleansing" should always be the first treatment given.

Millions of mothers keep "California Fig Syrup" handy; they know a teaspoonful today saves a sick child tomorrow. Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Fig Syrup," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups printed on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here, so don't be fooled. Get the genuine, made by "California Fig Syrup Company."

Infant Care

Mothers, you can't start too early to establish a child's serene and tranquil disposition. Even an infant can have a happy, fretless state of uninterrupted health. What will help do this? A simple, purely vegetable product as old as you are: plain Castoria.

A few drops of Castoria will settle all uneasiness in a jiffy. Will dispel colic or ward off constipation; and just as surely check diarrhea.

In real sickness, call a physician. But many physicians urge only Castoria for those little childish disorders that need nothing more. You need never be afraid to give pure Castoria. It is safe and perfectly harmless, for it contains no paregoric, no opiates, no dope of any kind. At least, this is true of the genuine Fletcher's Castoria*—and that is the kind doctors tell you always to buy.

Fletcher's Castoria is fine for any child. All children love to take it. Delicious tasting, and as good as it tastes. Just look for the Fletcher signature on the package and you will know you have the genuine and pure Castoria.

*SPECIAL NOTE: With every bottle of genuine Fletcher's Castoria is wrapped a book on "Care and Feeding of Babies" worth its weight in gold to every mother or prospective mother.

FOLKS WHO GET INTO THE LIMELIGHT SIDEWISE

A Handful of Obscure Celebrities Who Bask in Reflected Glory

Did You Ever Hear of Father Machree or Mr. Corson?

By Genevieve Forbes Herrick.

NEXT to Father Machree, Lyle Womack is today probably the most widely known obscurity in the world; also the most obscure celebrity.

Fate has given him an oblique glory. Fame has touched him, but from a tangent. The white light of publicity plays upon him, but only so long as he stands in the glamorous, dazzling shadow of his wife, Ruth Elder.

Nobody knows just what Father Machree did to amuse himself while his good wife, Mother Machree, was being wooed to and about by all the baldheaded listeners of these many decades. But everybody knows what Womack has been doing these last few weeks while the world has been placing its crown of laurel on the brow of his good wife, the girl who almost flew the Atlantic. He has been doing exactly nothing.

THE ANSWER IS "NO"

O, there were few little odd jobs, like sitting behind the palms in the foyers of smart hotels, killing time while his wife occupied the throne chair at the center of the speaker's table in the big ballroom across the hall. Or elbowing policemen so that he might get within whispering distance of Miss Elder. What he wanted to whisper was that she stop flying and come back home. The answer was "No."

But Lyle Womack is not alone in his slub. Nor is the more or less imaginary Father Machree its only other member. The world is so full of a number of things, I am sure Mr. Womack will find many other echoes, and shadows, and human tangents to keep him company. Sometimes it is the woman who is the carbon copy; sometimes it is the man. Now and then it's a mother, a father, a brother, or a daughter.

"Who's Who" doesn't give special family rates.

For instance, in the important red book we find, under the initial "C," this entry:

"COOGAN, Jackie; actor; b. Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 26, 1914; s. John Henry and Lillian [Dolliver] C."

There is no separate heading for Papa John Henry nor for Mother Lillian Dolliver. Once an actor himself, and the one who carried young Jackie, an infant of 16 months, onto the stage for his debut, Mr. Coogan, père, now goes through life identified as Jackie Coogan's father. Even the presence of a fat wad of bills from the 13 year old star may not be an entirely satisfactory psychological solace. Or it may be.

But there is some one even more akin to Lyle Womack than Mr. and Mrs. Coogan.

Did you ever hear of Clemington Corson? He is the husband of the first mother to swim the English channel. That is his claim to fame.

Beyond that his chances for publicity are slim. Even his picture is catalogued under his wife's name. In the bulky envelope in THE TRIBUNE morgue which houses his wife's clippings and photographs (and, by the way, she is known most frequently as Mlle. Gade, or Mlle. Gade Corson) we at last found a domestic picture. Mrs. Corson was seated, holding her two children, Sonny and Sister. Mr. Corson was standing, in the background. His left hand was extended to keep Sonny from falling. There were such deep wrinkles in his forehead.

Buried deep down in a two column story we at last found the information about Mrs. Corson's husband. Here it is: "Mrs. Corson was Danish born, but is naturalized, and the wife of an American New Yorker."

Sometimes, even in this day of feminism, it is the man who casts the shadow.

For example, you hear a lot of former Judge Kenesaw Mountain Landis; but there is hardly a newspaper paragraph about Mrs. Landis.

Queen Victoria of Sweden rarely makes the front page, or the back page. She did break into the news about a year ago, but it was when she was very ill. Her husband, the genial King Gustaf, has his name and fame cabled across the Atlantic frequently. And there are pictures of him, pictures of him riding, of him about to play tennis, of him playing tennis, of him having played tennis.

The most perfect example of self effacement is, well, now, who in the world would it be but Madame Mussolini? We never hear of her; we never see a picture of her. About the only time she gets a stickful of type is when the stork comes to her house. And then it's a safe bet that the headline will feature Il Duce, and the story will end with a casual mention that the "mother and child are doing well."

RED'S LITTLE BROTHER

Which leads to the speculation as to just what would happen to Il Duce, to his wife, and indeed, to all Italy, if one fine morning Madame Mussolini should decide to swim the English channel, or fly the Atlantic, or go in for interior decorating.

Fame can be fickle.

There was Gertrude Ederle, the first woman to swim the channel. She had a crowded hour of plaudits. Then Father Ederle began to edge into the picture, and to take the curtain calls. Now, so the story goes, he gets as much fun out of it as if he had smeared himself with grease and slipped into the waves for a record swim. His fame is oblique, but he clings to it as if it had come in a straight line.

With the Grange brothers it is different. Grange No. 2 is earning his fame, not resting on that of player No. 77. Nothing, for a long, long time at least, will take away from the glory of Harold ("Red") Grange, the Illini half back of a few years ago. But "Red's" younger brother, Garland, who played at end this year on the Orange and Blue team, is said to be coming right along. He started first in a dark semi-circle lighted only by the limelight that played about his big brother. Gradually he got some of the spot for himself.

COME IN BUNCHES

There is still another group of comrades for Lyle Womack and Father Machree. They come in bunches. Often their names are forgotten; but their classification remains as a tag of identification which lifts them above the heads of their fellow men and women.

In this department we have, for instance, the husbands of Peggy Joyce. And the wives of De Wolf Hopper.

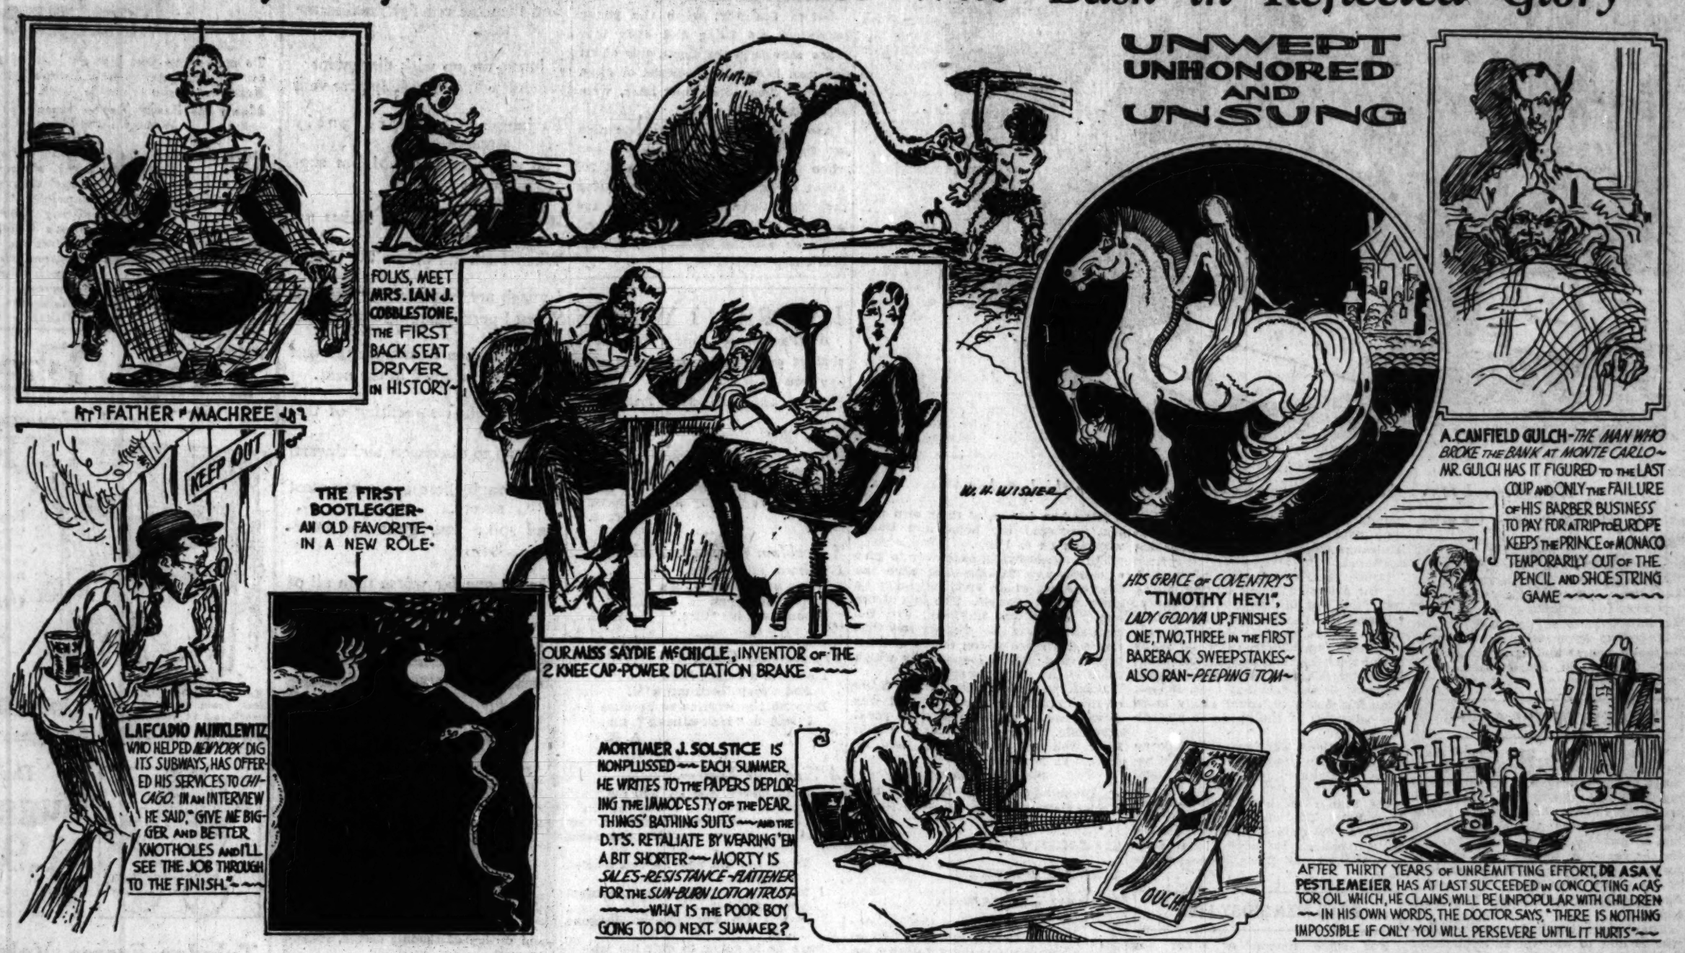
Then there are the men who have been reported as engaged to marry Mary Landon Baker.

And those hundreds of girls and women and older women who have never forgotten they once danced with the Prince of Wales.

And then, once in a blue moon, comes along a couple whose fame is so neatly and so nicely balanced that it forms an equation. Take the Coolidges.

He is the President of the United States.

But she has that smile.



A JUNIOR LEAGUER'S LIFE IS NO BED OF ROSES

Society Buds Labor Hard and Long in the Name of Sweet, Sweet Charity

Weighing Babies and Selling Tickets Keep Them Busy

By Mildred Jaklon.

DON'T ever intimate to a Chicago Junior leaguer that you think the life of a society girl is one of carefree bliss, devoid of toil, and replete with such luxuries as sleeping late of mornings and attending luncheons, teas, and dances, or you'll have a small tempest descend around your ears! Wait until the aforesaid J. L. is well out of hearing before you breathe "social butterfly" or "idle rich," if you have consideration for your auditory organs!

Any one of the 303 active members of the organization and every one of the 43 provisional members—yea, verily, the provisional members—will tell you emphatically and volubly, that theirs is no life of ease, but one of remitting energy and labor, all in the name of sweet, sweet charity. That's their tale of woe and they'll stick to it. And what's more, there seems to be a great deal in what they say.

ISN'T HALF OF IT

Take these provisional members. In order to pay the annual active membership dues and acquire the other full privileges of real, honest-to-goodness Junior Leaguehood, they must attend at least six prescribed lectures, must put in eighty hours of charitable work, and pass an examination on their training course. And take it from any budding debutante who has countless preoccupations during her first season out, those stipulations necessitate a inconsequential amount of time and energy to devote to life being real and life being earnest.

And the active members. They'll tell you that really the required eighty hours that active membership entails for the first five years isn't the half of it, dearie. And even the young misses who gain associate membership and freedom from "doing their hours" after their half decade of gruelling application, can tell you that the claims of the League continue to be many and arduous.

CHARITABLE ENDEAVOR

And we must admit that enlightenment on the subject does reveal that the contingent of ladies is grievously misunderstood and their status grossly underrated. Very few groups of citizens can boast such a record as they have to present—303 times 80 hours of charitable endeavor, in the past year and a net income of over $16,000 through their energies.

That charitable endeavor means weighing and measuring infants at one of the charity hospitals, doing social settlement work, acting as clerks and salesmen at the White Elephant Rummage shop or the Eli Bates shop, serving in a variety of capacities ranging from models to demonstrators for beauty products, waiting on table at the League tea room, "The Cake-box" in Lake Forest, and performing any of the hundreds of jobs connected with the Junior League's children's theater.

And glance over the imposing list of charities that the Junior Leaguers serve—Arden Shore camp, Christ Child society, Chicago Nursery and Half Orphan asylum, Eli Bates settlement, Emerson house, Erie chapel, Grant hospital, Girl Scouts, Hull house, Immigrants' Protective league, Legal Aid, Lighthouse, Lower North Community Council, Lake Forest Y. W. C. A., Margaret Etter crèche, North Avenue Day nursery, Presbyterian hospital, Ridge Farm preventorium, Service Council for Girls, St. Luke's hospital, United Charities, Visiting Nurse association, and the Vocational Society for Shutins. And besides, the organization opened its own Infant Welfare station during the last year.

Weighing babies is only a part of the Junior Leaguers' work.

MISS DOROTHY SCHMIDT,
Junior league general manager of the plays for children.

HOW TO GET IN

In view of these revelations, a little information about the mechanics of the society may be of interest. To become a member, a girl must be proposed by one member and seconded by two, her proposal sent to the committee on elections, approved by that body, which may require three letters if the proposed candidate is unknown to two of its members, and then submitted for final election to the board of directors.

Lectures, eight of them, are given for the benefit of the provisional members. This year's talks, which began on Oct. 15 and were given every Tuesday and Friday until Nov. 18, included dissertations by Miss Jane Addams at the Tudor room of the Palace theater, Judge Mary Bartelme of the Juvenile court at the Romany club, Miss Mary Cudahy on the work of the Visiting Nurse association at the Visiting Nurse association, Mrs. W. Scott Linn on the aims and workings of the Lake Shore League of Women Voters, and Mrs. Benjamin F. Langworthy of the Women's City club at the Tudor room of the Palace. Mrs. John L. Cochran, the president of the league on the constitution of the league, Miss Dorothy Schmidt on the Children's theater, and Mrs. Theodore Tieken on Art and Schools, an exposition of the work of Eli Bates settlement by Miss Little of that organization, and the final one by Mrs. Stewart of the Children's Memorial hospital.

These lectures were for the purpose of acquainting young women with the field of activities in which as representative persons they must operate to carry on the civic and welfare projects of their predecessors.

MRS. JOHN LEWIS COCHRAN,
president of Junior league (above).

MRS. PHILIP B. MAHER,
designer of stage settings for Junior League Children's theater (below).

CHECK OF HOURS

Since it is in her debutante year that a young woman first becomes liable to her obligations and entitled to her recognition as a social somebody, it is perfectly fitting that she shou'd also take her part in the more serious aspects of a public spirited life.

A new member of the league receives information of the various duties she may find to complete her "hours," which she must accomplish before the ensuing May of the opening of the season in which she is nominated.

Although it is presumed that there is honor among leaguers, a record of the time she has put in at each and every charity is kept and turned over to the secretary. She may also be called on to sell advertising for the children's theater program, put up posters announcing the theater's productions, or be in any way useful and agreeable to tasks prescribed by the active sisters.

So much for the individual proselyte. When she has successfully passed her tests, she assumes the responsibilities of greater initiative. It is her place to suggest ideas for money making if she has them, and she may know that if she has a suggestion it will be pounced upon and she will be delegated to put it into action. Her dues are $10 a year, and should she be absent from one of the semi-annual meetings she is fined $1.

KINDS OF MEMBERS

There are five classes of membership, provisional, and active, already explained, associate members who have no voting privileges and are not required to attend meetings or do Junior league work, sustaining members who have reached the age limit of 40, having no voting privileges, need not attend meetings and are not required to work, and professional members who are engaged in paid work and cannot attend meetings. Provisional members pay no dues, associate members pay $15 annual dues, and professional members, $5. Dues are payable on and before Nov. 1. By Dec. 1 members who are delinquent are considered resigned, but may be reinstated on payment.

The league supports an executive secretary and an office for necessary business.

CHILDREN'S THEATER

The Chicago league, which is one of ninety-five similar and associated leagues throughout the country, is justly proud of its children's theater. Of the ninety-five leagues, twenty-five have organized such theaters, but the Chicago league is the only one which has made its project financially successful. Telegrams and letters from the other leagues beg advice on the subject, and at the annual conference the Chicago members are looked at with awe because of their distinction and regarded as a composite oracle on the subject. Miss Dorothy Schmidt runs the theater.

Not only has the theater come to rank among the best children's theaters in the country, but it has made strides forward in an artistic direction. Modernistic lines are being carried out in the stage designs conceived and executed by Mrs. Walter Paepcke, and Mrs. Philip B. Maher, the costume designs by Mrs. Shreve Badger, the properties superintended by Miss Helen Bournique, Miss Portia Bartlett, Mrs. Richard Fleming, and Mrs. J. Bernard Mullen, and the music arrangements made by Mrs. George Haskell.

Plans for the new year include the transferring of the plays from the Playhouse to the Harris theater, which is 50 per cent larger in capacity, and a tour of the east with one of the new plays. The opening performance of the season, "The Rose and the Ring," was held Nov. 19.

The theater is acquiring funds also by renting its costumes and settings to other Junior leagues. Last year's successful Aladdin properties have just been shipped to Kansas City.

SERVE AS MODELS

All of the production work and most of the construction of settings and the making of costumes is done by the workers. Mrs. John R. Winterbotham Jr. and Miss Emily Hamill are credited by their co-workers for helping in making last year's ticket sale profitable, as also is Miss Louise Tyler, who handled the ticket sale.

The Chicago league is also proud of its accomplishment in corralling and entertaining the first children's theater conference last December. Seven leagues from other cities were represented, those of Detroit, Cincinnati, Buffalo, Brooklyn, Columbus, St. Louis and Kansas City. Miss Alice Gerstenberg, who has been one of the most active leaguers in the children's theater work; Mrs. Russell Barmits, and Miss Harriet McLaughlin spoke before the conference about establishing a national headquarters for children's plays, the possibility of interchanging scenery and costumes, and the children's theater problems common to all such organizations. The establishment of a bureau of information in Chicago was the most important outgrowth of the conference.

The league feels that it has gone a long way since the time when it annually gave a Junior League Follies, which was disrespectfully termed by some of the town wags "The Junior Leg show."

Other activities for last year included the benefit opening night of the professional ice hockey series at the Coliseum, at which $5,470.24 was cleared. A group of Junior league girls served as models at one of the loop department stores, for which they received $500, and another group received a like amount for serving as beauty specialists at the opening of the Elizabeth Arden beauty salon.

A SLEUTH AND A MYSTERY COFFIN

Another True Story of the Master Detectives of Scotland Yard

A "Dead Man's" Joke Is Turned Upon Himself

By George Dilnot.

SO FAR every step that had been taken to solve the affair only added to its complexity. A crime of some sort—it might be a mere insurance fraud, it might be something much worse—had been committed, but it was not easy to visualize a solution that would fit all the circumstances. There were gaps which it was difficult to fill in.

For instance, between the time that "Roberti" had arrived in England, and the time that "Bernardi" had shown up at Plaistow there was a hiatus. If the detective could find out where Douat—if it was Douat—had spent that time, he might find a key.

Druscovich spent days in exploring hotels and lodging houses where a newly arrived provincial Frenchman, anxious not to be too conspicuous, might have put up in London. At last he stumbled on a little hotel, handy to the Strand, where the staff remembered a jolly, fat Frenchman who had registered himself as Roberti. A comparison of dates was convincing evidence, if any more was needed, that here was the place which Douat had made his first retreat.

He undertook to see the body in the coffin and to screw down the long box.

THE VERBOSE WAITER

There was one French waiter in the establishment and Druscovich calculated this was the man most likely to know any details concerning the stranger. He ordered a bottle of wine and engaged the waiter in amicable conversation. Among his other accomplishments Druscovich spoke French like a native. The waiter, stimulated by a glass of Burgundy, was easily led to discuss Bernardi.

"A complaisant gentleman," was his verdict. "He made me little trouble and he frequently did me the honor, like m'sieu, of inviting me to share a glass of wine. We talked much together—for he rarely left the hotel—and as we were compatriots it was but natural."

Druscovich looked over the edge of his glass. "Do you happen to know what he came to London for?"

"But surely. He was a traveler in wines. He had business here."

"Ah, of course. I suppose he would write a great deal to his clients. Did he speak English well?"

A HUMOROUS MAN

The waiter made a gesture of dissent. "Indeed but he knew little about the language. He wrote, it is true, to France. Why, there was a little joke he got me to help him in—he was a humorous man, M. Roberti—a joke to play on a friend of his. He got me to write something out in English for him."

The detective filled the waiter's empty glass. "Really."

"Yes, monsieur. He had a friend, a M. Vital Douat, who, he said, would never answer his letters. So he got me to write a mock death certificate of M. Douat, which he was to send on to him with a letter saying that he now understood his silence, since he was dead."

"That was a great joke," laughed the detective. "I suppose you have not heard from him since he left?"

IN MOURNING

The other had not. And since Druscovich had gained a solution of the only point in the case on which the waiter could throw any light he abruptly concluded the interview.

There remained the cemetery. The authorities remembered the burial of a man called Vital Douat. The arrangements had been made by a friend of the dead man, a Sig. Rubini—Douat seems to have had a partiality for the Italian suffix.

Rubini had presented a certificate from the registrar of deaths, paid the fees, and arranged for the ceremony to take place on the following Sunday. The funeral service had been conducted according to the rites of the Roman Catholic church by the Rev. Father M'Quoid, and Rubini had been the chief—in fact, the only—mourner. Druscovich's informant gave the name of the undertaker.

This individual also remembered M. Rubini. That gentleman had ordered a full-sized, ready made coffin with a lead lining of abnormal thickness. He had insisted that the handles be altered from the sides to the ends of the coffin, as is the custom in France.

"And what kind of a person was put into this coffin?" asked the detective.

The undertaker hesitated: "To tell you the truth, I don't know," he said. "We delivered it by instruction at Ann street. Rubini said it was unnecessary for us to do anything more. He undertook to see the body in the coffin and to screw down the long box. He had a hearse and a mourning carriage to go to St. Patrick's cemetery on the Sunday."

SECRETS OF THE GRAVE

Whatever views Druscovich may have had on the innocence or ignorance of the undertaker, he said nothing then. The man was legally right in accepting the certificate of the registrar. There was no obligation on him to put the body in the coffin. As for the registrar, he had made out the formal certificate on the presentation of the forged medical notice of death. No provision of the law had been neglected.

But Druscovich had enough information now to warrant an application that the grave should be made to yield up its secret. He applied to the proper authorities and an order for exhumation was granted.

All this was done quietly. The detective had no intention of allowing any hint of his activities to reach Douat if it could be avoided. There was, he hoped, something more than a chance of catching that gentleman off his guard. At his request a couple of men who knew Douat well were induced to take a trip from France and were sworn to secrecy.

THE COFFIN'S CONTENTS

In the cold light of a raw winter morning a temporary screen was erected around the grave to hide it from accidental outside observation. Within this inclosure Druscovich, a doctor, officials, and the two witnesses stood in a little group while men with picks and shovels attacked the frozen earth. The coffin was drawn to the surface and there was a little stir among the onlookers as the officials knelt to unscrew the lid. What they expected to see they scarcely knew. The detective alone had by this time arrived at a conclusion, but, like a wise man, he kept it strictly to himself.

The lid was thrown back. They looked into a coffin which contained nothing but a few odd scraps of metal placed there to make up the weight of the supposed body. The whole elaborate burial was now demonstrated as an obvious sham.

"I don't seem to be wanted," remarked the doctor.

"I scarcely expected that you would be," said Druscovich with a hard smile.

LADY IN WAITING

As the waiter had said, M. Douat was a humorous man. Druscovich saw the joke, and it was appreciated the more by the insurance company officials, as their caution had prevented their concern being several thousands of dollars out of pocket.

To complete the amusement of the various parties it was only necessary to lay hands on Douat. To this task Druscovich addressed himself with energy, and he asked the Surete in the meantime to look after Mme. Douat.

The lady, however, was not to be found. Something had frightened her—no doubt the stiff attitude of the insurance company—and she had disappeared.

Druscovich, armed with a warrant for the arrest of Douat on charges of fraud and attempted fraud in France, followed the trail of his man to Liverpool. There he was conclusively satisfied that immediately after the bogus burial the other had set out for America under still another assumed name. Probably Douat had felt that, having done his share, he could safely leave the collection of the spoils to his efficient wife.

The Scotland Yard men could do no more. It was doubtful if Douat's actions in England constituted a legal offense. Druscovich had done all and more than could have been expected from him. The running down of the fugitive now became a matter for the French police. He handed over a report to them and officially dropped the case.

DEAD MEN MUST LIVE

For some reason or other the French people did not go to the trouble of searching for and extraditing Douat from the United States. That subtle individual, finding that the hue and cry was suspended, came to the hasty conclusion that he was forgotten. His enterprise did not find a full scope in America—and a man must live.

So he came back to Europe and took up his abode in Antwerp, where he took another name and called himself an export merchant. The sense of the theater that he had evinced at Bordeaux and in London served him adequately for a time among the Dutchmen, and he succeeded in inducing insurance companies to issue policies on a shipment of laces, clocks, and other goods to certain foreign ports by the ship Duc de Brabant.

An unfortunate incident at the quayside before these goods were loaded onto the boat resulted in their total destruction by fire. M. Douat put in a claim for $25,000, and produced invoices to show that the goods were worth at least twice as much.

THE FADEOUT

He might have got away with this but for an unfortunate oversight in the matter of detail. An insurance official nosing among the ruins found two barrels of tar, and the debris of cases which close examination showed had contained resin, chips, alcohol, powder, and charcoal.

Despite his protests the "export merchant" was arrested and during his trial he was identified as Vital Douat of Bordeaux, much wanted in France.

After a lengthy trial he was found guilty, but the French government asserted it held a prior right to deal with him. The common sense Dutchmen, who probably felt they might as well be spared the expense of maintaining him in one of their own prisons, conceded the point and Douat was sent on to Paris.

There Druscovich, sent over to give evidence, saw for the first time the man against whose vivid ingenuity he had matched himself. The tale of the empty coffin was unfolded, and the legal advisers of the prisoner saw that the well dressed young dandy of a detective had left no loophole by which their client could escape.

Douat was tried only for the fraud on the insurance company and was condemned to a long period of penal servitude. The elusive Mme. Douat kept well out of the way, and no more was heard of her.

(Another of these thrilling true stories will appear in an early issue.)

Grecian-Briton Called Greatest Living Salesman

LONDON.—(AP)—After the late Andrew Carnegie, Sir Basil Zaharoff probably is the greatest salesman of modern times.

His spectacular commercial career began with Vickers, Ltd., the British arms and armament manufacturers, who presented him with a loving cup recently on the fiftieth anniversary of his connection with the firm.

Sir Basil is a Greek, but was born in Constantinople. He went to Athens as a young boy and picked up many languages there. For several years he served as a guide to American and British tourists. Then he became an interpreter for Vickers' Athens representative and was soon transferred to London.

The young son of Greek traders advanced rapidly in Great Britain. He astonished the directors of Vickers one day by accepting their offer that he serve them as representative in Spain on a commission basis, but suggesting that he expected to be made a director if he booked an order for one million pounds.

They agreed to the proposal. Two months later he returned to London from Madrid and laid before them an order from the Spanish government for warships and war supplies aggregating more than five million pounds. He was admitted to the board.

Sir Basil later became the owner of mines, steamship companies, hotels, and even Monte Carlo.

A CONSPIRACY OF SILENCE.

Oscar Wilde was not a person renowned for sharpness of tongue, but there is one remark tradition ascribes to him that Whistler himself could hardly have made more cutting.

A certain rather dull poet once complained bitterly to Wilde of the lack of critical attention that his poems received. "There seems to be a conspiracy of silence against me," he declared. "What would you advise me to do?"

"Join it," came the unconsoling reply.—Youth's Companion.

Half of Young Frenchmen Found Unfit for Army

PARIS.—(AP)—More than half the young Frenchmen called to do their eighteen months' military service each year are found unfit. The proportion of rejected men has been growing each year since the war. Officials and medical men are anxious to learn why.

Before the war, when the young conscripts did three and even four years' service in the army, only about one man in ten was relieved of duty. Many of these, examined later, were accepted for office duty.

About one-third of the young men are refused as physically below par when they appear at the age of 20. About a sixth are sent home during their first three months' service, the hard life of the army and the manual labor or exercise developing defects previously undetected.

DYNATROPE ELECTRADIO
Without the uncertainty of untried apparatus and without sacrifice in quality of reception. There are two ways you can own an AC Receiver: One is to buy a new and untried Receiver, using a new and untried type of tube at a sacrifice of quality of reception. The other way is to simply buy a Dynatrope Electradio, entirely batteryless and using standard 201A type of tubes. With this method there is no sacrifice in reception because these tubes have been proven to be the best for the clearest and truest reproduction. There is no waiting for the tubes to warm up—no noise — no crackling, but instead the same standard of reception to which you are accustomed.

THE DUKE GOES TO WORK FOR THE CITY

He Judges His Fellow Man from the Jury Box

By Duke Bakrak.

A CUPPLE of weeks ago Thursday some friend of old man Grabfelder went duck shootin' and brought him a couple of Mallards. He don't like duck but his wife is crasy about it so he gave them to me. The next day tha B. and C. stuffed and roasted them and O! Boy! talk about eats, well I guess I finished pretty near a whole one myself. That bound of area was hanging around tha legs of a table so long that I got to thinking that maybe he was a bird dog.

Well, I had to open up a cupple buttons when I got through and I was in no mood to do dish washing so I pull tha headache act. Tha Mama says she din' believe me as no one was ever known to get GOUT in the head. Anyway she shampoos and massages tha crockery alone. Me and tha kids went in tha parlor and played orchestra, me at tha drum. This brings a howl from the kitchen to the effect that "Music hath charms to soothe tha savage pest" and she hoped it wood improve my head; also, that there was lots of room for improvement. Ain't it funny how getting out of tha dishes for one night gets their goats for a month?

TELL IT TO THE JUDGE

About eight o'clock tha door bell rings and some gent hollers up tha tube that he wood like to see Mr. Bakrak. I didn' reckognize his voice and for a minute or two I tried to think which outfit got a stall this month. Well, it wasn't a collector at all. The guy was from the court and he serves a paper on me which is printed on the top JURY SUMMONS. This is the first time I ever got one and I was telling pretty damn good about it. To get it meant two weeks' vacation in tha middle of tha winter.

Well, tha next morning I show tha paper to tha chief and he puts a damper on my feelings by telling me not to worry about tha summons as I has plenty of friends who cood get me off. I didn' dare tell him that I didn' want off. He gets busy on tha phone and pretty near every drag he knows tells him that there's a helova good going tha rounds and that it wasn't so damn easy at the present time. About noon he informs me that it looks pretty black. To me it looked very. The next suggestion he shoots looks pretty good to me 'cause there seemed to be room for a little double dealing. His dope was for me to appear at tha court and tell tha judge that I was either hard of hearing or that I didn' believe in capitol punishment, or perhaps try and get by with a excuse that it was our busy season. I told Grabfelder I'd do my darndest and that if none of tha excuses worked I might tell his honor I had a slight touch of leprosy.

HE GOES A-COURTING

Monday morning I appear on tha scene promptly at nine o'clock which was according to the instructions. At 9 o'clock his Honor blows in, puts on his black kimona and thanks us gentlemen for being prompt. Tha guy sittin' next to me says "What tha hell does he mean, prompt?" So I had to explain to tha bird that judges are on Fiji Island time which is one hour later than ares.

The first happening was a guy (which they called a bayleave) hitting his desk with a wooden hammer and mumbling something which sounded to me like "Here you! Here you! Iss onrubble cort now 'n seshun, selp m' God." Then he unloaded a mouthful of Farmers' Delight and when it hit tha spitoon it sounded like a wave hitting tha side of a boat. Next, tha judge remarks that if any of tha gentlemen cood show cause why they shoodn' serve they should step forward. Fifty-one of tha fifty nearly broke their legs gettin' up to tha bench.

The first geezer has got a excuse which old man Grabfelder overlooked. He tells tha judge that his wife is expecting a baby. This judge guy ain't no slouch and I guess he also noticed how nervous tha punk was so he starts to twist tha punk all up. Here's his system:

"Well, young man, your to be congratulated."

"Th-tha-thank y-yo-you."

"Baby? Well, that's fine!"

"Ye-yes s-sir."

"It's wonderful to have a new son."

"I'll sa-say so."

"Boy, isn't it?"

"Ye yes sir."

"Your a fast worker, five minutes ago you was expecting a baby and now you got a boy."

"W-we-well it's——"

"Take a seat in tha jury box."

TRAGICOMEDY

The next bloke gets asked real quick, "Are you married?" the guy says, "No," and the judge says, "Well, if your expecting an addition tha kid will be 10 years old when you get out." This bird's excuse is that his mother-in-law ain't expected to live and his honor says "Some men get all the breaks, take seat number two."

A foreign-lookin' egg is next and when he's asked his name he makes off he don't understand English. Just then the judge looks towards tha rear of tha courtroom an' says, "Young lady, you can't sit here with skirts above your knees." When tha Scandanavian turned around to get a look tha judge says, "Seat No. 3."

You could of died laughin' at the next egg. Before tha judge ever got a chance to question him, he says, very lady-like, "Your Honor, I don't believe in capitol punishment." The judge says "That's capitol, take No. 4."

There was one more bloke before I was called and he pulls tha "hard of hearing racket." When his honor asks him his name he cups his ears with his hands and says, "What?" The judge then says in a tone so low you coodn' of heard it a foot away, "Your excused, we can't use deaf jurors." Just before tha gink got to the door he was called back and told to keep chair No. 5 warm for a cupple of weeks.

Me, being a wise cracker, always wantin' to give tha folks a sample of real wit an' humor so as they cood split their sides laughin, I says, "Your honor, I was gonna tell you that I was deaf and dumb but I've changed my mind and I ain't gonna use any excuse." He says, "You might of fooled me on tha deaf part but I'd a believed you were dumb." Then he wise cracks me by saying, "I hope you won't mind our wooden upholstery for 2 weeks."

By noon twelve of us were working for tha city and tha court adjourned until two o'clock. This gave me a chance to beat it over to tha office and tell the ole man how I pleaded and begged to get let off but that they woodn' listen. "Grabby" was sore as hell even after I told him that when the judge asked me where I worked, his reply was, "A truly great corporation." Sometimes a line of bull braces up the old man but this time he just says, "When you see him again tell him for me to fly-ta-hell."

Two o'clock we're all back in are seats and there gonna start a case. I had an idea we wood be trying some big murder case and whadda ya think they dish? A poor soak gets himself full of Moon, slips his squaw a cupple of shiners and on tha way out to get another pint he stops in at tha floor below. Seems tha door was open but tha neighbor wasn't home so he accidentally borrows 21 bucks from under their mattress.

EXPERT TESTIMONY

For tha best part of three hours tha State's Attorney is pulling high brow language on us birds like "Preponderance of evidence," "Malice aforethought," "Habus Corpus," in fact everything except "Tempis Fugit." This one he coodn' of fooled me on 'cause I happen to know it means something about a clock that runs fast.

At five o'clock we were excused for tha day and told to report again at nine in tha morning. All Tuesday was taken up by tha witnesses. Every guy what got on the stand had a different story to tell. One guy who tha State's Attorney was trying to get bawled up gives us a good laugh with tha following:

Atty.—"Mr. Gutchkufsky, you said you boarded with tha Zinkovitches."

Gutch.—"Yez but da beds iz rottun."

Atty.—"Never mind about the beds."

Gutch.—"Sure, you dun't hafta zleep in 'em."

Atty.—"Have you ever seen Zinkovitch take a drink?"

Gutch.—"He neffer takes less as six."

Atty.—"Are you naturalized?"

Gutch.—"No, I'm Polish."

Atty.—"If Zinkovitch took six drinks would he be inebriated?"

Gutch.—"No, soused."

Atty.—"How much board do you pay?"

Gutch.—"Too much."

Other Lawyer—"Object."

Judge—"Jeckshun stained."

A STORY TELLER'S TALE

Well, this goes on for a helova long while and I got to thinking that if every witness was gonna take that long we woodn' get out of tha trenches till Xmas. The following day they put tha defendant, Zinkovitch, on tha stand and he fixes up a story worthy of not only gettin' aquitted but one that wood entitle him to a German iron cross and a paid up membership in tha "Liars Club."

His dope was that he came home with a terrible stomach ache and thought a little brandy wood do him good. The wife got peeved cause he woodn' eat any of tha ox joints she set in front of him and in pushing tha plate to one side tha whole mess went on tha floor. As she was going after tha mop to clean things up she slipped on tha gravvy and struck her eyes on tha leg of tha kitchin stove. He got scared and decided to go over to tha drug store and get some vaseline and as he was going down the steps tha neighbor came out and he told all about what happened to tha wife. The neighbor asked him if he had enough money to pay for tha vaseline and he said he wasn't sure so tha neighbor says here's twenty-one dollars.

THE INJUSTICE OF IT

Wednesday morning tha case was decided in Zinkovitch's favor as he only got 2 years instead of 20. After finishing two weeks of chair-warming by listening to about six more cases we got discharged with a vote of thanks by his Honor for being citizens who were willing to do what he terms a civic duty.

We all got about seventy bucks a piece and Saturday afternoon I get mixed up in a domino rolling contest and get took for 35 beans. When I get home I had to tell tha B. and C. that 35 was all they pay so she said we'd split it and I cood take her out Sunday night and blow her to a show. She sticks her seventeen and a half in tha bank and Monday morning when I get to tha office my check is waiting for me with 70 berries deducted. If that ain't a cheap trick I'm a Spaniard.

If I'd a known that things were going to turn out this way old Zinkovitch would be dead one year next November.

Did Not Choose to Run.

Our alumnae were having a luncheon. The luncheon was to be followed by an election of officers. One of the girls left immediately after the meal was served. She said she did not wish to remain for the election, because she knew she would be selected for some office. Because this girl was decidedly unpopular, we nicknamed her "Egotis." C. C.

Vox Feminae.

Asked if she would sing, Claire willingly consented.

"However, I must ask you folks not to coax me to sing more than twice," she said. "Usually people insist that I sing too much and my throat becomes irritated, and that is a detriment to my voice. I would not for worlds have anything happen to my voice, as it gives the public so much pleasure." The sad part of the story is that Claire could not sing. W. G.

What Fur?

A friend of mine purchased a fur coat at a sale in a downtown department store. I was with her when she made the purchase, and knew the price. I had to gasp when I heard her telling a neighbor that she had paid a large price for the finery and had bought it at one of the most exclusive shops in town. When I questioned her about this, she laughingly said: "That woman will tell the other neighbors about my coat, and naturally they will be green with envy." R. H. Y.

Maid in America.

The highly unpopular young woman who bought many useless things to get the most votes in a local popularity contest is a real big head. Now she's gloating over her manufactured glory. Z. S. S.

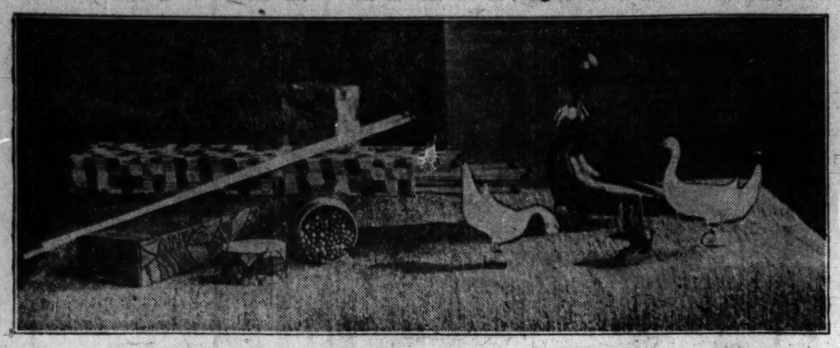
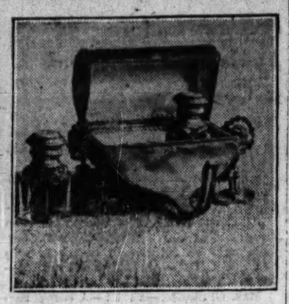
CHRISTMAS GIFTS FOR HER

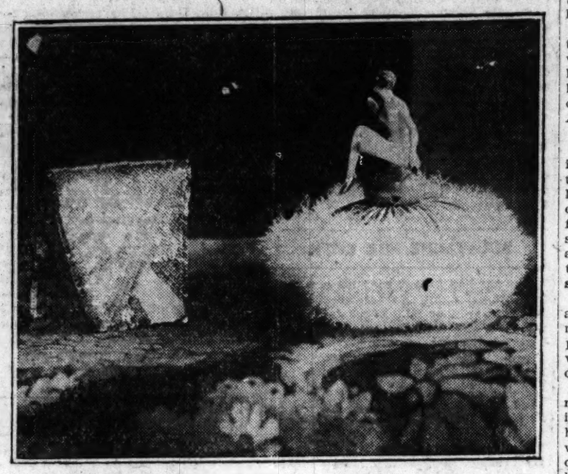


A group of small things, all enchanting. There are two swans and a fish that will float in your flower bowl, a trained seal, holding perfume, fireside matches, and small matches of rainbow hue. Charming small gifts, all of them, and none over $2.



A precious gift for a lady to whom one wants to give one's heart, but is not yet sure of its acceptance. A tortoise and gold casket holding two charming perfume bottles with enameled tops in blue and gold.

The latest feminine manifestations from Paris: handkerchiefs a good sixteen inches square made of sheerest chiffon, some lace trimmed, some printed, some initialed in a waterproof paint. Earrings and choker of amber and a jeweled box.



Paging Mr. Ziegfeld, only this lady is porcelain and she sits atop a French powder puff of eiderdown. The other object is a tiny vanity made of gold and silver sequins.

HOLLERAN YELL

Hates Narrow Minded People

Broad Minded Policies Are Announced

By Westbrook Pegler.

ONE fine trait about my character is that I am not inclined to be narrow minded, as I have a very broad mind myself and I am constantly crusading against narrow mindedness among my fellow brothers of the human race.

Personally, I have not got any use for narrow minded people, as I think they are a lot of hypocrites, and if I could have my way I would get up some kind of a law so every narrow minded hypocrite in the country would be housed up in the jails. I feel sure that every broad minded citizen would be in favor of this, because narrow mindedness has been sweeping the country like hot cakes and the only way to treat such people is to show them no consideration.

Furthermore, I would not bother with any jury trials for this kind of characters, because every one of them is a sneak in the grass and they might get some of their fellow hypocrites on the jury to cause a disagreement and defeat the ends of justice.

GIVE 'EM THE LIMIT

So instead of having jury trials, it would be my idea to hold an examination of the hypocrites and if they answered the questions in a narrow minded way I would simply give them the limit.

I suppose I feel the effects of narrow mindedness worse in my profession than they do in some other lines, because the first thing that these hypocrites always pick on is the sport of the squared circle, and whenever they wish to cause trouble for their fellow men they start casting charges on the great body of sportsmen who are working themselves to the quick to provide clean recreation for red blooded citizens. I do not know why they do this, because if I had to cast any charges I would start casting them at the king of England or the bolsheviks.

You can get contributions just as well that way, and instead of causing any harm you just cause a lot of innocent amusement and enjoyment for young and old.

FOREIGN DANGERS

My idea is that if you are sincere and you really wish to help the public to escape from some terrible danger you can always pick out a foreign danger without picking out some home industry and ruining a fellow citizen's business. I have never engaged in this line of work myself but I can easily see where I could create a great deal of public interest and collect a large amount of contributions by attacking some evil like the kaiser.

If I decided to attack the king of England I would hire a band and an auditorium and I would get up and make a speech stating that the minute the king of England's armies set foot on the fair soil of wherever I happened to live, I would shoot them down like dogs and I would then call for volunteers to follow me into the fray, charging them a nominal fee of ten dollars each for privates and all the way up to $50 each for generals, with special rates for clubs joining as a body, to defray the cost of administration.

"And," I would state, "I want to tell you right here and now that I believe in defending our soil against a lot of dissolute kings and dukes and lords to the last ditch, one hundred per cent, and the minute I see one of their cowardly sneaks of rotten, dirty, beer guzzling soldiers walking up Elm street or Pine street leering at my loved ones I believe in taking stern measures, absolutely."

BOLSHEVISM MUST GO

Or, if I happened to be attacking the bolsheviks I would make a speech demanding that our government catch all the bolshevik spies in our country and kick them into New York harbor and make them swim home.

"Of all the foul, no good bums in the world, the bolsheviks are the worst and they are nothing but a lot of no good loafers and bums," I would state. "And," I would state "if I had Trotsky up here on this platform I would haul off and hit him a paste in the kisser, because my ideals are all for good government and I believe positively in clean streets and that I am not afraid to state my position fearlessly and without fear."

But, of course, there might be a time when I would want to attack some danger right here at home to show my followers that I am a fighting leader and not picking on a lot of foreign menaces just because they are setups. So in that case I would attack New York City, because New York City is full of immorality and it is practically nothing to ride along Riverside drive on the top of a bus and look into the windows of the exclusive society mansions and see society debauches going on at all hours of the day and night.

"The society debauch has got to go," I would announce in a firm voice, "as it is un-American, and when I think of a lot of Wall street brokers in full dress suits and spats doing nothing but riding in taxicabs from one debauch to another and the slimy tentacles of temptation reaching out for our clean minded boys and girls to enmesh them into the labyrinth of this modern maelstrom, I do not hesitate that I am unqualifiedly opposed to it.

"Gotham," I would say, "is an un-American sink hole, rearing its ugly head in a country where one hundred million home loving citizens have no use for debauchers, and I pledge my word that I will not rest until I have gone to New York and investigated these debauches first hand, so we will now receive subscriptions of five dollars each from all those who are opposed to debauching in order to defray the expenses of this personal investigation."

By Margaret Orr.

HER name was Faith, but she didn't have any.

In the first place, she had been the child of parents already old. When she was 12, her father died. That seemed cruel. He had been such a dear, angelic father.

Now her mother had gone. That knocked the universe out from under her feet. And while she was stunned by this blow, the third and final tragedy occurred. The house was to be sold.

That house had been the home of five generations of her family. Their things furnished the rooms. The violets in the grass, the honeysuckle over the porch, the dog kennel in the back, everything told stories of their love and whimsicalities.

But real estate bidders came. Antique men, sharp, unkempt individuals, who looked as though they might belong to a sneaky crowd, piled into the house. And after one showy attack of hysteria, somebody led Faith away. And she forgot the canary, Pierette.

Faith's foster mother was a kindly, illogical woman too easily resigned to things. If anybody had told her that her husband was going to be electrocuted in the morning, she would have felt terribly for two minutes and then said, "Well, after all, perhaps it's just as well." Naturally she was strong on the "Heaven will take care of that" stuff.

So when Faith cried over Pierette and explained what the bird had meant to them all, the foster mother promptly assured her that Heaven would protect it. Beautiful essence of blah!

For her three tragic episodes had made Faith bitter. She didn't believe in Heaven. She believed the universe had got itself together somehow and was going where it wished. And little canaries stood a darn poor chance of being noticed.

With this attitude, Faith developed into a problem of mingled wilfulness and uncontrolled emotions. The future surely was inky, unless confidence in something bigger than herself could be re-established.

The foster mother unconsciously maddened the girl. The woman was easily shocked, ragged public dance halls, and particularly had her axe out for beach amusement places.

But as summertime had come and a beach resort was near, every time she could get "the bunch" together, Faith flapped over to the arcades, shooting galleries, merry-go-rounds with their blaring calliopes and half a dozen palmists.

The bunch was especially fascinated by all booths from which prizes were received. Sometimes they got dolls with big hats and silver tinsel; other times a box of candy; occasionally a vase.

Then, one afternoon Jimmy drew a bird cage and a bird. It was a canary. Faith's heart beat violently. Then it almost stopped as the tiny thing fluttered and she saw a well remembered spot upon its wing.

Well, she thought the man at the booth looked something like one of those antique men who had come to the house that day. Perhaps they were brothers. She didn't care what they were. She cried and talked to Pierette and was hysterical. Jimmy was glad to let her have the canary. And she went home.

The foster mother was startled to see a weeping youngster come up the walk swinging a bird cage. But she was still more surprised to hear the "hot line" that followed.

"You said nice girls didn't hang around beach places without getting tough. I hang around every day. And I'm fine. You told me never to go. But it's lucky I did or I'd never have found Pierette. As usual, you're wrong.'

"I'll admit that," was the answer; "and it'll be a fair exchange if you'll admit that there's something watched over, even canaries."

EFFICIENCY EXPERT.

"These cigars are smaller than they used to be."

"Yes, sir. You see, the manufacturer noticed that the last inch of the cigar is always thrown away, so he's making them that much shorter."

THE FORBIDDEN WOMAN

JETTA GOUDAL is "the forbidden woman" in the play of that name showing at the State-Lake this week. Rings on her fingers, and—do you suppose—bells on her toes?

IT SHOCKS ME—

Let's know what shocks you most in a brisk, brief rhyme, and we'll pay you $2 if we print it. Address Shocks, Sunday Tribune.

No, We're Shock Absorbers.

For years I've been writing short stories,
Am sending them hither and yon
To editors all over the country,
But they always come back anon.
Then last week I sent out another;
I did not bid it adieu,
I expected to see it again, but—
Well, wouldn't it shock you, too?
D. H.

Cheap Skate.

I know a girl who had a shock;
She couldn't find her stocking.
Her brother used it for a skating cap.
Now don't you think that shocking?
E. S.

Rejuvenated.

I'm shocked when I see my dear old beau
Down in the baldhead row,
While I'm the limelight of the stage,
In rôles of tender age.
L. D. L.

Station B-A-B-Y.

We had a shock last Monday eve;
Indeed, twas near a fright.
Our baby ceased his usual tune,
And gave us "silent night."
W. D. G.

He Misses the Point.

My husband is devoted, kind,
With words and deeds and kisses;
But shocks my very soul at times
By calling me "the missus."

Charleston Invades British Foreign Office

LONDON.—(AP)—The Charleston has invaded the august gold room at the British foreign office in Downing street. Lady Chamberlain introduced dancing at her first reception of the autumn season, and a modern band played all the latest dances, to the great delight of callers who had expected a regulation official tea.

In addition to dancing there were mah jong and bridge, with the result that callers of all ages could have diversion to their liking.

The innovation was a great success, and a surprising number of mature and sedate politicians showed skill almost equal to that of youthful diplomats.

Duchess of York Purchases Purse She Cannot Lose

LONDON.—(AP)—The reasons for the unbounded popularity of the duke of York and his little family may be many, but certainly one one of these is their human qualities.

The duke and duchess were doing some early Christmas shopping at the exhibition of work by disabled war veterans at the Imperial institute. They bought a number of articles for their royal baby, Princess Elizabeth.

A little wicker stool caught the duchess' quick eye and she turned to her husband to say:

"That's just the thing for the nursery—for Elizabeth to sit on if she won't learn her ABC's."

The duke approved this choice and the disabled man in attendance remarked, "A kind of stool of repentance."

The duchess exclaimed over a little leather bag which, she said, was like one a friend had given her before their visit to Australia. The ducal husband also seemed to remember it.

"Yes," he said with a sly smile, "that bag was one of the few things you never lost, and the one thing you never dropped anything out of. We'll have that bag."

BROADCASTING SNOWSHOE'S HOT NEWS FROM THE ARCTIC - - - - - - By Snowshoe Al

Noted Correspondent Gives Choice Excerpts From Hell Hole Howl:

The following are excerpts clipped from the latest issue of the Hell Hole Howl, an evening paper published at Hell Hole, Alaska. This little mining camp is situated 300 miles north of Nome, but you won't find it on the map. The paper is printed regularly every night, but don't forget that it only lasts six months.

ICE-HOUSE ROSIE, the hash slinger in the Cockroach Café, wishes to announce her engagement to Fish-face McGuire. Some ain't heard about it yet, but we handed the sad news as soon as we got up, which usually takes us until June. The Last Chance House is offering odds of 3 to 1 that Mr. McGuire will leave for work about six minutes after the knife sink through his scalp. Rosie, as you probably know, is the queen of the Hell Hole Beauty Contest, having received twelve more votes than Annie, the only other white girl in town.

AN ALASKAN ADONIS

Speaking of our recent Beauty Contest, the paper deplores the fact that only 9 of our 73 citizens were so unfortunate as to look at the two candidates and then cast their votes for Chas., whoever he is. Arctic Annie says she don't give a damn. Al Bute claims to have saw Mr. Chas. in a moving picture when she was visiting in Nome two years ago and he is certainly on the warpath, fellers.

Friends of Mr. & Mrs. White Eagle will regret to learn that their infant daughter, age two weeks, recently almost choked to death while eating a large piece of stewed dog meat. The parents feel pretty rotten about it and have decided not to wean any of their future children so speedily.

John Soo-wena and Chief Yamikan, a couple of local Cigar Signs, have opened a drug store, and they is having swinging doors put on the front of their establishment. Their entire stock, which consist of 4 barrels of dope tonic, arrived yesterday morning. The Yukon Kid brought it in from Canada by dog sled.

George Laughing Crow, who was recently separated from his wife, wishes us to announce that he will not be responsible for the purchase price of any fish, yellow candles, or gumdrops taken by Linda Laughing Crow from now on. We got a wow of a kick out of this because, to the best of our knowledge, George ain't yet paid for a damn thing that either of them has ever ate in the past.

A WHALE OF AN IDEA

Note: I will disclose the whereabouts of a large dead whale to anybody that will give me a good pair of pants in exchange for the information. The whale is in fairly good condition. Lots of meat. THE YUKON KID.

After paying us to print the above advertisement, the Yukon Kid got very interested and started telling all his friends where the whale is anyway, so hell, we might just as well tell the rest of youse. The whale is lying on the rocks at Anxiety Point on the Arctic Ocean, about fifty miles northwest of here. It's been resting there peacefully for the last five months, so if you ever get within two miles of it you won't have no trouble locating same. You're welcome.

The little son of Mr. and Mrs. Chief Sealion will be seven years old next Wednesday or Thursday or Friday (the parents ain't sure which day) and he will be given his first bath in honor of the event. The chief is very proud of the fact that his son is now old enough to go to work.

This paper wishes to announce another "scoop." The Hell Hole Howl usually prints important news from several months before they appear in any other paper within a 500 mile radius of here. We therefore take pride in informing our readers of the unfortunate death of Nicholas II., ex-Czar of Russia. We have always looked upon Nick as a sort of "near neighbor" because Siberia lies less than sixty miles west of Cape Prince of Wales. The czar died a few years ago, and further details will be given in our next issue if possible.

Special for Saturday only: Eggs, strictly fresh, $13 per dozen. Two dozen for $25. Tallow candles, wonderful for flavoring soup, fifty cents each. Fresh seal blubber, two pounds for a dollar. Live rabbits, three for a quarter. French post cards, $5 for set of six. Polar bear steak, rib of walrus, and fresh caught salmon at most reasonable prices. An electric fan given away free to every customer as a souvenir. Sitka Jim's new store. [Third shanty east of the abandoned gold mine.]

We learn that Snowshoe Al, who used to hang around Dawson City and Fairbanks with old Buzzard Bill, is now bumming around in a town called Chicago, which we understand is way down southeast of here. We hear that he is now married, and we sure feel sorry for Mrs. Snowshoe Al unless her husband is working a helluva lot steadier than he did around these parts. He sure was a lazy hound, damn if he wasn't! We have also been informed that he recently spoke before an Intercollegiate Convention held in a place called Detroit. That's hot news! When he left here he hadn't even finished his sophomore year in the college of hard knocks.

Eskimo Ike was shot and killed a few days ago. Nobody knows who did it, and furthermore nobody cares. Nobody went to his funeral. That's one nice thing about our town—a guy can be anything he wants; he can be a Prohibitionist or he can be popular.

O, DEER!

John Fishtale, the well known Eskimo architect who recently built a flock of igloos on an ice floe in Harrison Bay and called his property the Floating Subdivision, has just bumped into a hunk of hard luck. Somebody tossed a keg of blasting powder among his Zero Bungalows and blew the entire property all to hellengone. John attributes the incident to labor trouble, as he has been using non-union reindeers to haul the blocks of snow and ice which the houses are made of.

Our town should be very proud of the fact that it is soon going to have a moving pitcher show. Half-breed Hogan, who will run it, announces that he has contracted for some lively films including a serial entitled "The Perils of Pauline," starring Pearl White; also some Western pictures featuring Broncho Billy Anderson; also some comedies which feature John Bunny and Flora Finch. This town is sure getting ahead!

Warning! The party what stole seven wolf skins from my shanty is known, and unless he returns same immediately, his future address will be Hell. His present address is two doors west of the drug store.

[Signed] BILL LARSEN.

"Goofy" Smith, who spends most of his time trying to figure out things what don't make much difference, has just made the world's most unnecessary discovery. After experimenting for two months he has discovered that genuine whiskey, if used in liberal quantities, will remove grease spots from clothing. We wouldn't have bothered to print the above, only we figured that maybe somebody might like to shoot him. You understand, however, that this is not a suggestion.

JOIN A SLOW CLUB

The town of Circle recently resorted to an attack on this city through the medium of the press. They claim that our flourishing village is behind the times. We can't think of anything funnier than the town of Circle accusing anything on earth of being slow. It reminds us of the polecat what accused the onion of having a bum odor. That outfit is so damn slow that the Man Jong craze has just landed there. Why hell, up here we've already heard about cross word puzzles.

The boys hereabouts have discovered that Polar Bear Pete has just finished a grammar school education by correspondence, and they sure are regarding the guy with lots of awe. It came as quite a surprise, because to look at Pete you wouldn't think he had any sense whatever. However, he's a nice cuss and the chances are that he won't try to high hat anybody or make them feel inferior, which a lot of fellows would do if they was in his shoes. His diploma has just arrived and will be put on exhibition in the drug store window. Pete asks us to assure his friends that he will continue to be his own modest self, so evidently you can expect to see him loafing around town looking as ignorant as ever.

[Copyright: 1927: By The Chicago Tribune.]

HE'LL GET THE CREAM.

"I'm engaged in the dairy business at present," remarked the lawyer.

"Yon don't say!" exclaimed his friend, the doctor.

"Fact!" rejoined the legal light. "I'm milking an estate."—Boston Transcript.

The Last Word in Paris Fashions

Mid-Winter Finds the Smartly Dressed Woman Donning Costumes Trimmed with Astrakan.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS.—(Special Correspondence.)—One of the popular myths about fashion is the myth about the insatiable appetite of the Parisienne for novelty. She is pictured as a creature avid for the new in clothes, and continually changing what she has for something "just out." This pleasure in and desire for the different exists to a far greater extent in our younger and more restless women. The Parisienne retains the primitive feminine impulse to cling on to a good thing, even in clothes, once she has found it. Her adoption of styles is, thus, much more leisurely than that of the American. Witness her continued adherence to black, to beige hosiery, to the small hat through-out so many seasons, in spite of more colorful and newer offerings from the creators in the world's fashion mart.

Americans are coming around to her way of thinking in regard to the black costume for winter. The Parisienne clings to it because it is the surest short cut to a supreme chic sufficiently elastic to cover a multitude of occasions. When it is worn in Paris the black costume has cachet and distinction to a degree color rarely can attain. It is always right.

Black here is almost invariably combined in some way with astrakan fur for the coat and often, also, for the winter frock. This isn't anything to set the world on fire as news, but for the woman who must be well dressed and who has only a limited wardrobe, it is something to consider as a solution to most of her costume problems for daytime. The straight line black coat, well cut and trimmed with black or gray astrakan, is more often seen in smart places in Paris than any other. It is supremely practical when made of broadcloth, as it usually is, and it doesn't look dingy as so many utilitarian clothes do, unfortunately. It has a smart, luxurious air and may be worn over so many different kinds of frocks that it has few rivals.

I observe, despite its usefulness, that the black broadcloth coat is chosen in a great number of cases by women who don't have to think at all of the practical side of the clothes they wear. They select it because it has a chic and aristocratic air, which is reason enough, indeed.

The first figure at the left in our sketch is an illustration of the most popular coat in Paris today among discriminating women. As you see, the lines are those familiar slender ones so becoming to the average feminine figure. The cut of this coat is sufficiently complicated to be distinctive, with curved bands at the back fitted across the hipline, and slightly flaring gores at the sides of the skirt portion.

This Beer model of black broadcloth and shaded gray astrakan, shown at the extreme left, is a successful coat for many occasions.

Drecoll trims the frock of black crepe marocain shown next, with narrow bands of astrakan. The diagonal lines and asymmetrical hemline of this model are distinguished details.

Curved tucks repeat the curved-line closing of the black astrakan collar on this Philippe et Gaston coat of black broadcloth, increasing the effect of slenderness at the hipline. Pictured third.

Last, the Parisienne also wears a simple suit of navy blue broadcloth trimmed with gray astrakan, from Nicole Groult. The sweater is of navy blue tricot with small motifs of gray and rose. The narrow sash belt and the bands at the neckline and hips are of gray.

Beer has made this coat of black broadcloth, the new very silky surfaced kind from Rodier, and has trimmed it with gray astrakan, shading from dark gray at the outside of the revers, collar and the base of the cuffs, to a light gray on the inside borders. The sleeves, which are fitted above the elbows and flaring below, increase a great deal the gracefulness of the lines. The astrakan of the collar extends to the hemline on the left side, being placed on the inside of the coat from the hipline.

Our third figure illustrates another, slightly different version of the black broadcloth and astrakan coat about which the Parisienne is so mad this winter. This Philippe et Gaston garment changes the same slender lines subtly by placing the bulk in the upper part of the silhouette, and draping the straight skirt in a wrap around manner. The closing of this coat is diagonal, the shawl collar of black astrakan extending from the left shoulder clear around on the right hip. This line is excellent as a device for slenderizing the hipline, and Philippe et Gaston increases its effectiveness by a series of curved fanlike tucks that repeat the movement of the collar.

The sleeves are straight, comfortably roomy and cuffed with black astrakan. There is not much extreme novelty in such a coat, but there is a great deal of elegance, chic and real charm, to which trio mere newness is invariably sacrificed by the woman who is an expert in matters of dress.

A coat of this kind worn with a black satin frock is ideal for even the most formal afternoon affairs, and worn with a beige jersey dress and simple beige hat it makes an excellent wrap for the street in the morning. It may even be worn over an informal, sleeveless dinner dress of chiffon, lace or velvet, thus tripling its value to the woman who can have only one daytime coat.

Our second model is the astrakan trimmed frock a good many Parisiennes are wearing. Drecoll has made this dress of a flat crêpe, dull of surface. The long lines of the silhouette are diagonal, flaring toward the bottom at the left side, which droops lower than the right at the hemline. The side front seams and the under arm ones are diagonal, merging into flaring gores, between which are placed slightly circular godets, creating a beautiful asymmetrical line that gives cachet to the frock. The diagonal closing is outlined with a narrow band of astrakan, this band passing beneath a square buckle at the right hip. The sleeves are cuffed with the same fur and with the crêpe of the frock.

Our fourth model shows the astrakan trimmed suit that is seen often around Paris. This Nicole Groult model varies the color scheme a bit, combining navy blue broadcloth with gray astrakan bands, a color combination that will be flattering to a woman whose skin is too sallow to support black. The jacket is of the cardigan type, banded all around with gray astrakan, and lined with gray tricot. The inset pockets are also banded with the fur.

The skirt of this model has a wide panel at the front, ending in deep plaits at the sides, so that while the lines are straight and narrow the skirt is comfortably wide. It is made of navy blue broadcloth. The sweater blouse is of dark blue tricot, with small square motifs of gray, navy and rose.

The band at the neck and the hips is of gray tricot with figures in dark blue and rose, and the narrow knitted sash is also of gray. This suit is nominally sports, but is suitable for general daytime wear. The wool lining to the jacket and the fur trimming give sufficient warmth so that it is practical to wear in mid-winter.

MAIDEN MEDITATIONS

EXIT—STAGE ENTRANCE.

(The show flops. Mamie Hickey finds herself stranded with two days' pay, a business college diploma and a half stocked makeup box.)

The lady star is smashing things back in her dressing room;
The sheriff strikes the last act set while stage hands stand and gloom;
Our pale director hands the show's fat treasurer a clout.
They mix to fight
With scratch and bite—
A spotlight flickers out.

Tears make a mess of makeup as Yvettes and Geraldines
Pack up their little stepins (that's a lace-edged word for jeans).
The tenor's kissed routine good-by; the backer gets his slam;
Why rage or sigh
Or alibi?
All that is said means—damn.

LONG ODDS.

One never meets the hero gay
Who lives in newsstand tale,
All full of luck and juniper
And selling talk and kale.
Across the slick mahogany
He always makes his yards—
He weds the boss' daughter or
Gets "vice pres" on his cards.

(However)

Hard Fact still deals with men of toil
Whose destiny can harry them;
The world is full of bookkeepers,
And some one has to marry them.

THE POET OF COMMERCE.

(Cyrano and Villon would be stars in a modern advertising agency—probably hired to write perfume and washing machine accounts. . . . Overheard.)

Rare toys? Or idols? Were we that?
The symbol changes with the hour
And erstwhile goddesses descend
To rank as "so much buying power."

Love lost the lure of glamoured words
And poets now are prospered lads
Who write—to catch a lady's eye
And pin her fancy to—their ads.

YOU AND YOUR CHILDREN

by MRS. GLADYS HUNTINGTON BEVANS

Following the Trail Together.

CONVINCED, as we showed ourselves to be in last Sunday's article, that children should understand the natural, fundamental facts of life and its reproduction, many fathers and mothers still are completely in the dark as to how to go about enlightening their childen. And because they don't know what to do and don't feel themselves competent to study it out, they let it all slide, which is wrong. The problem must be solved.

In the first place, before any one can lead a child's mind along this path in the most natural way, he has to realize that a little child is intensely interested in everything in this world he has come into. He is a walking interrogation point. His questions embrace everything. All is grist that comes to the mill of his eager mental acquisitiveness.

So when his questions touch upon those facts of life which many of us have not learned to talk about and think about in a natural way, don't draw back, and whatever his or her age may be, don't regard this as an inordinate curiosity. It is a very normal curiosity and if you can't feel that it is, you're the wrong person to tell him anything.

Such curiosity has no more significance and is no more persistent than his curiosity about anything else.

Learning from Nature.

As to supplementing their direct questions with general information, let that cover all other forms of life than our own. Every part of it is absorbingly interesting, beginning with plant life and going on up into higher forms.

Do your children realize that when the big, brown bumbling bee gets himself powdered with golden pollen he's unwittingly going to fertilize the pistil (the mother, the female) of another flower with it? Do they know the almost unbelievable story of the salmon who leaps up streams and even waterfalls because nature has put in them the strong impulse to perpetuate their kind?

Do they know anything about the life of bees and how it is organized to allow no possibility of a slip-up on the future of their race? Have they ever seen a female moth emerge from her cocoon and lay her eggs immediately so that, if she does get her wings smashed up or meets with some animal whose menu she's on, it really doesn't matter, because she has done what nature intended her to—reproduced her species?

Have they been in close touch with dogs or cats that have had puppies or kittens? Let them learn these things and how nature has created everything male and female and implanted in them the urge to reproduce their kind. You will have to choose your words to fit their understanding, but you will find the idea well within their scope.

Older Children.

Naturally one answers the questions of little children differently from the way one answers the questions of older children. How you do that no one can prescribe exactly—it depends largely upon how much they already know and upon the child's mind and temperament.

Many parents who might otherwise answer their children's questions quite frankly are held back by a fear: "If I answer this question, how do I know what he'll ask next? How do I know how far he'll go?"

Don't let that worry you. Let him go just as far as he will. There's nothing he will ask you that you shouldn't answer. If you know, tell him you're not that you'll find out and do so. Or if you feel few things he will when he is older and cerely to tell him comes, explain it way.

This handling of which there have generations a dangerous false modesty, is many mothers and want to enlighten perplexity has been books being written helping. But few good. A well known long ago, when asked one, said, "I cannot."

The United States had prepared under simply written, helpful are obtainable by any final cost. I know they great assistance to fathers who did not feel with their children tant and interesting have a deep desire together. Information booklets is available column.

755—Woman's dress. Sizes 36, 38, 40, 42, 44, and 46 inches bust measure. Size 36 requires 3⅝ yards of 40 inch material with ⅞ yard of 36 inch contrasting.

833—Women's and misses' apron and cap. Sizes small, medium, and large. Two yards of 36 inch material and 5¾ yards of binding will be required.

3010—Girl's dress. Sizes 6, 8, 10, 12, and 14 years. Size 8 requires 1⅞ yards of 32 or 36 inch material with ¾ yard of 36 inch contrasting.

HOW TO USE THE PATTERNS

AN attractive cap and apron are shown here, the apron having strap extensions that cross at the center back and button there. Pattern No. 833 is cut in one piece, covers the dress well in the front, and in fact gives ample protection all around.

After the apron is cut, all the edges are bound, and it will be well before starting to do the binding to baste and stitch small pieces of the apron material where the buttonholes and buttons are to be put. If a single thickness of the material is all that is used, there soon will be tears. Baste these pieces to the straps and apron corners all around, turning the material in across the lower edge of each piece and stitching. The binding will hold the pieces in place around the edges.

It is possible to buy binding in all colors at the notion counter of any store, and this will make the finishing much easier.

Two large patch pockets are set on the front, and these add to the jaunty appearance of the apron, and are a great convenience. Green sateen, bound in a deeper shade of the same color, is pictured. Printed sateen, chintz, chambray, striped percale, and English prints can be chosen for service.

Pattern No. 3010 is a design for a dress for a girl that is just as particular as it is dainty. The two piece skirt is shirred and attached to a long waisted bodice closed at the center back. The cunning bolero has kimono sleeves and the neck is finished with a flat, round collar. Both the sleeve edges and the bottom of the bolero are shown with scalloped edges, but if you prefer, they can be made straight. There is something so pretty, though, about the scallops that I imagine most mothers will be willing to do the extra work that binding these edges will entail.

A straight, wide hem finishes the bottom of the skirt and if one of the wash materials is used, this may be stitched on the machine. If any other material is used, the hem should be put in by hand.

A French blue wool jersey with the underbodice and collar of tan, or a dark green velveteen, combined with flesh colored silk crêpe, or plain flannel combined with plaid are all exceptionally smart.

All wool challis is shown in delightful printed designs, and nothing could be more attractive or practical than to make the dress of this, using one of the washable crêpe de chines for binding. Such a dress will launder beautifully, making it an ideal choice for school wear.

The deep French V, extending to the waist line, makes the design of pattern No. 755 particularly suitable for large figures. The inverted plaits in the front add a graceful flare to the hemline, and the one piece sleeves cut rather wide at the hand, are given novel treatment, being set as they are into narrow bands at the wrists and allowing the extra width to flare beyond.

The back of the dress is in one piece and quite straight, while in the front the upper and lower parts are cut separately and joined. Perforations on the front skirt section show just where the inverted plait is to be laid each side of the center. Lay this front section out smooth on a table, and after the markings have been clearly put in lay the plaits from top to bottom. Baste them in place, basting from the top down.

There are two shoulder tucks on each side of the front. Perforations and instructions given with the pattern show exactly how they are to be laid and stitched. The fronts are underfaced and rolled back, forming revers. After this much has been done join the waist and skirt, following the directions carefully.

It will be pretty to have the facing, vestee, and sleeve bands made of something contrasting. Printed velvet with plain Canton faille crêpe contrasting, black crêpe satin with the dull side for the trimming contrast, wine red sheer velveteen, and supple tweed are smart combinations.

HISTORICAL AMERICA by CLIFFORD RAYMOND

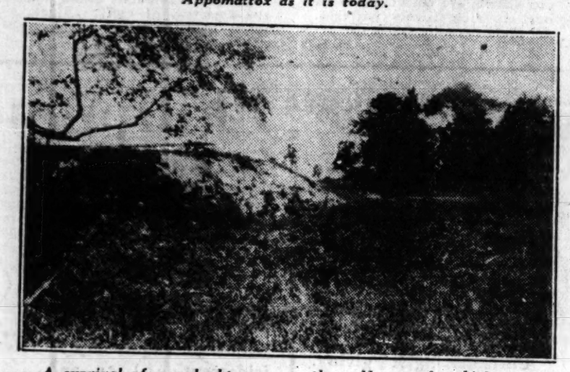
Appomattox

APPOMATTOX is on the highway from Richmond and from Petersburg to Lynchburg. The Appomattox river rises from two small forks near it, and the James is a mile to the north. It is Piedmont country, and Lynchburg, at the head of the Shenandoah valley, is not far away.

The present village of Appomattox is on the concrete. The vestiges of old Appomattox Courthouse are a mile or so off the main highway. In the nearby region they call it the Surrender Courthouse.

Appomattox is a symbol in the life of the republic. It may be the greatest. It is the token of the union to which each state now agrees without reservation. The civil war was not the first question of the reserved or presumed right of withdrawal from the common pact. War prior to the civil war was in South Carolina, with John C. Calhoun, as the foe to point to the possible use of the option. New England in 1814 had run its fingers over the cement to show how it crumbled and fell away if a state wanted to exercise its right to withdraw.

Appomattox as it is today.



A survival of a redoubt, now on the golf grounds which preserve much of the battlefield.

A WASTED SANCTUARY

At Appomattox these reservations end and, inasmuch as now all states willingly consent to the decree of fate and destiny there recorded, the spot to which the event is attached might be a national sanctuary. To an extent even which it derives a sort of spiritual significance it is a waste.

Appomattox is a closed room in the house. On April 9, 1865, Grant, returning from his first meeting with Lee, stopped the booming of the 100 guns of his troops and begun to fire a celebration of the surrender of the army of northern Virginia. The guns were stopped. The smoke curled away. There was silence. It endures at the surrender ground today.

Appomattox remained outside the frequent rancors and hatreds. It has not had any share in triumphs or memorials. The parade has passed it by. Weeds are its laurels. It is a name passing intangibly into the history of the nation, an event without figure, a symbol without substance.

THE SOUTH'S TABLETS

It contains now a few old houses, some empty, some occupied. There are patches of corn, tangles of vines, trees and briars, patches of pasture, and small metal tablets. The south, which has been too proud wholly to forget, has one small marker, inscribed:

"Here, on Sunday, April 9, 1865, after four years of heroic struggle in defense of principles believed fundamental to the existence of our government, Lee surrended 9,000 men, the remnant of an army still unconquered in spirit, to 118,000 men under Grant." The figures are wrong, but that seems unimportant.

Another tablet marks the spot of the courthouse, which was burned in 1892. There is a tablet indicating the site "of the house owned and occupied by Wilbur McLean in which Gen. U. S. Grant, U. S. A., and Gen. Robert E. Lee, C. S. A., met and agreed upon the terms of the surrender of the army of northern Virginia on the afternoon of Sunday, April 9, 1865. The house was taken down in 1893 with a view to its removal and reerection elsewhere."

A few piles of brick in a deep tangle of locusts and vines remain to show where the house was.

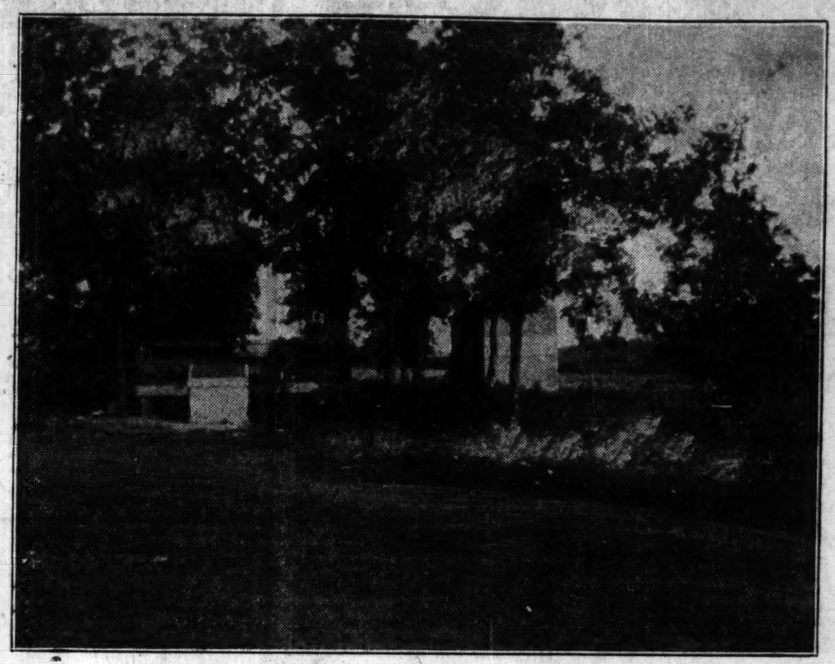
GEN. GRANT'S VERSION

The story of the meeting at the McLean house, as Grant told it in his memoirs, was:

". . . I found him [Lee] at the house of a Mr. McLean, at Appomattox Court House, with Col. Marshall, one of his staff officers, awaiting my arrival. The head of his column was occupying a hill, on a portion of which was an apple orchard, beyond a little valley which separated it from that on the crest of which Sheridan's forces were drawn up in line of battle to the south.

"Before stating what took place between Gen. Lee and myself I will give all there is of the story of the famous apple trees.

"Wars produce many stories of fiction, some of which are told until they are believed to be true. The war of the rebellion was no exception to this rule, and the story of the apple tree is one of those fictions based on a slight foundation of fact. As I have said, there was an apple orchard on the side of the hill occupied by the confederate forces. Running diagonally up the hill was a wagon road, which at one point ran very near one of the trees, so that the wheels of vehicles had on that side cut off the roots of this tree, leaving a little embankment. Gen. Babcock of my staff reported to me that when he first met Gen. Lee he was sitting upon this enbankment with his feet in the road below and his back resting against the tree. The story had no other foundation than that. Like many other stories, it would be very good if it were only true.



The Confederate marker at Appomattox near the site of the courthouse.

GREETINGS

"I had known Gen. Lee in the old army, and had served with him in the Mexican war, but did not suppose, owing to the difference in our age and rank, that he would remember me, while I would more naturally remember him distinctly, because he was the chief of staff of Gen. Scott in the Mexican war.

"When I had left camp that morning I had not expected so soon the result that was then taking place, and consequently was in rough garb. I was without a sword, as I usually was when on horseback in the field, and wore a soldier's blouse for a coat, with the shoulder straps of my rank to indicate to the army who I was. When I went into the house I found Gen. Lee. We greeted each other and, after shaking hands, took our seats. I had my staff with me, a good portion of whom were in the room during the whole of the interview.

"What Gen. Lee's feelings were I do not know. As he was a man of much dignity, with an impassive face, it was impossible to say whether he felt inwardly glad that the end had finally come, or felt sad over the result and was too manly to show it. Whatever his feelings, they were entirely concealed from my observation; but my own feelings, which had been quite jubilant on the receipt of his letter, were sad and depressed. I felt like anything rather than rejoicing at the downfall of a foe who had fought so long and valiantly, and had suffered so much for a cause, though that cause was, I believe, one of the worst for which a people ever fought and one for which there was the least excuse. I do not question, however, the sincerity of the great mass of those who were opposed to us.

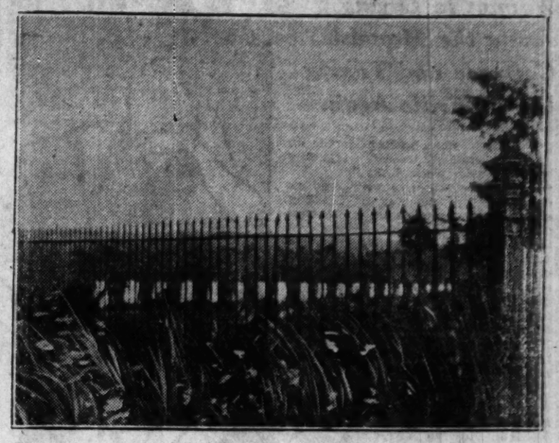
"Gen. Lee was dressed in a full uniform, which was entirely new, and was wearing a sword of considerable value—very likely the sword which had been presented by the state of Virginia. At all events, it was an entirely different sword from the one that would ordinarily be worn in the field. In my rough traveling suit, the uniform of a private with the straps of a lieutenant general, I must have contrasted very strangely with a man so handsomely dressed, six feet high, and of faultless form. But this was not a matter that I thought of until afterward.

"We soon fell into a conversation about old army times. He remarked that he remembered me very well in the old army, and I told him that as a matter of course I remembered him perfectly, but from the difference in our rank and years [there being about sixteen years' difference in our ages], I had thought it very likely that I had not attracted his attention sufficiently to be remembered by him after such a long interval. Our conversation grew so pleasant that I almost forgot the object of our meeting.

"After the conversation had run on in this style for some time, Gen. Lee called my attention to the object of our meeting, and said that he had asked for this interview for the purpose of getting from me the terms I proposed to give his army. I said that I meant merely that his army should lay down their arms, not to take them up again during the continuance of the war unless duly and properly exchanged. He said that he had so understood my letter."



The little confederate graveyard.

THOUGHTFULNESS

No capitulation of surrender was signed. After the talk about the old army, Lee again asked what terms Grant would offer. Grant asked Gen. Parker, his staff secretary, for writing material, and wrote a letter addressed to Lee informing him that a surrender of arms, artillery, and public property, with officers giving their individual parole and with the men paroled by companies or regiments, would be accepted. As he wrote he thought of the need the southern soldiers would have for their horses when they were home again. He exempted the horses from the property to be surrendered. He exempted side arms in consideration of the possessors' feelings.

Lee read the letter and said the thoughtfulness regarding the horses would have a happy effect on his army. He wrote a letter accepting the terms, adding in comment to Grant that in the confederate army the cavalrymen and artillery men used their own and not government horses. Grant said that was not covered in his letter but the men, being small farmers, would need their horses and he would order that any man claiming a horse or mule should be allowed to take it home with him.

A SECOND MEETING

Lee said he would be obliged to ask for rations and forage. His provision trains had been captured. Grant asked him for how many men. Lee replied about 20,000, and Grant authorized the rationing. His own army was getting forage from the country.

The next morning Grant was going to Washington, but before he went—"I thought I would like to see Gen. Lee again." He rode out with a bugler and a staff officer with a white flag. Lee, learning who wanted to see him, rode out between the lines and the two generals had "a very pleasant conversation of over a half hour." Grant urged Lee to counsel submission on the part of other confederate armed forces to prevent further loss. That would require consultation with the confederate president first, the Virginian said, but he thought the south would be persuaded of the uselessness of further resistance.

Federal officers obtained permission of Lee to visit confederate officers they had known in the "old army" when the states were all in the family. Grant went on to Washington. There was no bitterness then. Reconstruction was yet to come.

SILENCE

Appomattox went to sleep and no one raises a voice there in moralizing or memorializing. There are some young children in the families which live by cultivating the garden patches. They have Minie balls if the visitor wants them. They can find the metal tablets in the corn and weeds. One marks the position of a confederate battery to which legend attributes the last shot, another the position of some federal troops. There is a deserted general store, an occupied house which had been a hotel, a little confederate graveyard in which half the markers read: "C. S. A. Unknown Soldier."

Appomattox is neither a tragedy nor a triumph. It is merely a closed room.

PERFECTION BY ELIMINATION by Persis Standish

The Formal Dinner, Like Royalty, Is Rare; the Smaller, Simpler, Smarter Affair Is the Thing

AT the beginning of the winter season letters come in about the etiquette of dinner parties and are full of queries about serving, menus, etc. Many of the letters are about "formal dinners." Why formal? Formality, like royalty, is becoming scarce, if not extinct. It is only fitting when it inhabits palaces, and then the dwellers therein soon grow bored with it.

Some persons, I think, are suffering from a confusion of terms. If by formality they mean dignity, then dignity is a guest that can be invited to a cottage to dine as well as to the pontifical or the Vatican and is just as much at home there.

Giving a dinner party of a number of courses is an art that requires rather vast experience or a special talent to master. It requires more ingredients than those that go to make up the most complex of French menus. It requires, for instance, conversation, plenty of equipment, ingenuity in decoration, careful, efficient and smart service, and food that would make a dyspeptic hungry.

And on top of all these is required that hovering, intangible, exquisite spirit of hospitality that is omniscient, omnipresent and charitable, and which, with all these divine qualities, is yet a human thing. Such is the perfect dinner party and to its perfections the guest must contribute his share. Of course, the hostess must, first of all, select guests who have something to contribute either in spiritual, moral or mundane qualities. But having selected them, she expects every man to do his duty.

Be Agreeable.

So, if you are invited to a dinner party and you are a man, put in your most scintillating buttons and your most glittering mots. Expect to find each woman present a sister of Minerva or Helen, and tell her so—tell Helen, of course, that she is a sister of Minerva, and Minerva that she is a sister of Helen.

If you are a woman, burnish your hair, massage your face, put on your most attractive and subtle frock, the one that is too picturesque for cafés and yet too simple for the opera. Attune your ear to hear in even stupid male conversation the subtleties of Machiavelli and the lyrics of Abelard. Attune your laugh to respond like silver bells to the termination of anecdote.

Dispense with perfume if it is more than very faint, for perfume, dear sisters, has spoiled many a capricious appetite. I can speak with authority on this subject, having been told so by no less than ten males of varying status social and chronological. I have a great many male relatives of varying ages and tastes, and not fewer than five of them have at one time or another expressed decided views on the subject of perfume at meals.

On one occasion a beautiful and rather celebrated woman was dining with us, and my brother, the eldest male of the family, was, of course, to sit next her. Just before dinner he said to my mother, "Would you mind sitting her next to Blank?" (He named his younger brother.) "She made me sick at breakfast with that horrible scent of hers and I'd like to eat my dinner."

Aim at Perfection.

But to get back to the perfect dinner party, perhaps such perfection as one aims at is only accomplished on Olympus or in Valhalla. (Now I somehow have the impression Valhallesque table manners must be bad—too much swilling of celestial beer and too much attention to heavenly skittles.) However, the thing to do is to aim at perfection, and one may hit many a delightful mark lower down.

The way to aim at perfection is to aim at simplicity by elimination, to say to oneself, "I cannot have it thus and so, so I will not try it so and thus. Instead of having seven imperfect courses I will have three perfect ones. Instead of having twelve guests I will have four—or six. Instead of having three indifferent waitresses I will have one efficient one. Instead of having elaborate decorations of too exotic a character I will have a simple bowl of maidenhair and two candles.

"Instead of having too much on the table I will have too little. Instead of having that brilliant Jones girl, who is delightful for half an hour and a bore for two hours, I will have Maggie Brown, who is such a good listener and who has that divine gift of common sense.

"Instead of having small green strawberries out of season I will have ripe, luscious pineapple which is in. Instead of serving Turkish coffee (which I do not know how to make like Mrs. Blank de Blank, who does), I will serve the variety which is made with cold water and a tablespoon for each cup, and which is amber clear when a quarter of an egg is added thereto.

Resolved Not to Fret.

"I will read what Persis Standish promises to say about whether the plates should be removed from left to right and where the salad fork should be, and I will drill my waitress in these things and then forget them on the night of the dinner.

"I will not have about me that air of a clucking hen that rattles the servants and makes guests uncomfortable." Do this and your problem is solved.

BEAUTY ANSWERS by Gabrielle Donnelly

What's your beauty ill? Too fat? Too thin? Too hairy? Oily hair, oily skin, blackheads, blemishes, or blackheads? Flat or flat footed? Write to me. I have a book, a diet, or a set of exercises to help you, and you're welcome to write to all the advice I can give you. If you wish a personal reply, send stamped, addressed envelope. Address Gabrielle Donnelly, The Tribune, Chicago.

MISS K. B. X.: YOU SHOULD brush your teeth every morning and night, and if possible after each meal. It is well to have two toothbrushes and use them alternately, giving each one a chance to dry thoroughly. The mouth wash is an excellent one to use. It is recommended by dentists. Send a stamped addressed envelope for my booklet on "Mouth Hygiene."

MISS R.: TO CORRECT ROUNDED shoulders you must learn to stand and walk correctly. Stand with the abdomen drawn in, chest out, and think of having a string attached to the back of the head. Allow the shoulders to fall naturally. Do not try to force them back. Arms and hands should be relaxed. Try walking in this way several times a day for a period of ten or fifteen mintes each time, and send a stamped, addressed envelope for exercises to overcome the round shoulders.

BROWN EYES: THIN PEOPLE require an abundant supply of energy food or fuel foods, fats, starch, and sugar. They need to secure the largest number of calories in the most digestible form. Butter and oil are the best fats for them, as they are not likely to disturb digestion. Send stamped, addressed envelope for food to be eaten.

MISS M.: THERE IS NO WAY OF decreasing the size of the joints of the fingers, but by building up the rest of the hand the joints are made to appear smaller. Massage the hands with olive oil or a good cold cream. Swinging Indian clubs will be found helpful in developing the tissues.

MARTHA P.: STANDARD weight for a girl of 16, 5 feet 1, is 110 pounds. It will not be necessary, nor would it be wise for you to reduce, but you may eat sparingly of candy and sweets. They are most fattening.

Doris Blake's Answers to Love Problems

Have you a perplexing love affair on which you need the counsel of a friend? Write to Doris Blake, care The Tribune, Chicago. If you wish a personal reply please send a stamped addressed envelope.

Up to You.

"Dear Miss Blake: A certain young man has been asking me for dates. He seemed interested but as he had a steady girl I hesitated. Finally, I consented to go with him. After a pleasant evening together, he asked how long it would be before I would let him come back again. I laughed and went into the house without answering.

"He hesn't mentioned it again. Would it be proper to ask him to call?

"FLAPPER."

You weren't very encouraging, so naturally he didn't ask you again. It's up to you to let him know you'd be glad to have him come again, dear.

Apologize.

"Dear Miss Blake: My friend and I had an argument. I am willing to give in, but fear he will snub me.

"HEARTBROKEN."

If you were to blame, or you're equally guilty, don't hesitate to say so.

THE RETURN OF THE FEMININE

by Doris Blake

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Some Reasons Why Woman Is Laying Aside the Mannish Costume and Taking Up the Frills Again

A MAN was holding forth on "woman's present tendency towards masculinity."

"You surprise me," said an objector. "To my way of thinking, she is becoming more and more feminine. Look at the dress of the women in business, for instance. Compare it with the mannish clothes of their early entrance into the field of competition. It's only a freak you see nowadays in shirt and forbiddingly tailored suit. Take woman's patronage of beauty parlors as another example. Her cosmetic bills are mounting daily higher and higher. Surely these are not tendencies towards masculinity."

"O, so far as her personal self is concerned, yes—possibly she is reverting to type. But as to her rights, freedom, privileges recently won—wouldn't you say she's stolen man's weapons——"

"Yes," said an intruder, "and she's scared to death, herself, of what is going to happen with them in her hands."

The intruder proceeded to relate another one of those oft-heard tales of a great financial success missing so many of the joys dear to women by playing her masculine rôle too well.

Immediately the subject was directed into the channel of what the future holds for woman—whether she has been traveling in a circle that, at some early date, will bring her back to where she started.

The sex antagonism that has grown concurrently with woman's progress the woman herself does not like. She loses too much through it. The old biological urge keeps cropping up and calling for treatment as a woman, a slightly dependent woman. And the knowledge that in fighting a man with his own weapons she is hopelessly outclassed, discourages her. So the question is constantly rising in a woman's mind as to whether it is not better in the long run to play the woman game, even on a man's job.

There is always a tinge of bitterness in the voice of a woman who has "asked no favors" when she speaks of the fluffy headed little creature who gets what she wants by playing the feminine.

Are women learning slowly that they succeed better when they stick to their own guns?

"Unfair" Competition.

A story is current of a clever, English authoress, sculptress, journalist, and beauty. She tells that in journalism she was unpopular with the men against whom she had to compete. They said that she used her femininity to get results that were impossible to them as mere males.

"Unfair competition," was their verdict.

Blandly admitting the charge, the woman argued: "But what was I to do? If I had not exploited the last ounce of value to be got out of my friendships and the fact that I was a woman, the men would have beaten me. I had a living to get for myself and my children. Not to have used all my weapons would have been a criminal kind of chivalry."

Unfair or wise, women are finding out that the best way to beat a man at his own game is to lure him on with their own.

There is a French aphorism to the effect that "a clever woman never meets a man on his own ground," a reason advanced by a well known Parisian designer for the unreadiness of his countrywomen to adopt sports clothes.

"The best she can ever hope to achieve is a bad imitation of men. With her own abundant equipment, why be a bad imitation of anything?" the designer naively argued.

And that, trained observers confide, is what is going on in the minds of a good many of the so-called independents whose motto heretofore was to eliminate sex entirely in the field of competition.

Not that there are any signs on the horizon of a speedy return to the had old days when one could be "poor but genteel," or when one had to accept marriage as the only course open.

But there is something slightly ominous in the steadily increasing acceptance of the more graceful frock of an earlier period. If you look back over history, nothing, you will find, epitomizes the spirit of a period as its dress. Whether the clothes produce the period, or vice versa, does not matter. Dress is a frank reflection of the moment's psychology.

The Ultimate in Elimination.

Woman, in her dress, has reached the ultimate limit of elimination. Nothing more can be decently eliminated or abbreviated. So alteration in style is bound to come. It is unlikely that the trailing skirt will reappear any more than the Victorian type of woman, but dress already shows that "we are rounding our curve into femininity again," as an English writer puts it.

"The significant thing," this writer says, "is that you cannot be a Madame Pompadour in a one-piece bathing suit, or a Cleopatra in a stiff little business suit, and neither can you be a boy—even an imitation one—in a real girl's frock."

How much the man is responsible for the temporary phase of masculinity that swept the post-war girlhood, it is difficult to say. One authority argues that women could not be expected to be women or even pretend to be clinging and semi-helpless when so many men are giving bad imitations of flappers. There is nothing to cling to and the work has to be done, and if women are getting sick of playing at being boys and men it is because so many of the male sex are lamentably incapable of playing the part, themselves.

"It is the effeminacy and incompetency of so many modern men that is creating seventy-five per cent of the so-called masculinity among women," says our authority. "Look about. See the number of women who are the best 'men' of their families—the number of women who are looked to by their families to keep them going."

Those who have been the best "men" will tell you that it is a weary, rending business that would be left quickly enough to men if they were fit to shoulder the burden. Being woman, it is impossible not to let the head drop wearily into the hands and pray that the burden be lifted.

The TRIBUNE COOK BOOK

The Cook, with Her Cookies, Is Imitating the Fruit Trees in Giving Us Sweet Food Pieces to Eat Out of Hand.

All recipes have been scientifically tested by Miss Eddington with current market materials and are indorsed by her.

By Jane Eddington

A COOKIE is a convenient and diverting dainty. How could the old eggnogg makers have got on without it? Pleasant drinks of many sorts, and ices and cheeses, are enhanced by a little sweet piece as a companion. And when cookies are freshly made they have an alluring aroma, a delicious flavor, and other gratifying qualities which they usually do not have when they have aged, but there are exceptions—fruit cookies, like fruit cakes, may require ripening. But the pleasant sweet smell and taste of a freshly baked sugar cookie should yield impetus to drive one to make them at home. How to begin? We are about, and below, to suggest the sour cream drop cookie as a starting point.

But the making of drop cookies is no great help to one who would make rolled out dough cookies, though just as good experience can be got in baking drop cookies as in baking rolled cookies, and, since the baking of cookies may make such a difference in the quality of these sweet bits, a good experience with dropped cookies is not to be despised.

Yet we must remember that a good cookie recipe, whether for dropped or rolled cookies, is but a starting point. Extremely poor cookies may be the finish. And when the recipe is poor, what can be done? It is too bad that there are a confusing number of cookie recipes to be found—fine, good, bad, and indifferent. Even an inexperienced cook might feel baffled when she started out for new experience unless she gritted her teeth and put all her wits to work.

To Make Cookies Soft.

Thin and crisp cookies have their place, but so do those which are soft and thick. The thin sort come from expert rolling and baking. Most people get cookies half way between these two.

To get the soft and somewhat thick cookies the dough must be worked as little as possible, patted out, and not rolled thin. The softest cookies can never be secured by taking the scraps from one cutting, even when these are molded with a fresh ball of dough, as is often done.

How to Get a Dough.

A famous cookie maker once wrote me that she thought she had an infallible rule for getting her dough of the right consistency. She stirred flour in until the dough was quite thick; then she used an ordinary dinner knife and cut in flour until the dough would not stick when she pressed down upon it. Then she let the dough stand in a cold place over night, but not in a refrigerator. A cold and dry room is better when the dough stands and slowly stiffens, but ice can be used for quick work—on ice. This rule seems to me to be helpful, but there are other ways yet.

This rule went along with the statement that the author of it had just made eleven different batches of cookies for Christmas gifts—1,600 cookies in all. And the eleven batches did not at all represent her variety, for she had collected many cutters and forms and she decorated the tops of her cookies in the most various ways so as to make them not only attractive to look at but to vary in flavor or taste.

Substitutes for Doughs.

The inexperienced cook who has not learned to make and roll a cookie dough can use a drop cookie batter with a bit more flour; make this up into a roll, chill it, and then cut slices from it to bake. Such cookies are also made from chilled doughs and have names like "ice box cookies" and "sausage cookies."

To get a dough that will roll out as thin as a wafer and then to roll it requires skill and experience of somewhat the same sort as pie crust making. One who wishes to excel in either or both of these expertnesses can gain skill for one when she works with the other.

On Baking Cookies.

Some doughs and batters will stand more heat than others, and the amount of butter used influences this matter. An experiment has recently been going on in this vicinity with one single batter given many environments and various additions. When it was a drop batter and cooked on an ascending heat the cookies were thick. When it was baked on a descending heat they were thin.

The maker, who gave them much loving attention and thought, was amazed at her results, thinking it was extraordinary that blood sisters, as she called them, should vary so much in appearance. Then she went on and made other members of her final family with many "in-laws." As she cooked them she hovered near the oven much of the time. The cooking time is rather brief for cookies, and she could see through the glass door, helped by a flash light, what the heat was doing to her prodigies and she enjoyed seeing. You see, cookie making can be recommended as a fine diversion, if approached unnervously and with curiosity and ambition.

Sour Cream Cookies.

To call a cookie a sour cream cookie is not to be at all specific, for there can be found many formulas with this name and with directions for cookies in which one of the ingredients is sour cream. In some, brown sugar is used. Most of them have eggs, but we can get good effects without them. Sometimes graham flour is used instead of white, and there are barley cookies, also. Fruit and chocolate and seeds, like caraway, are also made with sour cream.

Sour Cream Recipe.

The base for many variations made as described above "On Baking Cookies" was the following:

One-half cup of sour cream, one-half cup sugar, one cup flour, one-third teaspoon soda, one-half teaspoon salt, one-fourth teaspoon nutmeg. Whip the cream until it is smooth. Save out half a teaspoon of it in which to dissolve soda and beat into it one-half cup of sugar, the salt and nutmeg. Before adding the flour to this mixture sift it twice, and mix it in a little at a time, getting finally a stiff dough into which mix the dissolved soda.

Take up teaspoons of the dough and drop them on a buttered and floured tin. Bake them from ten to twelve minutes on either an ascending or descending temperature, according to what you want. Hot ovens do one thing to cookies and cooler ones another.

Experiments.

First the above drop batter was experimented with. Some drops of it baked on a descending temperature, starting with 400 degrees and rapidly descending to 350, being spread out with a wet spoon first could be rolled while they were hot. Some which were baked on an ascending temperature starting at 325 ran together and were like a thin tea cake. Five different kinds of hermitlike cookies were secured with this sort of batter, thickened up only as much as the flour used on raisins and fruit would do so, but a rather generous amount was used—four tablespoons to the above with four tablespoons of chopped raisins and four of chopped walnuts.

Then, to one part of the fruited batter, a little clove and cinnamon, melted butter and brown sugar were added, and to another part some molasses and a teaspoon of pulverized coffee. The total number of changes were enough to be confusing, but they did not show how the batter could be pleasantly varied by quite slight effort.

Finally, one of the fruited batters, thickened, was formed into a roll, chilled for an hour, then cut across with a silver fruit knife dipped in hot water. The thin slices, when baked, were cookie shaped, although the experiment was tried of perfecting the shape with fingers wet in cold water.

Sugar Cookie Dough.

The following recipe yields a high grade cookie, or a base that is excellent to use when many forms are to be made with different cutters and many varieties secured by different icings and garnishes. It requires quick skill in massing the dough to make it sufficiently compact. Squeeze it hard if you cannot get it right, but only for once or twice: Two egg yolks, one and one-fourth cups of flour, three-eighths cup of butter, one-fourth cup sugar, flavor to suit. Combine the egg yolks, flour, butter and sugar, and work the whole as a pie crust is worked or mixed, then when the whole can be massed into a dough of uniform consistency, knead it for fifteen minutes, or until it is rather shining and stretchy. (This is a German way, and the formula is German and excellent.)

Next, put it away, covered up in a cool place for half an hour, then roll out in a thin and even shape, on a board into which flour has been rubbed to smoothness.

Finally, cut out cookies in a pleasing variety of shapes, and garnish variously, or bake the cookies and then ice them. Unless exceedingly thin, these can be baked in an oven as hot as 375 degrees. Remember there is more or less loss of heat in opening the oven.

Cookie Shapes.

With a nice dough like the above a cookie cutter which will give a fleur-de-lis shape will give a chance for some "dressy" effects. Put icing where the conventional band is and also some on the tips. Stars are also attractive, and colored icings can be used with great effect on such cookies, as they cannot on the thinnest of all cookies.

Sweet Graham Wafers.

The following recipe for an excellent little thing is repeated after a rather long rest, partly because an amateur cook can get good results with it: One-half cup of sour cream, one-half cup of granulated sugar, one cup or one cup and about two tablespoons more of graham flour, measured after sifting it once; one-half teaspoon salt, one-half teaspoon soda, white flour to handle or knead with. Beat up cream in mixing bowl, beat in soda or dissolve it last, as in sour cream cookie recipe, add sugar, salt, and flour and stir to a stiff dough.

Put the white flour on to a bread board and rub it smooth, having made the dough into a ball, roll it thin, then cut it into strips and these into domino sized pieces or oblongs three inches long and less than an inch wide. Or cut it into round about two inches in diameter. Prick with a fork before baking. These are best if sprinkled with sugar before they are baked. Bake in a slow oven until they are crisp, but not greatly browned.

The Strange Adventures of Young Robinson Grewso

By KEMBLE

He was called him Robin, his dad
called him Son;
He grew like a weed and thought it
great fun,
So he called himself Robinson
Grewso.

ROBIN and his pals were tickled pink over the way "Yap" had scared the Cannibal King and Queen out of the cabin. He was certainly some dog.

"Yes, sah," chimed in Chocolate Sundae, "dat ole Kiyi knows more dan most folks. I'se knowed him ever since he come on dis island. Why, Mass Robin, he used ter bury all de ole bones what he kin find and inside of eight months small bushes would spring up an' hangin' on each little limb would be de nicest, fat, juicy hunk er meat yer ever tasted."

Everybody laughed at Sundae and told him he was spoofing, but the little tar baby stuck to his story. "All right, you laugh at me. Jis git him some ole bones an' see what's gwine to happen."

"Why not give him a pie and let him try it?" chuckled Chin-Chin. "Maybe he can grow some pieplant," and the old bird giggled and sputtered at his own joke.

"Talking about pies," chimed in Bunny. "I'm just plain hungry. Where's that hot bread you were going to bake for us, Sundae?"

The little black cook batted his eyes. "Goodness gracious," he exclaimed, "I 'most done forgot it. It must be ris and ready to bake by dis time."

Then he beat it out for the outdoor kitchen where the huge mess of dough was already bulging over the edges of the big pan. Soon it was freer, now clear of the pan, and as it rose steadily Sundae made a flying leap and wrapped his arms around the huge mass.

"Help! Help!" he called in a frightened voice. "Come quick, everybody." But before Robin and his pals could reach the spot the unbaked bread was some ten feet above them with Sundae hanging on for dear life.

Round and round in circles darted the swelling ball. Higher and higher it rose. Chin-Chin started in pursuit, but his stubby wings could make no headway and he tumbled back to the earth.

"It's carrying him out to sea," shouted Roy. "Man the boat and start after him."

All was turmoil now, the sail was hoisted and out shot the little craft. High in the air sailed Sundae, over the rough waters of the lake.

Sweet Marie wept and wrung her hands. "I told him not to put in so much yeast, but he wouldn't mind me."

And now a new terror was looming up through the darkening clouds. The old airplane bird was making for the big dough ball with its precious freight.

On shot the boat, sailing beneath the frightened tar baby and his big balloon.

With a sudden dose dive the old bird his scared friend. Soon he had him dough as Sundae, releasing his hold, fell like a shooting star into the waters of the ruffled lake. Robin was overboard in an instant, striking out for the scared cannibal. Soon he had him safely on board, but the old airplane bird, her head covered with a huge mass of dough, came down "kerplunk" into the lake, and there she floated.

"Call it Yeaster Sundae."

"Now, stay there," yelled Robin, "and give the fish a treat."

One by one the fishes, large and small, began nibbling at the unbaked bread, and they, too, began to rise and skim over the crest of the waves.

"I know a good name for this day," giggled Bunny, "Let's call it Yeaster Sundae."

$5 Apiece for Bright Sayings of Children

The Tribune will pay $5 for each childish saying printed. The story told must never have been printed in any magazine or paper. It is not possible to acknowledge or return unavailable contributions. Write on one side of the paper. Address bright sayings to Aunty Bee, The Tribune, Chicago.

Young Margaret was busy scribbling and her mother inquired what she was doing.

"I'm writing a letter to Edna," she answered. (Edna is her 4 year old cousin.)

"You can't write," her mother commented.

"Well, Edna can't read," was Margaret's retort. A. W.

Little Jimmy usually eats Sunday dinner with his grandfather. We were having chicken at home and as Jimmy is fond of it he called his grandfather to say he wouldn't be there.

His grandfather chided him saying, "All right for you, Jimmy, you don't like what I like."

Jimmy, not wanting to hurt him, thought a minute and said, "Well, grandfather, I like your dravy, but I des love chicken." J. R.

The Cheekiest Person I Ever Met

Her Only Thanks.

Last summer a classmate of mine had a week's vacation between jobs. She had either to pay her way while in town or stay with me. She chose the latter. I was glad to have her and tried to make her visit in my home as pleasant as possible.

Several months later a pouring rain made it necessary for me to stay at the college during the noon hour. She insisted upon my eating lunch at the dormitory with her. Pleased with this thoughtfulness, I accepted her invitation, but when the waiter brought the slip, placing it between us, my friend graciously showed me how to fill in the blank and I realized I was a paying guest. G. C. G.

Showing Her the Town.

A young man, who was a mere acquaintance of mine, called me up one night and asked for my mother. He asked her if he could use her auto to bring some friends of his from the depot. Mother consented although she hardly knew the man, having seen him once in her life.

After keeping the car for two days, we found he had parked in front of the house. By that time I was so upset I called him up for an explanation. He said his friend wanted to see the sights of the city so he used the car until the gas was low and then returned it. S. S. B.

Self-Invited Guest.

We live on the outskirts of a small village. The cheekiest person around here is a woman who brings her sewing and mending over to my house every day, because she says it costs too much to keep up a fire all day while her husband is away from home.

As he is often gone all week, it is not pleasant nor convenient for me to have her, as she stays for lunch and frequently for supper, too. We ask her, of course, when we sit down to meals, and she always stays.

If I have to be away from home, she says sweetly, "I'll keep up the fires for you and get the lunch." L. W. K.

Enough to Make One Cynical.

While coming upstairs I noticed something dark on a stair step. I stooped to see what it was. To my amazement I found it to be a two dollar bill.

Being a rooming house, I immediately took it down to the landlady. She stared at me and remarked, "Where is the other one? I had 2 two dollar bills, and I certainly dropped both in the same place."

I didn't even get "Thank you," for my honesty. M. M.

Pattern Borrower.

A neighbor of mine is a woman who has plenty of cheek. I have a little girl, 12, and she has one of about the same age. I never buy a pattern for a dress for my daughter but she asks for it so she can make her girl a dress exactly like the one I make.

She has not bought a single pattern since I have known her, and that is about three years. L. D. C.

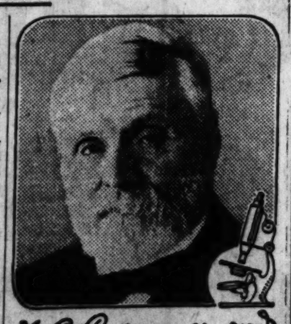
Prescription He Wrote in 1892 is the World's Most Popular Laxative

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine, back in 1875, the needs for a laxative were not as great as they are today. People lived normal, quiet lives, ate plain, wholesome food, and got plenty of fresh air and sunshine. But even that early there were drastic physics and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings to put into their system. So he wrote a prescription for a laxative to be used by his patients.

The prescription for constipation that he used early in his practice, and which he put in drug stores, in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable remedy, intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just such a mild, safe, gentle bowel stimulant as Syrup Pepsin.

Under successful management this prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative in the world. The fact that millions of bottles are used a year proves that it has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from headaches, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds and fevers.

Millions of families are now never without Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and if you will once start using it you will also always have a bottle handy in emergencies.



Dr. W. B. Caldwell M.D.
AT AGE 63

It is particularly pleasing to know that the most of it is bought by mothers for themselves and the children, though Syrup Pepsin is just as valuable for elderly people. All drug stores have the generous bottles.

We would be glad to have you prove at our expense how much Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can mean to you and yours. Just write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, and we will send you prepaid a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE.

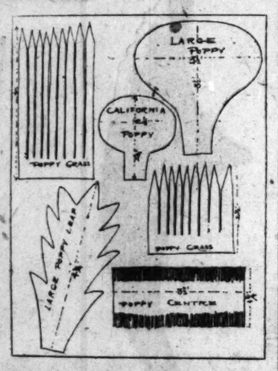
Practical and Fancy Needle Work
By Clotilde

These Artificial Poppies Make Gay Decorations for a Party.

What is your sewing problem? Do you have trouble in following a pattern? Do you find difficulty in making a skirt hang evenly or making a sleeve that doesn't twist? If there is anything you would like to know about these or other problems of needlework, write to Clotilde, The Tribune, Chicago, inclosing a stamped addressed envelope, if a personal reply is desired.



GREEN, black and the colors you wish to use for the poppies will be needed for these very natural and lovely flowers. Fine wire is also necessary.

After the green and black strips of paper are cut making them 1½ inches long, fold them together and cut to form a fine fringe. Roll them between the palms, hold in the right hand and press the ends into the palm of the left hand, thus curling the ends. Then unroll the fringe.

If a ball center is preferred, make a small ball of paper, putting the fringe around it. Ready made poppy stamens may be used, if preferred.

Gather a piece of double fringe four or five inches long; fasten with wire in the center. Cut four petals for each flower, and flute the top edge and make cup shape with thumb and forefinger. Arrange the petals around the center, space evenly and wind tightly with wire. Then fasten to a piece of rather stiff wire for the stem.

Cut one-half inch wide strips of green paper and wind over the wire stem, folding in two leaves.

Waxing Flowers—To one pound of paraffin use 10 cents' worth of spermaceti and 10 cents' worth of white wax. Put the ingredients in a deep saucepan and heat until it is all melted. Remove from the fire and let cool to about 98 degrees.

Slip the complete flower into the liquid quickly, shake off the surplus paraffin and reshape the petals, if necessary. Make three dippings and then let cool. These flowers will keep in the warmest weather and may be washed by dipping in a deep pan of lukewarm water in which a little suds of some pure white soap has been made.

HINTS TO THE BUSINESS GIRL

by Antoinette Donnelly

She Needs Her Energy and Her Good Looks, and Here Are Ways of Keeping Them

NEW YORK, — (Special Correspondence.)—An enterprising investigator discloses the interesting fact that the average school girl hikes eleven and a half miles in a day about her work and play.

From school she ventures into business, and while we have not the investigators word for it, we have reason to believe that the average working girl engaged in sedentary office work does not get one-half of that amount of daily exercise.

Proof of her lack of muscular activity, once she becomes a breadwinner, and of lack of the observance of other good health rules, you see in the gradual dissipation of the "bloom" with which she started downtown that first eventful morning.

The day of a working woman has its limitations. There is no gainsaying the fact. The old freedom is no longer hers. But the job of maintaining her health and efficiency is. So, some compromise must be made with conditions as they are.

The Industrial Hygiene bulletin of the New York State department of labor details a health program that does recognize the limitations of the working girl's time and resources. A digest of the rules outlined follow:

Food. Eat regularly, slowly and chew your food thoroughly. Eat a varied diet, including plenty of fruit and vegetables, with meat only once a day. Drink two glasses of milk every day and very little tea and coffee. Do not eat many sweets. Avoid fried, greasy, and highly spiced foods. If you are more than ten pounds overweight, eat less starch, fats, and sugar. If you are more than ten pounds underweight, eat more at each meal, get more rest, and learn to relax. If you feel worried or nervous, eat less than usual.

Water: Drink six or eight glasses of water a day. Drink a glass on rising in the morning. Drink water with your meals, but do not use it to wash down food insufficiently chewed. Cool water is better than iced.

Clothing: Do not dress too warmly indoors. Wrap up when going outdoors. Wear comfortable shoes to work. Do not wear a corset or brassiere that pushes the abdomen down. Do not wear rubber garments to reduce.

Fresh air: Keep the windows open in your home all the year round. The room temperature should be 68 F. in the daytime and 50 F. at night. Try to stay outdoors at least an hour and a half every day. Get outdoors at the lunch hour and walk to and from work. Spend your day off outdoors, as often as possible.

Recreation: Vary your recreation with outdoor exercises, such as skating, tennis, hiking. Dancing is healthful, if not overdone. Do not go to the movies too often, especially if your work is sedentary. Movies mean poor air, no exercise, late hours. Go to a gymnasium or swimming pool if there is one near.

Bathing: Take a warm bath every day and follow it with a cold spray to help prevent colds.

Sleep: Sleep at least eight hours every night with the windows open, using plenty of blankets in cold weather to avoid being chilled. If you do not sleep well, consult your doctor.

Teeth: Brush the teeth in the morning and before going to bed. Keep them in good repair.

Menstruation: Painful menstruation can often be prevented by keeping the bowels regular and by taking plenty of fresh air and exercise. Continue your normal exercise and the warm tub bath and get more sleep than usual during this period.

Constipation: Eat plenty of fruit and vegetables and coarse foods, such as bran, whole wheat bread and brown rice.

Cold: Follow the rules for fresh air, food, exercise, clothing and bathing and you will not usually take cold.

Headache: Constipation and eye-strain most frequently cause headache. Find out the cause and remove it permanently. Do not take powders and medicine of any kind.

Happiness Helps.

Try to get fun out of your work and the satisfaction that comes with trying to do your work well. Few things contribute so much to good health and a sense of well being.

In a recent report of an insurance company it was noted that the physique of the working girl was slowly undergoing a change for the worse. Wrong food, bad posture and lack of exercise were given as the outstanding reasons for the change and for reduction in efficiency of a number of young women after they had followed the bad habits for several years.

Food is the difficult problem of the breadwinner, particularly of the younger woman whose salary is not sufficient to meet the average restaurant demand. Fortunately, those organizations employing large numbers of workers recognize the efficiency value to them of a well cooked, well planned, nourishing luncheon. It is on her noonday meals that the average worker, for reasons of economy or haste, or a combination of both, does neglect this important phase of health building.

The perfect luncheon place for the worker is amid quiet, restful surroundings, but this ideal spot is difficult to find unless one's luncheon bill is not a matter of concern. To the average young worker the amount she spends for food at noon is a serious matter.

I would suggest that the day start with a good breakfast. In fact, I plead for this, knowing how many young women neglect to eat a nourishing meal in the morning. Some I know are foolish enough to do it as a reducing measure; others because they will not arise a few minutes earlier and give themselves sufficient time for the morning meal; others again because they have cultivated the habit of a light breakfast. My theory is that if a girl will take a good meal in the morning and another at night, her noonday meal and its expense can be considerably lightened without serious consequences.

Eat a Hearty Breakfast.

Coffee and a prepared breakfast food and a bakeshop roll or doughnuts are not a good breakfast. The period of longest fast, from six or seven the night before, makes better breakfasts imperative. Fruit should never be omitted from the morning meal. Apples, oranges, grapefruit, grapes, bananas, pears, pineapple are all desirable first foods of the day. A cereal with cream should follow, egg, or crisp bacon or both are recommended and buttered rolls or toast, with sufficient time to consume the meal slowly. Coffee, particularly, should not be gulped down hot. Hot pancakes and waffles smothered under syrup or honey have none too good an effect on the digestive tract. They are all right occasionally, but not frequently.

The dinner at night should have a salad made of fresh fruits or vegetables, in addition to the usual meat, potato and separately served vegetable.

Milk is a protective and a rebuilding food and it is also a "stay with you" food. Take milk, then, with your luncheon.

The rules laid down by the state department of labor for the working girl are simple, sane and of inestimable value, not only in health upkeep but in the interests of pure physical attractiveness. And while an occasional male employer will go on record as never intending to hire another pretty girl, most business men will frankly admit their preference for the good looking one. He demands not a professional beauty, but the type of girl who pleases with the sheer vibrancy of health and youth, a quality sustained only through attention to the items of hygiene outlined in the rules above.

Bright Sayings of Husbands and Wives

The snappy comeback of the other half when censured has often been a source of wonder to husbands and wives. The husband or the wife has come across some bright saying that will cause no end of mirth by the other half of the family circle. What was that remark, Mr.? Mrs.? Send it to us, and we will pay you $1 for it if we print it. Address Bright Sayings of Husbands and Wives, The Chicago Tribune, Chicago.

Wait and See.

Husband—You should not have bought that dress. You spend too much on clothes. I don't like that dress on you, anyhow. It's too old.

Wife—It will be long enough before I get another.

Not So Good.

Browne—Did you give your wife a little lecture on economy you talked about?

Jones—Yes.

Browne—Any result?

Jones—Yes, I've got to give up smoking.

Taking Advantage of It.

Wife—This wonderful view leaves me speechless.

He—Er—ah—shall we stop here a nice long time, dearest?

More to the Point.

Wife—O, Henry, our new neighbors have no car, or radio, or Pomeranian dog, not even a grand piano. I can't imagine what they have got.

Husband (sardonically)—Perhaps they have a bank account.

The Feminine Realm

THE HOME HARMONIOUS

This room is furnished with cleverly renovated castoffs.

The Guest Room Need Not Be Expensively or Elaborately Furnished in Order to Be Hospitable and Charming

Phyllis Marsh will be glad to assist the homemaker in any problems pertaining to home building and home furnishing. Address your letter to Phyllis Marsh, The Tribune, Chicago. Inclose stamped addressed envelope for personal reply.

By Phyllis Marsh

THERE is always a distinctly hospitable and delightfully charming atmosphere about the guest chamber that has been carefully furnished and decorated. The room need not be elaborately or expensively done in order to achieve the desired effect. It simply requires a little thought and care on the part of the home decorator.

In the first place a guest chamber should be so arranged in its decorative scheme that any one may enjoy occupying it. Few are the men who would enjoy a prolonged visit with a family who had nothing but a "frilly" taffeta adorned bedroom to offer them. The same thought holds true of the women who favor "frilliness." They would not be exactly happy in a room displaying much that was severely plain or masculine in decorative treatment. So it behooves the home decorator to bear these facts in mind and plan the guest chamber accordingly.

In any event, simplicity should be the keynote of the room, whether it is to display printed or plain fabrics, or furniture in the natural wood finish or enameled. For the family which is in the habit of entertaining guests for extended periods of time, it is advisable to furnish the room in somewhat the bed-sitting room style, where the guest is privileged at any time to retire in order to read, write letters, or sew.

If there is more than one guest chamber in the home and the room is small, a single or three-quarter sized bed may be selected. But if there is only one guest chamber and that of generous size, twin beds should be the choice. Keeping in mind that the room is to bear some resemblance to a sitting room, a large chiffonier or chest of drawers and a dresser with the mirror separate should be the choice.

Then there should be either a small secretary type of writing desk or a small oblong one drawer table over which could hang a good sized book shelf, which could substitute for the desk. A straight backed chair should accompany this group, as well as a small waste basket.

In another convenient corner of the room should be placed an "easy" overstuffed chair, possibly boasting a slipcover of chintz or cretonne. Next to it should be a reading table upon which there is ample room for a few books, magazines, and a simple type of parchment shaded reading lamp. A comfortable little footstool or an old fashioned hassock would not be amiss if placed in front of the "easy" chair.

At the side of the single bed or between the twin beds is the place for the usual convenient night stand and lamp. If there is sufficient space in the room it is always convenient to have a chaise longue comfortably placed.

Last, but not least, there should be a slipper chair placed in a suitable corner of the room and also a three or four paneled decorative screen, which always serves well when ventilating a room to break direct drafts.

Pictures in the form of colored prints, etchings, or simple water color landscapes of a type to be sufficiently interesting to any one should adorn the walls of every guest chamber. Unless the walls are covered with an elaborately designed paper, there is always a place on them for pictures of one kind or another. Colorful wall hangings also serve their purpose in a decorative manner quite as effectively as pictures, although the use of more than two hangings in any room is not advisable. India prints, cretonnes, chintzes, toiles de Jouy, and many of the colorful prints emulating the famous Sardinian embroideries now so much in vogue make ideal wall hangings for any bedroom.

Probably the one thing which interests the average home decorator more than any other one thing pertaining to the guest chamber is the bedspread and the draperies. What material to select and the style in which they should be made are always of interest to those who sew. With a world of fabrics of every conceivable description to select from, there only remains the character of the room to decide the proper choice to be made. The room of simple, unassuming furnishings calls for fabrics of like nature, and under this heading come many of varied type, such as cretonne, chintz, hand-blocked linen, toile de Jouy, calico prints, rayon and cotton taffeta, striped and also checked prints and crashes, etc.

The bedroom of more than simple character, but hardly of the sumptuous type, calls for such fabrics as silk rep, silk poplin, moire, and similar materials, while the room of extremely sumptuous style may be arrayed in silk damasks or taffeta, or brocaded taffeta, or satin.

Cleverly renovated "cast-offs" in the form of furniture was the inspiration for the guest chamber described and illustrated today. To begin with, the room is of northeast exposure, so, in order to make it appear cheerful, pleasant and inviting, the color scheme decided upon was cedar, green and gold. The room is of average size, being 11x13 feet, so only those pieces of furniture necessary to the comfort of the guest were chosen.

A simple type of walnut finished metal bed in a single width size is placed between two doors. A small night stand in walnut finish has been placed close to the head of the bed and displays a small pottery lamp topped with a plaited glazed chintz shade in tones of gold and green. On the opposite wall [north], between two windows, is a resurrected old fashioned chiffonier. The attached mirror was removed and hung above it on separate cords. Since the finish was golden oak and rather badly marred, it was decided that it should be enameled and in a brown as nearly like the bed as possible. The trimmings in it consist of hairline stripes and wooden knobs done in gold enamel to give it character. It is adorned with two brass candlesticks at each end, between which is placed an inexpensive paper covered box.

A small oblong one-drawer table flanks the west wall and has been converted into a dressing table and was enameled to match the chiffonier. Over it hangs a plainly framed long, narrow mirror, the upper part of which is a little colored print. A chintz dresser cover and a parchment shaded glass lamp are all that grace the table top.

In front of it is a high, ladder-backed chair. The one window on the east wall is centered and to the right is a four paneled, chintz covered screen, in front of which is a comfortable slipper chair in a slip cover of a cotton striped fabric. Just in front of the window is a dropleaf gumwood table in walnut finish so arranged that it may be used for either reading or writing purposes. To the left of the table is a generously proportioned barrel chair, upholstered in a green denim and having a pillow of cedar colored rep.

A wrought iron floor lamp with parchment colored paper shade and a tiny end table and waste paper basket complete the interesting corner group.

The floor is covered here and there with oval shaped wool fiber rugs in imitation of braided rugs, and the walls are done in a paper of creamy tone, while the long draperies are of a striped rayon taffeta in gold, green and cedar tones. Topping the windows are narrow shaped lambrequins of the same material.

The spread is also of the same material and made perfectly plain and merely corded where it is seamed on both sides.

A FRIEND IN NEED

by Sally Joy Brown

A LITTLE AID OFTEN GOES A LONG WAY.

I want to be the medium through which the friends in deed and the friends in need may be brought together. It may be you have some discarded article which has not outgrown its usefulness that will make some less fortunate one happy and you would gladly give it if you knew how to go about it. Write to me and I shall be happy to be of service to you. Please write on one side of the paper.

When information is wanted by mail, a stamped, addressed envelope should accompany the request. Please do not send article to The Tribune but write for the address of the applicant and send direct.

WOULD you like to see what the gifts we are giving through this department really accomplish for many of the families receiving them?

Then you will be interested in this case. Several weeks ago the husband and father came home from seven weeks of sickness in the County hospital, to try to get another start. But his clothes were so shabby, and with all the expenses of his illness he could not afford to buy new ones. Worse than that, his wife was expecting a baby within two months—and they were about to be evicted from the furnished room they had been occupying. Both were in despair, when we heard of their plight through a neighbor, and published a request for help.

That was their situation several weeks ago. The following letter tells how their prospects changed, and how the change was brought about.

"Dear Sally Joy Brown: It is hard to come down to earth, and that is why I haven't written before this to thank you and all the others. But don't think we were not grateful, for I truly think my life was saved.

"The first we knew about it was when we had word from you that some one had offered us a room for a week or two until we got straightened around. My husband and I didn't quite know what to make of it—but we knew we weren't going to be in the street, and that was wonderful.

"Late that afternoon a man called and left a fine blue suit, in fact a complete outfit, hat, shoes, and all, for my husband—and it put new courage into both of us, for we felt it would be much easier for him to get work if he looked presentable. He didn't get work the next day, but he did by the end of the week and then how happy we were! It was like being saved when we were drowning.

"Now we have a room of our own that we can pay for. My husband is making enough to pay for food and rent, with a little more, and we'll make it go farther soon, because we've been given some furniture and we can take unfurnished rooms, which will be cheaper. And I have received a lot of clothes for the baby and we are just bursting with happiness.

"You'll hear more from us soon, because we're going to be able in a short time to help somebody in the same wonderful way we have been helped—and we won't lose a minute letting you know when that time comes. MRS. N. B."

Doesn't that letter tell its own story? And simple gifts did it all. Weren't they worth while, when they did so much, and wouldn't you be happy to do the same for some of the others in need?

Not Prepared for Winter.

"My husband is tubercular and the dispensary has sent him to Texas for his health. I have two children and support them myself, but now winter is here I find I am not well prepared. I would be grateful for any warm blankets and any dresses and a coat, size 38 or 40, for myself and some things for the children. They are a boy, 5, and a girl, 8. MRS. L. B."

With the main support of the family snatched from them by the cruel tentacles of this disease, the rearing and support of her children becomes a discouraging problem for the mother. She is calling to you for help. Won't you do what you can?

Children Need Coats.

"I am asking for warm coats for two little girls, 9 and 10, who are rather small for their age. Their father had an operation recently and, while he is recovering, he is as yet able to work only a few days a week. He is deeply in debt, but is anxious to support his family. G. S. R."

Won't you help these children by sending them the coats your young daughters have outgrown? There's lots of cold weather ahead of us, and unless these youngsters have sufficient clothing their chances of keeping well are slim.

Unable to Lie Down.

"I have a sick husband who can't lie down day or night. Do you know of some one who has an old morris chair or any kind of a chair with a high and reclining back he could have?

"MRS. A. M."

This man's condition will not improve if he doesn't have the rest he needs. Have you the chair which will give him this comfort?

Sweater and Bathrobe Needed.

"I have a daughter, 21, in a tuberculosis sanitarium. She is badly in need of a woolen sweater and a bathrobe, size 36, and I am unable to buy them. Can you help me get them for her? MRS. F. M."

It's hard enough to do without necessities when one is well. Just think how much worse it must be when disease has set in and these articles become even greater necessities. Help this mother, won't you, to help her daughter?

Family in Trouble.

"Last week a friend of mine came to me for assistance for her family. They come from a small mining town and the husband has been out of work for 9 months. My sister and I have been trying to house them and feed them, but our salaries are small and we have all we can do to keep ourselves. They are all in need of clothing, especially the children, for school. The girls are 12, 8 and 6 years of age, and the boy is 10. Their shoe sizes are 11, 11½, 7½, and 8. The mother wears size 36 and the father 42. Anything you may be able to do for them will be greatly appreciated. L. S."

This is just one of many letters we have about families where the father is out of work with no relief in sight. Perhaps the help you can give them will be the means of putting them on their feet again and relieving the family of the misery it is suffering.

Jealousy

We're all acquainted with jealousy, the monster that smashes love affairs, wrecks homes, causes business quarrels, and generally plays havoc with us mortals. We'd like to know your most notable experience with a jealous person or persons. If you have encountered a situation where jealousy led to a tragic or ridiculous climax, tell us about it. The Tribune will pay $1 for every story published. Address Jealous Editor, Chicago Tribune.

Rebuked.

When I was a young girl my father kept several riding and driving horses. For several years he had a young boy working in the stables, upon whom I usually called when I wanted my own horse harnessed or saddled.

Finally, the young fellow, then grown up, married, and soon after the wedding his wife sent me a note, asking me not to call her husband by his first name any more, "as it was not necessary." B. H.

He Wanted Notice.

Jimmy was 9, and jealous of his brother, Tommy, 11. One day Tommy came home with a black eye, the outcome of a fight to save a kitten from the destroying hands of a bad boy. Mother and father were worried—and proud, too, of their son's motive in fighting—and lavished attention and affection on him.

And little Jimmy felt he was forgotten and longed to be a hero himself. At last he could bear it no longer and hastened out to demand a black eye of the first street urchin he met. It was freely given, and a broken nose along with it. Poor little Jimmy got the attention he wanted—and more, for it was months before the nose, injured in a serious way, was healed. D. B.

Child Suffers.

A friend of mine had a little girl about 3 years old. She was fond of me and somehow got into the habit of calling me "mama," which I could see made her mother furious.

One day when I was visiting at her home the little one was even more persistent in calling me by that name than usual. The mother lost her temper and grabbing the poor little thing slapped her soundly. M. D.

Strange Weddings

Have you ever seen a wedding so outlandish that it upset all your ideas of the traditional ceremony? Some marriages are foreign and quaint in their adherence to ancient customs; others are ultra modern in their haphazard speed and unconventionality. The Tribune would like to know the story of the strangest wedding you've ever seen. We will pay $1 for every letter published. Address Strange Weddings, Chicago Tribune.

All Wet.

It was to be a garden wedding. The day had been perfect until one-half hour before the ceremony was to take place when clouds quickly gathered.

At the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march the attendants started toward the altar in the garden and at the same time a light rain began to fall. As the bride, leaning on her father's arm, appeared coming down the steps, it rained even harder and they sought shelter under a tree near by.

The guests scattered for their wraps and umbrellas. But the procession having been started, the bride wanted to continue. So they walked up to the altar under an umbrella, all the attendants with umbrellas and guests standing in groups under trees and the rain simply pouring down.

It sure was the wettest wedding I ever attended. F. L. J.

Loaded with Bills.

We live in a section where there are a great many foreigners. They usually get married on Saturday and the bride always wears white with a long veil. A reception is always held in the church hall and every one is invited. Lunch is served to all those present.

In the evening the men try to break a plate with silver. If they succeed they dance with the bride and either put the silver money in a basket or pin bills on her veil.

Before the evening is over the bride has fives, tens and twenties pinned all over her veil. She is exhausted, but has as high as $500 or $600 pinned on her. Sometimes the veil is so full that they pin money on her dress. The highest amount I know of one bride getting was $850. C. W.

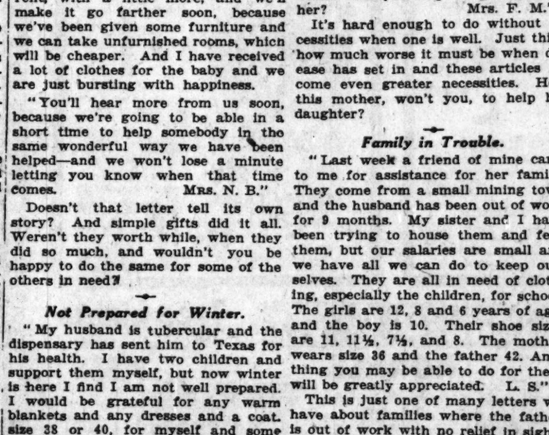
MOTHER

Cross, Feverish Child Needs this Harmless Laxative

Every mother realizes, after giving her children "California Fig Syrup," that this is their ideal laxative, because they love its pleasant taste and it thoroughly cleanses the tender little stomach, liver and bowels without griping.

When cross, irritable, feverish, or breath is bad, stomach sour, look at the tongue, mother! If coated, give a teaspoonful of this harmless, "fruity laxative," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. When the little system is full of cold, throat sore, has stomach-ache, diarrhea, indigestion, colic—remember, a good "inside cleansing" should always be the first treatment given.

Millions of mothers keep "California Fig Syrup" handy; they know a teaspoonful today saves a sick child tomorrow. Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Fig Syrup," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups printed on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here, so don't be fooled. Get the genuine, made by "California Fig Syrup Company."



Infant Care

Mothers, you can't start too early to establish a child's serene and tranquil disposition. Even an infant can have a happy, fretless state of uninterrupted health. What will help do this? A simple, purely vegetable product as old as you are: plain Castoria.

A few drops of Castoria will settle all uneasiness in a jiffy. Will dispel colic or ward off constipation; and just as surely check diarrhea.

In real sickness, call a physician. But many physicians urge only Castoria for those little childish disorders that need nothing more. You need never be afraid to give pure Castoria. It is safe and perfectly harmless, for it contains no paregoric, no opiates, no dope of any kind. At least, this is true of the genuine Fletcher's Castoria*—and that is the kind doctors tell you always to buy.

Fletcher's Castoria is fine for any child. All children love to take it. Delicious tasting, and as good as it tastes. Just look for the Fletcher signature on the package and you will know you have the genuine and pure Castoria.

*SPECIAL NOTE: With every bottle of genuine Fletcher's Castoria is wrapped a book on "Care and Feeding of Babies" worth its weight in gold to every mother or prospective mother.

The Last Word in Paris Fashions

Mid-Winter Finds the Smartly Dressed Woman Donning Costumes Trimmed with Astrakan.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

PARIS.—(Special Correspondence.)—One of the popular myths about fashion is the myth about the insatiable appetite of the Parisienne for novelty. She is pictured as a creature avid for the new in clothes, and continually changing what she has for something "just out." This pleasure in and desire for the different exists to a far greater extent in our younger and more restless country. The Parisienne retains the primitive feminine impulse to hang on to a good thing, even in clothes, once she has found it. Her adoption of styles is, thus, much more leisurely than that of the American. Witness her continued adherence to black, to beige hosiery, to the small hat throughout so many seasons, in spite of more colorful and newer offerings from the creators in the world's fashion mart.

Americans are coming around to her way of thinking in regard to the black costume for winter. The Parisienne clings to it because it is the surest short cut to a supreme chic sufficiently elastic to cover a multitude of occasions. Also it is worn in Paris the black costume has cachet and distinction to a degree color rarely can attain. It is always right.

Black here is almost invariably combined in some way with astrakan fur for the coat and often, also, for the winter frock. This isn't anything to set the world on fire as news, but for the woman who must be well dressed and who has only a limited wardrobe, it is something to consider as a solution to most of her costume problems for daytime. The straight line black coat, well cut and trimmed with black or gray astrakan, is more often seen in smart places in Paris than any other. It is supremely practical when made of broadcloth, as it usually is, and it doesn't look dowdy as so many utilitarian clothes do, unfortunately. It has a smart, luxurious air and may be worn over so many different kinds of frocks that it has few rivals.

I observe, despite its usefulness, that the black broadcloth coat is chosen in a great number of cases by women who don't have to think at all of the practical side of the clothes they wear. They select it because it has a chic and aristocratic air, which is reason enough, indeed.

The first figure at the left in our sketch is an illustration of the most popular coat in Paris today among discriminating women. As you see, the lines are those familiar slender ones so becoming to the average feminine figure. The cut of this coat is sufficiently complicated to be distinctive, with curved bands at the back fitted across the hipline, and slightly flaring gores at the sides of the skirt portion.

This Beer model of black broadcloth and shaded gray astrakan, shown at the extreme left, is a successful coat for many occasions.

Drecoll trims the frock of black crepe marocain shown next, with narrow bands of astrakan. The diagonal lines and asymmetrical hemline of this model are distinguished details.

Curved tucks repeat the curved-line closing of the black astrakan collar on this Philippe et Gaston coat of black broadcloth, increasing the effect of slenderness at the hipline. Pictured third.

Last, the Parisienne also wears a simple suit of navy blue broadcloth trimmed with gray astrakan, from Nicole Groult. The sweater is of navy blue tricot with small motifs of gray and rose. The narrow sash belt and the bands at the neckline and hips are of gray.

Beer has made this coat of black broadcloth, the new very silky surfaced kind from Rodier, and has trimmed it with gray astrakan, shading from dark gray at the outside of the revers, collar and the base of the cuffs, to a light gray on the inside borders. The sleeves, which are fitted above the elbows and flaring below, increase a great deal the gracefulness of the lines. The astrakan of the collar extends to the hemline on the left side, being placed on the inside of the coat from the hipline.

Our third figure illustrates another, slightly different version of the black broadcloth and astrakan coat about which the Parisienne is so mad this winter. This Philippe et Gaston garment changes the same slender lines subtly by placing the bulk in the upper part of the silhouette, and draping the straight skirt in a wrap around manner. The closing of this coat is diagonal, the shawl collar of black astrakan extending from the left shoulder clear around on the right hip. This line is excellent as a device for slenderizing the hipline, and Philippe et Gaston increases its effectiveness by a series of curved fanlike tucks that repeat the movement of the collar.

The sleeves are straight, comfortably roomy and cuffed with black astrakan. There is not much extreme novelty in such a coat, but there is a great deal of elegance, chic and real charm, to which trio mere newness is invariably sacrificed by the woman who is an expert in matters of dress.

A coat of this kind worn with a black satin frock is ideal for even the most formal afternoon affairs, and worn with a beige jersey dress and simple beige hat it makes an excellent wrap for the street in the morning. It may even be worn over an informal, sleeveless dinner dress of chiffon, lace or velvet, thus tripling its value to the woman who can have only one daytime coat.

Our second model is the astrakan trimmed frock a good many Parisiennes are wearing. Drecoll has made this dress of a flat crêpe, dull of surface. The long lines of the silhouette are diagonal, flaring toward the bottom at the left side, which droops lower than the right at the hemline. The side front seams and the under arm ones are diagonal, merging into flaring gores, between which are placed slightly circular godets, creating a beautiful asymmetrical line that gives cachet to the frock. The diagonal closing is outlined with a narrow band of astrakan, this band passing beneath a square buckle at the right hip. The sleeves are cuffed with the same fur and with the crêpe of the frock.

Our fourth model shows the astrakan trimmed suit that is seen often around Paris. This Nicole Groult model varies the color scheme a bit, combining navy blue broadcloth with gray astrakan bands, a color combination that will be flattering to a woman whose skin is too sallow to support black. The jacket is of the cardigan type, banded all around with gray astrakan, and lined with gray tricot. The inset pockets are also banded with the fur.

The skirt of this model has a wide panel at the front, ending in deep plaits at the sides, so that while the lines are straight and narrow the skirt is comfortably wide. It is made of navy blue broadcloth. The sweater blouse is of dark blue tricot, with small square motifs of gray, navy and rose.

The band at the neck and the hips is of gray tricot with figures in dark blue and rose, and the narrow knitted sash is also of gray. This suit is nominally sports, but is suitable for general daytime wear. The wool lining to the jacket and the fur trimming give sufficient warmth so that it is practical to wear in mid-winter.

EXIT—STAGE ENTRANCE.

(The show flops. Mamie Hickey finds herself stranded with two days' pay, a business college diploma and a half stocked makeup box.)

The lady star is smashing things back in her dressing room;
The sheriff strikes the last act set while stage hands stand and gloom;
Our pale director hands the show's fat treasurer a clout.
They mix to fight
With scratch and bite—
A spotlight flickers out.

Tears make a mess of makeup as Yvettes and Geraldines
Pack up their little stepins (that's a lace-edged word for jeans).
The tenor's kissed routine good-by; the backer gets his slam;
Why rage or sigh
Or alibi?
All that is said means—damn.

LONG ODDS.

One never meets the hero gay
Who lives in newsstand tale,
All full of luck and juniper
And selling talk and kale.
Across the slick mahogany
He always makes his yards—
He weds the boss' daughter or
Gets "vice pres" on his cards.

(However)

Hard Fact still deals with men of toil
Whose destiny can harry them;
The world is full of bookkeepers,
And some one has to marry them.

THE POET OF COMMERCE.

(Cyrano and Villon would be stars in a modern advertising agency—probably hired to write perfume and washing machine accounts. . . . Overheard.)

Rare toys? Or idols? Were we that?
The symbol changes with the hour
And erstwhile goddesses descend
To rank as "so much buying power."

Love lost the lure of glamoured words
And poets now are prospered lads
Who write—to catch a lady's eye
And pin her fancy to—their ads.

YOU AND YOUR CHILDREN

by Mrs. Gladys Huntington Bell

Following the Trail Together.

CONVINCED, as we showed ourselves to be in last Sunday's article, that children should understand the natural, fundamental facts of life and its reproduction, many fathers and mothers still are completely in the dark as to how to go about enlightening their childen. And because they don't know what to do and don't feel themselves competent to study it out, they let it all slide, which is wrong. The problem must be solved.

In the first place, before any one can lead a child's mind along this path in the most natural way, he has to realize that a little child is intensely interested in everything in this world he has come into. He is a walking interrogation point. His questions embrace everything. All is grist that comes to the mill of his eager mental acquisitiveness.

So when his questions touch upon those facts of life which many of us have not learned to talk about and think about in a natural way, don't draw back, and whatever his or her age may be, don't regard this as an inordinate curiosity. It is a very normal curiosity and if you can't feel that it is, you're the wrong person to tell him anything.

Such curiosity has no more significance and is no more persistent than his curiosity about anything else.

Learning from Nature.

As to supplementing their direct questions with general information, let that cover all other forms of life than our own. Every part of it is absorbingly interesting, beginning with plant life and going on up into higher forms.

Do your children realize that when the big, brown bumbling bee gets himself powdered with golden pollen he's unwittingly going to fertilize the pistil (the mother, the female) of another flower with it? Do they know the almost unbelievable story of the salmon who leaps up streams and even waterfalls because nature has put in them the strong impulse to perpetuate their kind?

Do they know anything about the life of bees and how it is organized to allow no possibility of a slip-up on the future of their race? Have they ever seen a female moth emerge from her cocoon and lay her eggs immediately so that, if she does get her wings smashed up or meets with some animal whose menu she's on, it really doesn't matter, because she has done what nature intended her to—reproduced her species?

Have they been in close touch with dogs or cats that have had puppies or kittens? Let them learn these things and how nature has created everything male and female and implanted in them the urge to reproduce their kind. You will have to choose your words to fit their understanding, but you will find the idea well within their scope.

Older Children.

Naturally one answers the questions of little children differently from the way one answers the questions of older children. How you do that no one can prescribe exactly—it depends largely upon how much they already know and upon the child's mind and temperament.

Many parents who might otherwise answer their children's questions quite frankly are held back by a fear: "If I answer this question, how do I know what he'll ask next? How do I know how far he'll go?"

Don't let that worry you. Let him go just as far as he will. There's nothing he will ask you that you shouldn't answer. If you don't know, tell him you're not sure but that you'll find out and will do so. Or if you feel that a few things he will ask you when he is older and you're reproduced her species? when he is older and you're coerced to tell him about it when he comes, explain it to him in a way.

3010—Girl's dress. Sizes 6, 8, 10, 12, and 14 years. Size 8 requires 1⅞ yards of 32 or 36 inch material with ⅝ yard of 36 inch contrasting.

HOW TO USE THE PATTERNS

AN attractive cap and apron are shown here, the apron having strap extensions that cross at the center back and button there. Pattern No. 833 is cut in one piece, covers the dress well in the front, and in fact gives ample protection all around.

After the apron is cut, all the edges are bound, and it will be well before starting to do the binding to baste and stitch small pieces of the apron material where the buttonholes and buttons are to be put. If a single thickness of the material is all that is used, there soon will be tears. Baste these pieces to the straps and apron corners all around, turning the material in across the lower edge of each piece and stitching. The binding will hold the pieces in place around the edges.

It is possible to buy binding in all colors at the notion counter of any store, and this will make the finishing much easier.

Two large patch pockets are set on the front, and these add to the jaunty appearance of the apron, and are a great convenience. Green sateen, bound in a deeper shade of the same color, is pictured. Printed sateen, chintz, chambray, striped percale, and English prints can be chosen for service.

Pattern No. 3010 is a design for a dress for a girl that is just as particular as it is dainty. The two piece skirt is shirred and attached to a long waisted bodice closed at the center back. The cunning bolero has kimono sleeves and the neck is finished with a flat, round collar. Both the sleeve edges and the bottom of the bolero are shown with scalloped edges, but if you prefer, they can be made straight. There is something so pretty, though, about the scallops that I imagine most mothers will be willing to do the extra work that binding these edges will entail.

A straight, wide hem finishes the bottom of the skirt and if one of the wash materials is used, this may be stitched on the machine. If any other material is used, the hem should be put in by hand.

A French blue wool jersey with the underbodice and collar of tan, or a dark green velveteen, combined with flesh colored silk crêpe, or plain flannel combined with plaid are all exceptionally smart.

All wool challis is shown in delightful printed designs, and nothing could be more attractive or practical than to make the dress of this, using one of the washable crêpe de chines for binding. Such a dress will launder beautifully, making it an ideal choice for school wear.

The deep French V, extending to the waist line, makes the design of pattern No. 755 particularly suitable for large figures. The inverted plaits in the front add a graceful flare to the hemline, and the one piece sleeves cut rather wide at the hand, are given novel treatment, being set as they are into narrow bands at the wrists and allowing the extra width to flare beyond.

The back of the dress is in one piece and quite straight, while in the front the upper and lower parts are cut separately and joined. Perforations on the front skirt section show just where the inverted plait is to be laid each side of the center. Lay this front section out smooth on a table, and after the markings have been clearly put in lay the plaits from top to bottom. Baste them in place, basting from the top down.

There are two shoulder tucks on each side of the front. Perforations and instructions given with the pattern show exactly how they are to be laid and stitched. The fronts are underfaced and rolled back, forming revers. After this much has been done join the waist and skirt, following the directions carefully.

It will be pretty to have the facing, vestee, and sleeve bands made of something contrasting. Printed velvet with plain Canton faille crêpe contrasting, black crêpe satin with the dull side for the trimming contrast, wine red sheer velveteen, and supple tweed are smart combinations.

HISTORICAL AMERICA by CLIFFORD RAYMOND

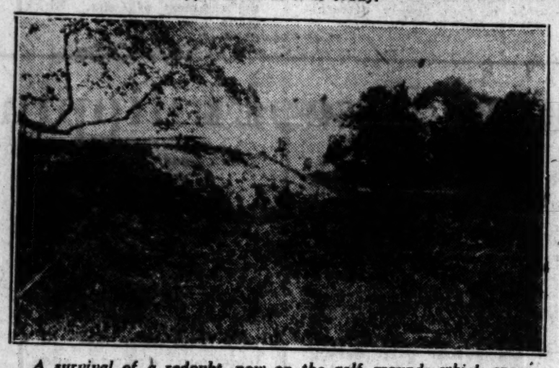
Appomattox

APPOMATTOX is on the highway from Richmond and from Petersburg to Lynchburg. The Appomattox river rises from two small forks near it, and the James is a little to the north. It is Piedmont country and Lynchburg, at the head of the Shenandoah valley, is not far away.

The present village of Appomattox is on the concrete. The vestiges of old Appomattox Courthouse are a mile or so off the main highway. In the nearby region they call it the Surrender Ground.

Appomattox is a symbol in the life of the republic. It may be the greatest. It is the token of the union to which each state now agrees without reservation. The civil war was not the first question of the reserved or presumed right of withdrawal from the common union. Nor prior to the civil war was South Carolina, with John C. Calhoun, the first to point to the possible use of the option. New England in 1814 had put its fingers over the cement to see how it crumbled and fell away if a state wanted to exercise its right to withdraw.

Appomattox as it is today.



A survival of a redoubt, now on the golf grounds which preserve much of the battlefield.

A WASTED SANCTUARY

At Appomattox these reservations died and, inasmuch as now all states willingly consent to the decree of fate and destiny there recorded, the spot to which the event is attached might be a national sanctuary. To an extent from which it derives a sort of spiritual significance it is a waste.

Appomattox is a closed room in the house. On April 9, 1865, Grant, returning from his first meeting with Lee, stopped the booming of the 100 guns of his troops and begun to fire in celebration of the surrender of the army of northern Virginia. The guns were stopped. The smoke curled away. There was silence. It endures at the surrender ground today.

Appomattox remained outside the subsequent rancors and hatreds. It has not had any share in triumphs or memorials. The parade has passed it by. Weeds are its laurels. It is a name passing intangibly into the history of the nation, an event without a place, a symbol without substance.

THE SOUTH'S TABLETS

It contains now a few old houses, some empty, some occupied. There are patches of corn, tangles of vines, trees and briars, patches of pasture, and small metal tablets. The south, which has been too proud wholly to forget, has one small marker, inscribed:

"Here, on Sunday, April 9, 1865, after four years of heroic struggle in defense of principles believed fundamental to the existence of our government, Lee surrended 9,000 men, the remnant of an army still unconquered in spirit, to 118,000 men under Grant." The figures are wrong, but that seems unimportant.

Another tablet marks the spot of the courthouse, which was burned in 1892. There is a tablet indicating the site "of the house owned and occupied by Wilbur McLean in which Gen. U. S. Grant, U. S. A., and Gen. Robert E. Lee, C. S. A., met and agreed upon the terms of the surrender of the army of northern Virginia on the afternoon of Sunday, April 9, 1865. The house was taken down in 1893 with a view to its removal and reerection elsewhere."

A few piles of brick in a deep tangle of locusts and vines remain to show where the house was.

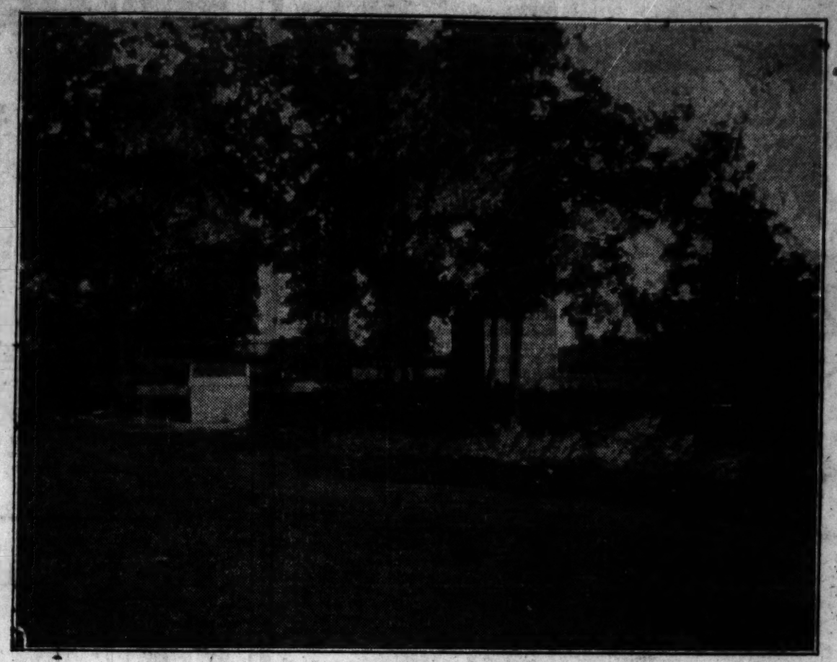
GEN. GRANT'S VERSION

The story of the meeting at the McLean house, as Grant told it in his memoirs, was:

". . . I found him [Lee] at the house of a Mr. McLean, at Appomattox Court House, with Col. Marshall, one of his staff officers, awaiting my arrival. The head of his column was occupying a hill, on a portion of which was an apple orchard, beyond a little valley which separated it from that on the crest of which Sheridan's forces were drawn up in line of battle to the south.

"Before stating what took place between Gen. Lee and myself I will give all there is of the story of the famous apple trees.

"Wars produce many stories of fiction, some of which are told until they are believed to be true. The war of the rebellion was no exception to this rule, and the story of the apple tree is one of those fictions based on a slight foundation of fact. As I have said, there was an apple orchard on the side of the hill occupied by the confederate forces. Running diagonally up the hill was a wagon road, which at one point ran very near one of the trees, so that the wheels of vehicles had on that side cut off the roots of this tree, leaving a little enbankment. Gen. Babcock of my staff reported to me that when he first met Gen. Lee he was sitting upon this enbankment with his feet in the road below and his back resting against the tree. The story had no other foundation than that. Like many other stories, it would be very good if it were only true.



The Confederate marker at Appomattox near the site of the courthouse.

GREETINGS

"I had known Gen. Lee in the old army, and had served with him in the Mexican war, but did not suppose, owing to the difference in our age and rank, that he would remember me, while I would more naturally remember him distinctly, because he was the chief of staff of Gen. Scott in the Mexican war.

"When I had left camp that morning I had not expected so soon the result that was then taking place, and consequently was in rough garb. I was without a sword, as I usually was when on horseback in the field, and wore a soldier's blouse for a coat, with the shoulder straps of my rank to indicate to the army who I was. When I went into the house I found Gen. Lee. We greeted each other and, after shaking hands, took our seats. I had my staff with me, a good portion of whom were in the room during the whole of the interview.

"What Gen. Lee's feelings were I do not know. As he was a man of much dignity, with an impassive face, it was impossible to say whether he felt inwardly glad that the end had finally come, or felt sad over the result and was too manly to show it. Whatever his feelings, they were entirely concealed from my observation; but my own feelings, which had been quite jubilant on the receipt of his letter, were sad and depressed. I felt like anything rather than rejoicing at the downfall of a foe who had fought so long and valiantly, and had suffered so much for a cause, though that cause was, I believe, one of the worst for which a people ever fought and one for which there was the least excuse. I do not question, however, the sincerity of the great mass of those who were opposed to us.

"Gen. Lee was dressed in a full uniform, which was entirely new, and was wearing a sword of considerable value—very likely the sword which had been presented by the state of Virginia. At all events, it was an entirely different sword from the one that would ordinarily be worn in the field. In my rough traveling suit, the uniform of a private with the straps of a lieutenant general, I must have contrasted very strangely with a man so handsomely dressed, six feet high, and of faultless form. But this was not a matter that I thought of until afterward.

"We soon fell into a conversation about old army times. He remarked that he remembered me very well in the old army, and I told him that as a matter of course I remembered him perfectly, but from the difference in our rank and years [there being about sixteen years' difference in our ages], I had thought it very likely that I had not attracted his attention sufficiently to be remembered by him after such a long interval. Our conversation grew so pleasant that I almost forgot the object of our meeting.

"After the conversation had run on in this style for some time, Gen. Lee called my attention to the object of our meeting, and said that he had asked for this interview for the purpose of getting from me the terms I proposed to give his army. I said that I meant merely that his army should lay down their arms, not to take them up again during the continuance of the war unless duly and properly exchanged. He said that he had so understood my letter."

The little confederate graveyard.

THOUGHTFULNESS

No capitulation of surrender was signed. After the talk about the old army, Lee again asked what terms Grant would offer. Grant asked Gen. Parker, his staff secretary, for writing material, and wrote a letter addressed to Lee informing him that a surrender of arms, artillery, and public property, with officers giving their individual parole and with the men paroled by companies or regiments, would be accepted. As he wrote he thought of the need the southern soldiers would have for their horses when they were home again. He exempted the horses from the property to be surrendered. He exempted side arms in consideration of the possessors' feelings.

Lee read the letter and said the thoughtfulness regarding the horses would have a happy effect on his army. He wrote a letter accepting the terms, adding in comment to Grant that in the confederate army the cavalrymen and artillery men used their own and not government horses. Grant said that was not covered in his letter but the men, being small farmers, would need their horses and he would order that any man claiming a horse or mule should be allowed to take it home with him.

A SECOND MEETING

Lee said he would be obliged to ask for rations and forage. His provision trains had been captured. Grant asked him for how many men. Lee replied about 25,000, and Grant authorized the rationing. His own army was getting forage from the country.

The next morning Grant was going to Washington, but before he went—"I thought I would like to see Gen. Lee again." He rode out with a bugler and a staff officer with a white flag. Lee, learning who wanted to see him, rode out between the lines and the two generals had "a very pleasant conversation of over a half hour." Grant urged Lee to counsel submission on the part of other confederate armed forces to prevent further loss. That would require consultation with the confederate president first, the Virginian said, but he thought the south would be persuaded of the uselessness of further resistance.

Federal officers obtained permission of Lee to visit confederate officers they had known in the "old army" when the states were all in the family. Grant went on to Washington. There was no bitterness then. Reconstruction was yet to come.

SILENCE

Appomattox went to sleep and no one raises a voice there in moralizing or memorializing. There are some young children in the families which live by cultivating the garden patches. They have Minie balls if the visitor wants them. They can find the metal tablets in the corn and weeds. One marks the position of a confederate battery to which legend attributes the last shot, another the position of some federal troops. There is a deserted general store, an occupied house which had been a hotel, a little confederate graveyard in which half the markers read: "C. S. A. Unknown Soldier."

Appomattox is neither a tragedy nor a triumph. It is merely a closed room.

PERFECTION BY ELIMINATION by Persis Standish

The Formal Dinner, Like Royalty, Is Rare; the Smaller, Simpler, Smarter Affair Is the Thing

AT the beginning of the winter season letters come in about the etiquette of dinner parties and are full of queries about serving, menus, etc. Many of the letters are about "formal dinners." Why formal? Formality, like royalty, is becoming scarce, if not extinct. It is only fitting when it inhabits palaces, and then the dwellers therein soon grow bored with it.

Some persons, I think, are suffering from a confusion of terms. If by formality they mean dignity, then dignity is a guest that can be invited to a cottage to dine as well as to the Quirinal or the Vatican and is just as much at home there.

Giving a dinner party of a number of courses is an art that requires either vast experience or a special talent to master. It requires more ingredients than those that go to make up the most complex of French menus. It requires, for instance, conversation, beauty of equipment, ingenuity in decoration, careful, efficient and smart service, and food that would make a dyspeptic hungry.

And on top of all these is required that hovering, intangible, exquisite spirit of hospitality that is omniscient, omnipresent and charitable, and which, with all these divine qualities, is yet a human thing. Such is the perfect dinner party and to its perfections each guest must contribute his share. Of course, the hostess must, first of all, select guests who have something to contribute either in spiritual, moral or mundane qualities. But having selected them, she expects every man to do his duty.

Be Agreeable.

So, if you are invited to a dinner party and you are a man, put in your most scintillating buttons and your most glittering mots. Expect to find each woman present a sister of Minerva or Helen, and tell her so—tell Helen, of course, that she is a sister of Minerva, and Minerva that she is a sister of Helen.

If you are a woman, burnish your hair, massage your face, put on your most attractive and subtle frock, the one that is too picturesque for cafés and yet too simple for the opera. Attune your ear to hear in even stupid male conversation the subtleties of Machiavelli and the lyrics of Abelard. Attune your laugh to respond like silver bells to the termination of anecdote.

Dispense with perfume if it is more than very faint, for perfume, dear sisters, has spoiled many a capricious appetite. I can speak with authority on this subject, having been told so by no less than ten males of varying status social and chronological. I have a great many male relatives of varying ages and tastes, and not fewer than five of them have at one time or another expressed decided views on the subject of perfume at meals.

On one occasion a beautiful and rather celebrated woman was dining with us, and my brother, the eldest male of the family, was, of course, to sit next her. Just before dinner he said to my mother, "Would you mind sitting her next to Blank?" (He named his younger brother.) "She made me sick at breakfast with that horrible scent of hers and I'd like to eat my dinner."

Aim at Perfection.

But to get back to the perfect dinner party, perhaps such perfection as one aims at is only accomplished on Olympus or in Valhalla. (Now I somehow have the impression Valhallesque table manners must be bad—too much swilling of celestial beer and too much attention to heavenly skittles.) However, the thing to do is to aim at perfection, and one may hit many a delightful mark lower down.

The way to aim at perfection is to aim at simplicity by elimination, to say to oneself, "I cannot have it thus and so, so I will not try it so and thus. Instead of having seven imperfect courses I will have three perfect ones. Instead of having twelve guests I will have four—or six. Instead of having three indifferent waitresses I will have one efficient one. Instead of having elaborate decorations of too exotic a character I will have a simple bowl of maidenhair and two candles.

"Instead of having too much on the table I will have too little. Instead of having that brilliant Jones girl, who is delightful for half an hour and a bore for two hours, I will have Maggie Brown, who is such a good listener and who has that divine gift of common sense.

"Instead of having small green strawberries out of season I will have ripe, luscious pineapple which is in. Instead of serving Turkish coffee (which I do not know how to make like Mrs. Blank de Blank, who does), I will serve the variety which is made with cold water and a tablespoon for each cup, and which is amber clear when a quarter of an egg is added thereto.

Resolved Not to Fret.

"I will read what Persis Standish promises to say about whether the plates should be removed from left to right and where the salad fork should be, and I will drill my waitress in these things and then forget them on the night of the dinner.

"I will not have about me that air of a clucking hen that rattles the servants and makes guests uncomfortable." Do this and your problem is solved.

BEAUTY ANSWERS by Gabrielle Donnelly

What's your beauty ill? Too fat? Too thin? Oily skin or hair? Oily hair, oily skin, pimples, or blackheads? Flat chested or flat footed? Write to me. I have a tonic, a diet, or a set of exercises for what ails you, and you're welcome to them, and to all the advice I can give you. If you wish a personal reply, send a stamped, addressed envelope. Address Gabrielle Donnelly, The Tribune, Chicago.

MISS K. B. X.: YOU SHOULD brush your teeth every morning and night, and if possible after each meal. It is well to have two toothbrushes and use them alternately, giving each brush a chance to dry thoroughly. The mouth wash is an excellent one you use. It is recommended by dentists. Send a stamped addressed envelope for my booklet on "Mouth Hygiene."

MRS. R.: TO CORRECT ROUNDED shoulders you must learn to stand and walk correctly. Stand with the abdomen drawn in, chest out, and think of your back as in a straight line from your waist to the head. Allow the shoulders to fall naturally. Do not draw them back. Arms and hands should be relaxed. Try walking in this way several times a day for a period of ten or fifteen minutes each time, and send a stamped, addressed envelope for exercises to overcome the round shoulders.

BROWN EYES: THIN PEOPLE require an abundant supply of energy food or fuel foods, fats, starch, and sugar. They need to secure the largest number of calories in the most digestible form. Butter and oil are the best fats for them, as they are not likely to disturb digestion. Send stamped, addressed envelope for food to be eaten.

MISS M.: THERE IS NO WAY OF decreasing the size of the joints of the fingers, but by building up the rest of the hand the joints are made to appear smaller. Massage the hands with olive oil or a good cold cream. Swinging Indian clubs will be found helpful in developing the tissues.

MARTHA P.: STANDARD weight for a girl of 16, 5 feet 1, is 110 pounds. It will not be necessary, nor would it be wise for you to reduce, but you may eat sparingly of candy and sweets. They are most fattening.

Doris Blake's Answers to Love Problems

Have you a perplexing love affair on which you need the counsel of a friend? Write to Doris Blake, care The Tribune, Chicago. If you wish a personal reply please send a stamped addressed envelope.

Up to You.

"Dear Miss Blake: A certain young man has been asking me for dates. He seemed interested but as he had a steady girl I hesitated. Finally, I consented to go with him. After a pleasant evening together, he asked how long it would be before I would let him come back again. I laughed and went into the house without answering.

"He hesn't mentioned it again. Would it be proper to ask him to call?

"FLAPPER."

You weren't very encouraging, so naturally he didn't ask you again. It's up to you to let him know you'd be glad to have him come again, dear.

Apologize.

"Dear Miss Blake: My friend and I had an argument. I am willing to give in, but fear he will snub me.

"HEARTBROKEN."

If you were to blame, or you're equally guilty, don't hesitate to say so.

THE RETURN OF THE FEMININE

by Doris Blake

Copr. U. S. Pat. Off.

Some Reasons Why Woman Is Laying Aside the Mannish Costume and Taking Up the Frills Again

A MAN was holding forth on "woman's present tendency towards masculinity."

"You surprise me," said an objector. "To my way of thinking, she is becoming more and more feminine. Look at the dress of the women in business, for instance. Compare it with the mannish clothes of their early entrance into the field of competition. It's only a freak you see nowadays in shirt and forbiddingly tailored suit. Take woman's patronage of beauty parlors as another example. Her cosmetic bills are mounting daily higher and higher. Surely these are not tendencies towards masculinity."

"O, so far as her personal self is concerned, yes—possibly she is reverting to type. But as to her rights, freedom, privileges recently won—wouldn't you say she's stolen man's weapons——"

"Yes," said an intruder, "and she's scared to death, herself, of what is going to happen with them in her hands."

The intruder proceeded to relate another one of those oft-heard tales of a great financial success missing so many of the joys dear to women by playing her masculine rôle too well.

Immediately the subject was directed into the channel of what the future holds for woman—whether she has been traveling in a circle that, at some early date, will bring her back to where she started.

The sex antagonism that has grown concurrently with woman's progress the woman herself does not like. She loses too much through it. The old biological urge keeps cropping up and calling for treatment as a woman, a slightly dependent woman. And the knowledge that in fighting a man with his own weapons she is hopelessly outclassed, discourages her. So the question is constantly rising in a woman's mind as to whether it is not better in the long run to play the woman game, even on a man's job.

There is always a tinge of bitterness in the voice of a woman who has "asked no favors" when she speaks of the fluffy headed little creature who gets what she wants by playing the feminine.

Are women learning slowly that they succeed better when they stick to their own guns?

"Unfair" Competition.

A story is current of a clever, English authoress, sculptress, journalist, and beauty. She tells that in journalism she was unpopular with the men against whom she had to compete. They said that she used her femininity to get results that were impossible to them as mere males.

"Unfair competition," was their verdict.

Blandly admitting the charge, the woman argued: "But what was I to do? If I had not exploited the last ounce of value to be got out of my friendships and the fact that I was a woman, the men would have beaten me. I had a living to get for myself and my children. Not to have used all my weapons would have been a criminal kind of chivalry."

Unfair or wise, women are finding out that the best way to beat a man at his own game is to lure him on with their own.

There is a French aphorism to the effect that "a clever woman never meets a man on his own ground," a reason advanced by a well known Parisian designer for the unreadiness of his countrywomen to adopt sports clothes.

"The best she can ever hope to achieve is a bad imitation of men. With her own abundant equipment, why be a bad imitation of anything?" the designer naively argued.

And that, trained observers confide, is what is going on in the minds of a good many of the so-called independents whose motto heretofore was to eliminate sex entirely in the field of competition.

Not that there are any signs on the horizon of a speedy return to the bad old days when one could be "poor but genteel," or when one had to accept marriage as the only course open.

But there is something slightly ominous in the steadily increasing acceptance of the more graceful frock of an earlier period. If you look back over history, nothing, you will find, epitomizes the spirit of a period as its dress. Whether the clothes produce the period, or vice versa, does not matter. Dress is a frank reflection of the moment's psychology.

The Ultimate in Elimination.

Woman, in her dress, has reached the ultimate limit of elimination. Nothing more can be decently eliminated or abbreviated. So alteration in style is bound to come. It is unlikely that the trailing skirt will reappear any more than the Victorian type of woman, but dress already shows that "we are rounding our curve into femininity again," as an English writer puts it.

"The significant thing," this writer says, "is that you cannot be a Madame Pompadour in a one-piece bathing suit, or a Cleopatra in a stiff little business suit, and neither can you be a boy—even an imitation one—in a real girl's frock."

How much the man is responsible for the temporary phase of masculinity that swept the post-war girlhood, it is difficult to say. One authority argues that women could not be expected to be women or even pretend to be clinging and semi-helpless when so many men are giving bad imitations of flappers. There is nothing to cling to and the work has to be done, and if women are getting sick of playing at being boys and men it is because so many of the male sex are lamentably incapable of playing the part, themselves.

"It is the effeminacy and incompetency of so many modern men that is creating seventy-five per cent of the so-called masculinity among women," says our authority. "Look about. See the number of women who are the best 'men' of their families—the number of women who are looked to by their families to keep them going."

Those who have been the best "men" will tell you that it is a weary, rending business that would be left quickly enough to men if they were fit to shoulder the burden. Being woman, it is impossible not to let the head drop wearily into the hands and pray that the burden be lifted.

The TRIBUNE COOK BOOK

The Cook, with Her Cookies, Is Imitating the Fruit Trees in Giving Us Sweet Food Pieces to Eat Out of Hand.

All recipes have been scientifically tested by Miss Eddington with current market materials and are indorsed by her.

By Jane Eddington

A COOKIE is a convenient and diverting dainty. How could the old eggnogg makers have got on without it? Pleasant drinks of many sorts, and ices and cheeses, are enhanced by a little sweet piece as a companion. And when cookies are freshly made they have an alluring aroma, a delicious flavor, and other gratifying qualities which they usually do not have when they have aged, but there are exceptions—fruit cookies, like fruit cakes, may require ripening. But the pleasant sweet smell and taste of a freshly baked sugar cookie should yield impetus to drive one to make them at home. How to begin? We are about, and below, to suggest the sour cream drop cookie as a starting point.

But the making of drop cookies is no great help to one who would make rolled out dough cookies, though just as good experience can be got in baking drop cookies as in baking rolled cookies, and, since the baking of cookies may make such a difference in the quality of these sweet bits, a good experience with dropped cookies is not to be despised.

Yet we must remember that a good cookie recipe, whether for dropped or rolled cookies, is but a starting point. Extremely poor cookies may be the finish. And when the recipe is poor, what can be done? It is too bad that there are a confusing number of cookie recipes to be found—fine, good, bad, and indifferent. Even an inexperienced cook might feel baffled when she started out for new experience unless she gritted her teeth and put all her wits to work.

To Make Cookies Soft.

Thin and crisp cookies have their place, but so do those which are soft and thick. The thin sort come from expert rolling and baking. Most people get cookies half way between these two.

To get the soft and somewhat thick cookies the dough must be worked as little as possible, patted out, and not rolled thin. The softest cookies can never be secured by taking the scraps from one cutting, even when these are molded with a fresh ball of dough, as is often done.

How to Get a Dough.

A famous cookie maker once wrote me that she thought she had an infallible rule for getting her dough of the right consistency. She stirred flour in until the dough was quite thick; then she used an ordinary dinner knife and cut in flour until the dough would not stick when she pressed down upon it. Then she let the dough stand in a cold place over night, but not in a refrigerator. A cold and dry room is better when the dough stands and slowly stiffens, but ice can be used for quick work—on ice. This rule seems to me to be helpful, but there are other ways yet.

This rule went along with the statement that the author of it had just made eleven different batches of cookies for Christmas gifts—1,600 cookies in all. And the eleven batches did not at all represent her variety, for she had collected many cutters and forms and she decorated the tops of her cookies in the most various ways so as to make them not only attractive to look at but to vary in flavor or taste.

Substitutes for Doughs.

The inexperienced cook who has not learned to make and roll a cookie dough can use a drop cookie batter with a bit more flour; make this up into a roll, chill it, and then cut slices from it to bake. Such cookies are also made from chilled doughs and have names like "ice box cookies" and "sausage cookies."

To get a dough that will roll out as thin as a wafer and then to roll it requires skill and experience of somewhat the same sort as pie crust making. One who wishes to excel in either or both of these expertnesses can gain skill for one when she works with the other.

On Baking Cookies.

Some doughs and batters will stand more heat than others, and the amount of butter used influences this matter. An experiment has recently been going on in this vicinity with one single batter given many environments and various additions. When it was a drop batter and cooked on an ascending heat the cookies were thick. When it was baked on a descending heat they were thin.

The maker, who gave them much loving attention and thought, was amazed at her results, thinking it was extraordinary that blood sisters, as she called them, should vary so much in appearance. Then she went on and made other members of her final family with many "in-laws." As she cooked them she hovered near the oven much of the time. The cooking time is rather brief for cookies, and she could see through the glass door, helped by a flash light, what the heat was doing to her prodigies and she enjoyed seeing. You see, cookie making can be recommended as a fine diversion, if approached unnervously and with curiosity and ambition.

Sour Cream Cookies.

To call a cookie a sour cream cookie is not to be at all specific, for there can be found many formulas with this name and with directions for cookies in which one of the ingredients is sour cream. In some, brown sugar is used. Most of them have eggs, but we can get good effects without them. Sometimes graham flour is used instead of white, and there are barley cookies, also. Fruit and chocolate and seeds, like caraway, are also made with sour cream.

Sour Cream Recipe.

The base for many variations made as described above "On Baking Cookies" was the following:

One-half cup of sour cream, one-half cup sugar, one cup flour, one-third teaspoon soda, one-half teaspoon salt, one-fourth teaspoon nutmeg. Whip the cream until it is smooth. Save out half a teaspoon of it in which to dissolve soda and beat into it one-half cup of sugar, the salt and nutmeg. Before adding the flour to this mixture sift it twice, and mix it in a little at a time, getting finally a stiff dough into which mix the dissolved soda.

Take up teaspoons of the dough and drop them on a buttered and floured tin. Bake them from ten to twelve minutes on either an ascending or descending temperature, according to what you want. Hot ovens do one thing to cookies and cooler ones another.

Experiments.

First the above drop batter was experimented with. Some drops of it baked on a descending temperature, starting with 400 degrees and rapidly descending to 350, being spread out with a wet spoon first could be rolled while they were hot. Some which were baked on an ascending temperature starting at 325 ran together and were like a thin tea cake. Five different kinds of hermitlike cookies were secured with this sort of batter, thickened up only as much as the flour used on raisins and fruit would do so, but a rather generous amount was used—four tablespoons to the above with four tablespoons of chopped raisins and four of chopped walnuts.

Then, to one part of the fruited batter, a little clove and cinnamon, melted butter and brown sugar were added, and to another part some molasses and a teaspoon of pulverized coffee. The total number of changes were enough to be confusing, but they did not show how the batter could be pleasantly varied by quite slight effort.

Finally, one of the fruited batters, thickened, was formed into a roll, chilled for an hour, then cut across with a silver fruit knife dipped in hot water. The thin slices, when baked, were cookie shaped, although the experiment was tried of perfecting the shape with fingers wet in cold water.

Sugar Cookie Dough.

The following recipe yields a high grade cookie, or a base that is excellent to use when many forms are to be made with different cutters and many varieties secured by different icings and garnishes. It requires quick skill in massing the dough to make it sufficiently compact. Squeeze it hard if you cannot get it right, but only for once or twice: Two egg yolks, one and one-fourth cups of flour, three-eighths cup of butter, one-fourth cup sugar, flavor to suit. Combine the egg yolks, flour, butter and sugar, and work the whole as a pie crust is worked or mixed, then when the whole can be massed into a dough of uniform consistency, knead it for fifteen minutes, or until it is rather shining and stretchy. (This is a German way, and the formula is German and excellent.)

Next, put it away, covered up in a cool place for half an hour, then roll out in a thin and even shape, on a board into which flour has been rubbed to smoothness.

Finally, cut out cookies in a pleasing variety of shapes, and garnish variously, or bake the cookies and then ice them. Unless exceedingly thin, these can be baked in an oven as hot as 375 degrees. Remember there is more or less loss of heat in opening the oven.

Cookie Shapes.

With a nice dough like the above a cookie cutter which will give a fleur-de-lis shape will give a chance for some "dressy" effects. Put icing where the conventional band is and also some on the tips. Stars are also attractive, and colored icings can be used with great effect on such cookies, as they cannot on the thinnest of all cookies.

Sweet Graham Wafers.

The following recipe for an excellent little thing is repeated after a rather long rest, partly because an amateur cook can get good results with it: One half cup of sour cream, one-half cup of granulated sugar, one cup or one cup and about two tablespoons more of graham flour, measured after sifting it once; one-half teaspoon salt, one-half teaspoon soda, white flour to handle or knead with. Beat up cream in mixing bowl, beat in soda or dissolve it last, as in sour cream cookie recipe, add sugar, salt, and flour and stir to a stiff dough.

Put the white flour on to a bread board and rub it smooth, having made the dough into a ball, roll it thin, then cut it into strips and these into domino sized pieces or oblongs three inches long and less than an inch wide. Or cut it into round about two inches in diameter. Prick with a fork before baking. These are best if sprinkled with sugar before they are baked. Bake in a slow oven until they are crisp, but not greatly browned.

The Strange Adventures of Young Robinson Grewso

By KEMBLE

...him Robin, his dad ...alled him son, ...grew like a weed and thought it ...great fun, ...he called himself Robinson Grewso.

ROBIN and his pals were tickled pink over the way "Yap" had scared the Cannibal King and Queen out of the cabin. He was certainly some d...

"Um, um," chimed in Chocolate Drop, "dat ole Kiyi knows more dan any Injun I've knowed him ever since he come to dis island. Why, when Robin he used ter bury all de scraps what he kin find and inside of eight months small bushes would come up an' hangin' on each little bush would be de nicest, fat, juicy pork or beef yer ever tasted."

Everybody laughed at Sundae and knew he was spoofing, but the little fellow stuck to his story. "All right, you laugh at me. Jis wait him an' ole Kiyi knows an' see what's gwine happen."

"Why not give him a pie and let him eat it?" chuckled Chin-Chin. "Maybe it can grow some pieplant," and the bird giggled and sputtered at his own joke.

"Talking about pies," chimed in Bunny, "I'm just plain hungry. When's that hot bread you were going to bake, Sundae?"

The little black cook batted his eyes. "Goodness gracious," he exclaimed, "I most done forgot it. It must be about ready to bake by dis time."

Then he beat it out for the outdoor oven where the huge mess of dough was already bulging over the edges of the big pan. Soon it was freer, way clear of the pan, and as it rose steadily Sundae made a flying leap and wrapped his arms around the huge mass.

"Help! Help!" he called in a frightened voice. "Come quick, everybody." But before Robin and his pals could reach the spot the unbaked bread was some ten feet above them with Sundae hanging on for dear life.

Round and round in circles darted the exciting bird. Higher and higher it rose. Chin-Chin started in pursuit, but his stubby wings could make no headway and he tumbled back to the earth.

"It's carrying him out to sea," shouted Roy. "Man the boat and start after him."

All was turmoil now, the sail was hoisted and out shot the little craft. High in the air sailed Sundae, over the rough waters of the lake.

Sweet Marie wept and wrung her hands. "I told him not to put in so much yeast, but he wouldn't mind me."

And now a new terror was looming up through the darkening clouds. The old airplane bird was making for the big dough ball with its precious freight.

On shot the boat, sailing beneath the frightened tar baby and his big balloon.

With a sudden nose dive the old bird scared friend. Soon he had him dough as Sundae, releasing his hold, fell like a shooting star into the waters of the ruffled lake. Robin was overboard in an instant, striking out for the scared cannibal. Soon he had him safely on board, but the old airplane bird, her head covered with a huge mass of dough, came down "kerplunk" into the lake, and there she floated.

"Call it Yeaster Sundae."

"Now, stay there," yelled Robin, "and give the fish a treat."

One by one the fishes, large and small, began nibbling at the unbaked bread, and they, too, began to rise and skim over the crest of the waves.

"I know a good name for this day," giggled Bunny, "Let's call it Yeaster Sundae."

"You can't write," her mother commented.

"Well, Edna can't read," was Margaret's retort. A. W.

He Only Thanks.

Last summer a classmate of mine had a week's vacation between jobs. She had either to pay her way while in town or stay with me. She chose the latter. I was glad to have her and tried to make her visit in my home as pleasant as possible.

Several months later a pouring rain made it necessary for me to stay at the college during the noon hour. She insisted upon my eating lunch at the dormitory with her. Pleased with this thoughtfulness, I accepted her invitation, but when the waiter brought the check, placing it between us, my friend coolly showed me how to fill in the blank and I realized I was a paying guest. G. C. G.

Showing Him the Town.

A young man, who was a mere acquaintance of mine, called me up one day and asked for my mother. He said her if he could use her auto to take some friends of his from the train. Mother consented although she didn't know the man, having seen him once in her life.

After keeping the car for two days, he said he had parked in front of the house. By that time I was so upset I called him up for an explanation. He said his friend wanted to see the sights of the city so I loaned the car until the gas was low and then returned it. S. S. B.

Self-Invited Guest.

We live on the outskirts of a small town. The cheekiest person around here is a woman who brings her sewing and mending over to my house every day, because she says it costs too much to keep up a fire all day while her husband is away from home.

As he is often gone all week, it is not pleasant nor convenient for me to have her, as she stays for lunch and frequently for supper, too. We ask her, of course, when we sit down to meals, and she always stays.

If I have to be away from home, she says sweetly, "I'll keep up the fires for you and get the lunch." L. W. K.

Enough to Make One Cynical.

While coming upstairs I noticed something dark on a stair step. I stooped to see what it was. To my amazement I found it to be a two dollar bill.

Being a rooming house, I immediately took it down to the landlady. She stared at me and remarked, "Where is the other one? I had 2 two dollar bills, and I certainly dropped both in the same place."

I didn't even get "Thank you," for my honesty. M. M.

Pattern Borrower.

A neighbor of mine is a woman who has plenty of cheek. I have a little girl, 12, and she has one of about the same age. I never buy a pattern for a dress for my daughter but she asks for it so she can make her girl a dress exactly like the one I make.

She has not bought a single pattern since I have known her, and that is about three years. L. D. C.

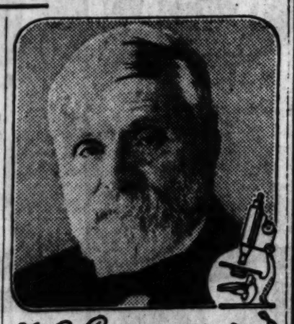
Prescription He Wrote in 1892 is the World's Most Popular Laxative

When Dr. Caldwell started to practice medicine in 1875, the needs of humanity were not as great as they are today. People lived normal, healthful lives, ate plain, wholesome food, got plenty of fresh air and sunshine, but even that early there were many physics and purges for the relief of constipation which Dr. Caldwell did not believe were good for human beings to put into their system. So he wrote a prescription for a laxative to be used by his patients.

This prescription for constipation he used early in his practice, and when he put in drug stores, in 1892 under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, is a liquid vegetable laxative intended for women, children and elderly people, and they need just a mild, safe, gentle bowel stimulant—Syrup Pepsin.

The successful management this prescription has proven its worth and is now the largest selling liquid laxative in the world. The fact that millions of bottles are used a year proves that it has won the confidence of people who needed it to get relief from constipation, biliousness, flatulence, indigestion, loss of appetite and sleep, bad breath, dyspepsia, colds and fevers.

Thousands of families are now never without Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and those who will once start using it you will find always have a bottle handy in the medicine chest.



W. B. Caldwell M.D.
AT AGE 83

It is particularly pleasing to know that the most of it is bought by mothers for themselves and the children, though Syrup Pepsin is just as valuable for elderly people. All drug stores have the generous bottles.

We would be glad to have you prove at our expense how much Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can mean to you and yours. Just write "Syrup Pepsin," Monticello, Illinois, and we will send you prepaid a FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE.

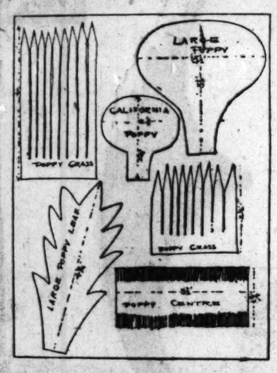
Practical and Fancy Needle Work . . . By Clotilde . .

These Artificial Poppies Make Gay Decorations for a Party.

What is your sewing problem? Do you have trouble in following a pattern? Do you find difficulty in making a skirt hang evenly or making a sleeve that doesn't twist? If there is anything you would like to know about these or other problems of needlework, write to Clotilde, The Tribune, Chicago, inclosing a stamped addressed envelope, if a personal reply is desired.



GREEN, black and the colors you wish to use for the poppies will be needed for these very natural and lovely flowers. Fine wire is also necessary.

After the green and black strips of paper are cut making them 1½ inches long, fold them together and cut to form a fine fringe. Roll them between the palms, hold in the right hand and press the ends into the palm of the left hand, thus curling the ends. Then unroll the fringe.

If a ball center is preferred, make a small ball of paper, putting the fringe around it. Ready made poppy stamens may be used, if preferred.

Gather a piece of double fringe four or five inches long; fasten with wire in the center. Cut four petals for each flower, and flute the top edge and make cup shape with thumb and forefinger. Arrange the petals around the center, space evenly and wind tightly with wire. Then fasten to a piece of rather stiff wire for the stem.

Cut one-half inch wide strips of green paper and wind over the wire stem, folding in two leaves.

Waxing Flowers—To one pound of paraffin use 10 cents' worth of spermaceti and 10 cents' worth of white wax. Put the ingredients in a deep saucepan and heat until it is all melted. Remove from the fire and let cool to about 98 degrees.

Slip the complete flower into the liquid quickly, shake off the surplus paraffin and reshape the petals, if necessary. Make three dippings and then set cool. These flowers will keep in the warmest weather and may be washed by dipping in a deep pan of lukewarm water in which a little suds of some pure white soap has been made.

HINTS TO THE BUSINESS GIRL

She Needs Her Energy and Her Good Looks, and Here Are Ways of Keeping Them

NEW YORK.—[Special Correspondence.]—An enterprising investigator discloses the interesting fact that the average school girl hikes eleven and a half miles in a day about her work and play.

From school she ventures into business, and while we have not the investigators word for it, we have reason to believe that the average working girl engaged in sedentary office work does not get one-half of that amount of daily exercise.

Proof of her lack of muscular activity, once she becomes a breadwinner, and of lack of the observance of other good health rules, you see in the gradual dissipation of the "bloom" with which she started downtown that first eventful morning.

The day of a working woman has its limitations. There is no gainsaying the fact. The old freedom is no longer hers. But the job of maintaining her health and efficiency is. So, some compromise must be made with conditions as they are.

The Industrial Hygiene bulletin of the New York State department of labor details a health program that does recognize the limitations of the working girl's time and resources. A digest of the rules outlined follow:

Food. Eat regularly, slowly and chew your food thoroughly. Eat a varied diet, including plenty of fruit and vegetables, with meat only once a day. Drink two glasses of milk every day and very little tea and coffee. Do not eat many sweets. Avoid fried, greasy, and highly spiced foods. If you are more than ten pounds overweight, eat less starch, fats, and sugar. If you are more than ten pounds underweight, eat more at each meal, get more rest, and learn to relax. If you feel worried or nervous, eat less than usual.

Water: Drink six or eight glasses of water a day. Drink a glass on rising in the morning. Drink water with your meals, but do not use it to wash down food insufficiently chewed. Cool water is better than iced.

Clothing: Do not dress too warmly indoors. Wrap up when going outdoors. Wear comfortable shoes to work. Do not wear a corset or brassiere that pushes the abdomen down. Do not wear rubber garments to reduce.

Fresh air: Keep the windows open in your home all the year round. The room temperature should be 68 F. in the daytime and 50 F. at night. Try to stay outdoors at least an hour and a half every day. Get outdoors at the lunch hour and walk to and from work. Spend your day off outdoors, as often as possible.

Recreation: Vary your recreation with outdoor exercises, such as skating, tennis, hiking. Dancing is healthful, if not overdone. Do not go to the movies too often, especially if your work is sedentary. Movies mean poor air, no exercise, late hours. Go to a gymnasium or swimming pool if there is one near.

Bathing: Take a warm bath every day and follow it with a cold spray to help prevent colds.

Sleep: Sleep at least eight hours every night with the windows open, using plenty of blankets in cold weather to avoid being chilled. If you do not sleep well, consult your doctor.

Teeth: Brush the teeth in the morning and before going to bed. Keep them in good repair.

Menstruation: Painful menstruation can often be prevented by keeping the bowels regular and by taking plenty of fresh air and exercise. Continue your normal exercise and the warm tub bath and get more sleep than usual during this period.

Constipation: Eat plenty of fruit and vegetables and coarse foods, such as bran, whole wheat bread and brown rice.

Cold: Follow the rules for fresh air, food, exercise, clothing and bathing and you will not usually take cold.

Headache: Constipation and eyestrain most frequently cause headache. Find out the cause and remove it permanently. Do not take powders and medicine of any kind.

Happiness Helps.

Try to get fun out of your work and the satisfaction that comes with trying to do your work well. Few things contribute so much to good health and a sense of well being.

In a recent report of an insurance company it was noted that the physique of the working girl was slowly undergoing a change for the worse. Wrong food, bad posture and lack of exercise were given as the outstanding reasons for the change and for reduction in efficiency of a number of young women after they had followed the bad habits for several years.

Food is the difficult problem of the breadwinner, particularly of the younger woman whose salary is not sufficient to meet the average restaurant demand. Fortunately, those organizations employing large numbers of workers recognize the efficiency value to them of a well cooked, well planned, nourishing luncheon. It is on her noonday meals that the average worker, for reasons of economy or haste, or a combination of both, does neglect this important phase of health building.

The perfect luncheon place for the worker is amid quiet, restful surroundings, but this ideal spot is difficult to find unless one's luncheon bill is not a matter of concern. To the average young worker the amount she spends for food at noon is a serious matter.

I would suggest that the day start with a good breakfast. In fact, I plead for this, knowing how many young women neglect to eat a nourishing meal in the morning. Some I know are foolish enough to do it as a reducing measure; others because they will not arise a few minutes earlier and give themselves sufficient time for the morning meal; others again because they have cultivated the habit of a light breakfast. My theory is that if a girl will take a good meal in the morning and another at night, her noonday meal and its expense can be considerably lightened without serious consequences.

Eat a Hearty Breakfast.

Coffee and a prepared breakfast food and a bakeshop roll or doughnuts are not a good breakfast. The period of longest fast, from six or seven the night before, makes better breakfasts imperative. Fruit should never be omitted from the morning meal. Apples, oranges, grapefruit, grapes, bananas, pears, pineapple are all desirable first foods of the day. A cereal with cream should follow, egg, or crisp bacon or both are recommended and buttered rolls or toast, with sufficient time to consume the meal slowly. Coffee, particularly, should not be gulped down hot. Hot pancakes and waffles smothered under syrup or honey have none too good an effect on the digestive tract. They are all right occasionally, but not frequently.

The dinner at night should have a salad made of fresh fruits or vegetables, in addition to the usual meat, potato and separately served vegetable.

Milk is a protective and a rebuilding food and it is also a "stay with you" food. Take milk, then, with your luncheon.

The rules laid down by the state department of labor for the working girl are simple, sane and of inestimable value, not only in health upkeep but in the interests of pure physical attractiveness. And while an occasional male employer will go on record as never intending to hire another pretty girl, most business men will frankly admit their preference for the good looking one. He demands not a professional beauty, but the type of girl who pleases with the sheer vibrancy of health and youth, a quality sustained only through attention to the items of hygiene outlined in the rules above.

THE HOME HARMONIOUS

This room is furnished with cleverly renovated castoffs.

The Guest Room Need Not Be Expensively or Elaborately Furnished in Order to Be Hospitable and Charming

Phyllis Marsh will be glad to assist the homemaker in any problems pertaining to home building and home furnishing. Address your letter to Phyllis Marsh, The Tribune, Chicago. Inclose stamped addressed envelope for personal reply.

By Phyllis Marsh

THERE is always a distinctly hospitable and delightfully charming atmosphere about the guest chamber that has been carefully furnished and decorated. The room need not be elaborately or expensively done in order to achieve the desired effect. It simply requires a little thought and care on the part of the home decorator.

In the first place a guest chamber should be so arranged in its decorative scheme that any one may enjoy occupying it. Few are the men who would enjoy a prolonged visit with a family who had nothing but a "frilly" taffeta adorned bedroom to offer them. The same thought holds true of the women who favor "frilliness." They would not be exactly happy in a room displaying much that was severely plain or masculine in decorative treatment. So it behooves the home decorator to bear these facts in mind and plan the guest chamber accordingly.

In any event, simplicity should be the keynote of the room, whether it is to display printed or plain fabrics, or furniture in the natural wood finish or enameled. For the family which is in the habit of entertaining guests for extended periods of time, it is advisable to furnish the room in somewhat the bed-sitting room style, where the guest is privileged at any time to retire in order to read, write letters, or sew.

If there is more than one guest chamber in the home and the room is small, a single or three-quarter sized bed may be selected. But if there is only one guest chamber and that of generous size, twin beds should be the choice. Keeping in mind that the room is to bear some resemblance to a sitting room, a large chiffonier or chest of drawers and a dresser with the mirror separate should be the choice.

Then there should be either a small secretary type of writing desk or a small oblong one drawer table over which could hang a good sized book shelf, which could substitute for the desk. A straight backed chair should accompany this group, as well as a small waste basket.

In another convenient corner of the room should be placed an "easy" overstuffed chair, possibly boasting a slipcover of chintz or cretonne. Next to it should be a reading table upon which there is ample room for a few books, magazines, and a simple type of parchment shaded reading lamp. A comfortable little footstool or an old fashioned hassock would not be amiss if placed in front of the "easy" chair.

At the side of the single bed or between the twin beds is the place for the usual convenient night stand and lamp. If there is sufficient space in the room it is always convenient to have a chaise longue comfortably placed.

Last, but not least, there should be a slipper chair placed in a suitable corner of the room and also a three or four paneled decorative screen, which always serves well when ventilating a room to break direct drafts.

Pictures in the form of colored prints, etchings, or simple water color landscapes of a type to be sufficiently interesting to any one should adorn the walls of every guest chamber. Unless the walls are covered with an elaborately designed paper, there is always a place on them for pictures of one kind or another. Colorful wall hangings also serve their purpose in a decorative manner quite as effectively as pictures, although the use of more than two hangings in any room is not advisable. India prints, cretonnes, chintzes, toiles de Jouy, and many of the colorful prints emulating the famous Sardinian embroideries now so much in vogue make ideal wall hangings for any bedroom.

Probably the one thing which interests the average home decorator more than any other one thing pertaining to the guest chamber is the bedspread and the draperies. What material to select and the style in which they should be made are always of interest to those who sew. With a world of fabrics of every conceivable description to select from, there only remains the character of the room to decide the proper choice to be made. The room of simple, unassuming furnishings calls for fabrics of like nature, and under this heading come many of varied type, such as cretonne, chintz, hand-blocked linen, toile de Jouy, calico prints, rayon and cotton taffeta, striped and also checked prints and crashes, etc.

The bedroom of more than simple character, but hardly of the sumptuous type, calls for such fabrics as silk rep, silk poplin, moire, and similar materials, while the room of extremely sumptuous style may be arrayed in silk damasks or taffeta, or brocaded taffeta, or satin.

Cleverly renovated "cast-offs" in the form of furniture was the inspiration for the guest chamber described and illustrated today. To begin with, the room is of northeast exposure, so, in order to make it appear cheerful, pleasant and inviting, the color scheme decided upon was cedar, green and gold. The room is of average size, being 11x13 feet, so only those pieces of furniture necessary to the comfort of the guest were chosen.

A simple type of walnut finished metal bed in a single width size is placed between two doors. A small night stand in walnut finish has been placed close to the head of the bed and displays a small pottery lamp topped with a plaited glazed chints shade in tones of gold and green. On the opposite wall [north], between two windows, is a resurrected old fashioned chiffonier. The attached mirror was removed and hung above it on separate cords. Since the finish was golden oak and rather badly marred, it was decided that it should be enameled and in a brown as nearly like the bed as possible. The trimmings in it consist of hairline stripes and wooden knobs done in gold enamel to give it character. It is adorned with two brass candlesticks at each end, between which is placed an inexpensive paper covered box.

A small oblong one-drawer table flanks the west wall and has been converted into a dressing table and was enameled to match the chiffonier. Over it hangs a plainly framed long, narrow mirror, the upper part of which is a little colored print. A chints dresser cover and a parchment shaded glass lamp are all that grace the table top.

In front of it is a high, ladder-backed chair. The one window on the east wall is centered and to the right is a four paneled, chints covered screen, in front of which is a comfortable slipper chair in a slip cover of a cotton striped fabric. Just in front of the window is a dropleaf gumwood table in walnut finish so arranged that it may be used for either reading or writing purposes. To the left of the table is a generously proportioned barrel chair, upholstered in a green denim and having a pillow of cedar colored rep.

A wrought iron floor lamp with parchment colored paper shade and a tiny end table and waste paper basket complete the interesting corner group.

The floor is covered here and there with oval shaped wool fiber rugs in imitation of braided rugs, and the walls are done in a paper of creamy tone, while the long draperies are of a striped rayon taffeta in gold, green and cedar tones. Topping the windows are narrow shaped lambrequins of the same material.

The spread is also of the same material and made perfectly plain and merely corded where it is seamed on both sides.

Strange Weddings

All Wet.

It was to be a garden wedding. The day had been perfect until one-half hour before the ceremony was to take place when clouds quickly gathered. At the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march the attendants started toward the altar in the garden and at the same time a light rain began to fall. As the bride, leaning on her father's arm, appeared coming down the steps, it rained even harder and they sought shelter under a tree near by.

The guests scattered for their wraps and umbrellas. But the procession having been started, the bride wanted to continue. So they walked up to the altar under an umbrella, all the attendants with umbrellas and guests standing in groups under trees and the rain simply pouring down.

It sure was the wettest wedding I ever attended. F. L. J.

Loaded with Bills.

We live in a section where there are a great many foreigners. They usually get married on Saturday and the bride always wears white with a long veil. A reception is always held in the church hall and every one is invited. Lunch is served to all those present.

In the evening the men try to break a plate with silver. If they succeed they dance with the bride and either put the silver money in a basket or pin bills on her veil.

Before the evening is over the bride has fives, tens and twenties pinned all over her veil. She is exhausted, but has as high as $500 or $600 pinned on her. Sometimes the veil is so full that they pin money on her dress. The highest amount I know of one bride getting was $850. C. W.

Have you ever seen a wedding so outlandish that it upset all your ideas of the traditional ceremony? Some marriages are foreign and quaint in their adherence to ancient customs; others are ultra modern in their haphazard speed and unconventionality. The Tribune would like to know the story of the strangest wedding you've ever seen. We will pay $1 for every letter published. Address Strange Weddings, Chicago Tribune.

MOTHER

Cross, Feverish Child Needs this Harmless Laxative

Every mother realizes, after giving her children "California Fig Syrup," that this is their ideal laxative, because they love its pleasant taste and it thoroughly cleanses the tender little stomach, liver and bowels without griping.

When cross, irritable, feverish, or breath is bad, stomach sour, look at the tongue, mother! If coated, give a teaspoonful of this harmless, "fruity laxative," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, sour bile and undigested food passes out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. When the little system is full of cold, throat sore, has stomachache, diarrhea, indigestion, colic—remember, a good "inside cleansing" should always be the first treatment given.

Millions of mothers keep "California Fig Syrup" handy; they know a teaspoonful today saves a sick child tomorrow. Ask your druggist for a bottle of "California Fig Syrup," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and grown-ups printed on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here, so don't be fooled. Get the genuine, made by "California Fig Syrup Company."

A FRIEND IN NEED

by Sally Joy Brown

A LITTLE AID OFTEN GOES A LONG WAY.

I want to be the medium through which the friends in need and the friends in need may be brought together. It may be you have some discarded article which has not outgrown its usefulness that will make some less fortunate one happy and you would gladly give it if you knew how to go about it. Write to me and I shall be happy to be of service to you. Please write on one side of the paper.

When information is wanted by mail, a stamped, addressed envelope should accompany the request. Please do not send article to The Tribune but write for the address of the applicant and send direct.

WOULD you like to see what the gifts we are giving through this department really accomplish for many of the families receiving them?

Then you will be interested in this case. Several weeks ago the husband and father came home from seven weeks of sickness in the County hospital, to try to get another start. But his clothes were so shabby, and with all the expenses of his illness he could not afford to buy new ones. Worse than that, his wife was expecting a baby within two months—and they were about to be evicted from the furnished room they had been occupying. Both were in despair, when we heard of their plight through a neighbor, and published a request for help.

That was their situation several weeks ago. The following letter tells how their prospects changed, and how the change was brought about.

"Dear Sally Joy Brown: It is hard to come down to earth, and that is why I haven't written before this to thank you and all the others. But don't think we were not grateful, for I truly think my life was saved.

"The first we knew about it was when we had word from you that some one had offered us a room for a week or two until we got straightened around. My husband and I didn't quite know what to make of it—but we knew we weren't going to be in the street, and that was wonderful.

"Late that afternoon a man called and left a fine blue suit, in fact a complete outfit, hat, shoes, and all, for my husband—and it put new courage into both of us, for we felt it would be much easier for him to get work if he looked presentable. He didn't get work the next day, but he did by the end of the week and then how happy we were! It was like being saved when we were drowning.

"Now we have a room of our own that we can pay for. My husband is making enough to pay for food and rent, with a little more, and we'll make it go farther soon, because we've been given some furniture and we can take unfurnished rooms, which will be cheaper. And I have received a lot of clothes for the baby and we are just bursting with happiness.

"You'll hear more from us soon, because we're going to be able in a short time to help somebody in the same wonderful way we have been helped—and we won't lose a minute letting you know when that time comes. MRS. N. B."

Doesn't that letter tell its own story? And simple gifts did it all. Weren't they worth while, when they did so much, and wouldn't you be happy to do the same for some of the others in need?

Not Prepared for Winter.

"My husband is tubercular and the dispensary has sent him to Texas for his health. I have two children and support them myself, but now winter is here I find I am not well prepared. I would be grateful for any warm blankets and any dresses and a coat, size 38 or 40, for myself and some things for the children. They are a boy, 5, and a girl, 8. MRS. L. B."

With the main support of the family snatched from them by the cruel tentacles of this disease, the rearing and support of her children becomes a discouraging problem for the mother. She is calling to you for help. Won't you do what you can?

Children Need Coats.

"I am asking for warm coats for two little girls, 9 and 10, who are rather small for their age. Their father had an operation recently and, while he is recovering, he is as yet able to work only a few days a week. He is deeply in debt, but is anxious to support his family. G. S. R."

Won't you help these children by sending them the coats your young daughters have outgrown? There's lots of cold weather ahead of us, and unless these youngsters have sufficient clothing their chances of keeping well are slim.

Unable to Lie Down.

"I have a sick husband who can't lie down day or night. Do you know of some one who has an old morris chair or any kind of a chair with a high and reclining back he could have? "MRS. A. M."

This man's condition will not improve if he doesn't have the rest he needs. Have you the chair which will give him this comfort?

Sweater and Bathrobe Needed.

"I have a daughter, 21, in a tuberculosis sanitarium. She is badly in need of a woolen sweater and a bathrobe, size 36, and I am unable to buy them. Can you help me get them for her? Mrs. F. M."

It's hard enough to do without necessities when one is well. Just think how much worse it must be when disease has set in and these articles become even greater necessities. Help this mother, won't you, to help her daughter?

Family in Trouble.

"Last week a friend of mine came to me for assistance for her family. They come from a small mining town and the husband has been out of work for 9 months. My sister and I have been trying to house them and feed them, but our salaries are small and we have all we can do to keep ourselves. They are all in need of clothing, especially the children, for school. The girls are 12, 8 and 6 years of age, and the boy is 10. Their shoe sizes are 11, 11½, 7½, and 8. The mother wears size 36 and the father 42. Anything you may be able to do for them will be greatly appreciated. L. S."

This is just one of many letters we have about families where the father is out of work with no relief in sight. Perhaps the help you can give them will be the means of putting them on their feet again and relieving the family of the misery it is suffering.

Jealousy

We're all acquainted with jealousy, the monster that smashes love affairs, wrecks homes, causes business quarrels, and generally plays havoc with us mortals. We'd like to know your most notable experience with a jealous person or persons. If you have encountered a situation where jealousy led to a tragic or ridiculous climax, tell us about it. The Tribune will pay $1 for every story published. Address Jealous Editor, Chicago Tribune.

Rebuked.

When I was a young girl my father kept several riding and driving horses. For several years he had a young boy working in the stables, upon whom I usually called when I wanted my own horse harnessed or saddled.

Finally, the young fellow, then grown up, married, and soon after the wedding his wife sent me a note, asking me not to call her husband by his first name any more, "as it was not necessary." A. B. H.

He Wanted Notice.

Jimmy was 9, and jealous of his brother, Tommy, 11. One day Tommy came home with a black eye, the outcome of a fight to save a kitten from the destroying hands of a bad boy. Mother and father were worried—and proud, too, of their son's motive in fighting—and lavished attention and affection on him.

And little Jimmy felt he was forgotten and longed to be a hero himself. At last he could bear it no longer and hastened out to demand a black eye of the first street urchin he met. It was freely given, and a broken nose along with it. Poor little Jimmy got the attention he wanted—and more, for it was months before the nose, injured in a serious way, was healed. D. B.

Child Suffers.

A friend of mine had a little girl about 3 years old. She was fond of me and somehow got into the habit of calling me "mama," which I could see made her mother furious.

One day when I was visiting at her home the little one was even more persistent in calling me by that name than usual. The mother lost her temper and grabbing the poor little thing slapped her soundly. M. D.

Infant Care

Mothers, you can't start too early to establish a child's serene and tranquil disposition. Even an infant can have a happy, fretless state of uninterrupted health. What will help do this? A simple, purely vegetable product as old as you are: plain Castoria.

A few drops of Castoria will settle all uneasiness in a jiffy. Will dispel colic or ward off constipation; and just as surely check diarrhea.

In real sickness, call a physician. But many physicians urge only Castoria for those little childish disorders that need nothing more. You need never be afraid to give pure Castoria. It is safe and perfectly harmless, for it contains no paregoric, no opiates, no dope of any kind. At least, this is true of the genuine Fletcher's Castoria*—and that is the kind doctors tell you always to buy.

Fletcher's Castoria is fine for any child. All children love to take it. Delicious tasting, and as good as it tastes. Just look for the Fletcher signature on the package and you will know you have the genuine and pure Castoria.

*SPECIAL NOTE: With every bottle of genuine Fletcher's Castoria is wrapped a book on "Care and Feeding of Babies" worth its weight in gold to every mother or prospective mother.

IF YOU THINK THESE PRICES ARE IMPOSSIBLE, INVESTIGATE. SEEING IS BELIEVING.

These are not all the bargains we have at our factory warerooms. Ask the salesmen to show you others. They will be delighted to do so.

At least look these instruments over. You owe it to yourself to do so.

Salesmen, Solicitors, Etc.

A REAL CONNECTION FOR A REAL MAN.

This announcement is rather unusual. There is nothing secretive about our business and we have nothing to conceal. You perhaps have noticed the ads which we have inserted in this paper from time to time. There is a big reason behind the running of a number of ads. We have grown in the past two years from an organization of fifteen men to more than three hundred of the highest type salesmen in the country.

Our books and auditors' statements show over a 1000% increase in business in 1927 over 1926. We are constantly putting out new services which means that it is necessary for us to build an entirely new selling organization on each new unit. 1,000% increase means that one hundred times more people bought our services than bought them last year, which proves conclusively that whatever we have for sale is salable, which naturally means that our men are making some real money.

We are in the service business. We have an Industrial Service which is sold to many thousands of the leading corporations in the United States for the purpose of developing constructive thinking among their employes. The majority of our clients renew year after year.

We have a service which is sold to executives for increasing their sales.

We have a school service which is sold to schools for visualized education through posters for school children.

We have a management service which is sold to executives for the development of their junior officers and department heads.

All of us are living examples that poster advertising is one of the most fundamental selling mediums the world has ever known. There will never be an absorption reached in the development of constructive thinking in the mentality of humanity.

Statistics prove that 33⅓% of all time, money and materials in business enterprises are wasted. Something must be done to stop this loss. It is also a proven fact that the average selling organization is 30% effective. Something must be done to improve this effectiveness.

We visualize constructive thinking through posters and sell these posters. We have thousands of letters of endorsement proving conclusively that what we have to offer accomplishes the desired results. We are now operating internationally. We have at least ten executive positions open. The remuneration from these positions averages from $10,000 to $20,000 per year. We want men to qualify for these positions quickly. We have offices in many of the principal cities throughout the United States and Canada.

One of the best rated business analysts in the world recently entered the field as our competitor because he realizes the importance and future of our business. We are the exponents of the philosophy which we teach, viz.: Good will, cooperation and no broken promises.

We are not so much interested in salesmen as we are in potential executives—men who can learn our business and then qualify for promotion. In order for a salesman to qualify to join our organization, he should have a record of earning $6,000 per year or better, and should be between the ages of 25 and 45, and he should have the reputation of honesty, reliability and integrity. We have men averaging $75 per week and we have men averaging $500 per week. A good man can pick his own niche in this business and earn any amount of money he is capable of earning.

We have proven black and white bookkeeper's records to back up the above statements. Unless you feel that you are above the average and that you can qualify for an unusual position, do not waste your time or ours.

Our organization is the Parker-Hall-Loring Company, an Illinois Corporation which has been operating for eight years.

Appointment phone number is Superior 0835. You may phone the undersigned for an appointment and should you be able to qualify over the phone we will be glad to give you a personal interview. Or address S S 641, Tribune.

Salesmen, Solicitors, Etc.

A MENTALLY BIG MAN.

A manufacturer, rated AAA1, operating nationally, has an opening for a man of successful selling experience. Prefer one who has met and sold chief executives, although in the final analysis personality will be the determining factor.

We are not so much interested in a salesman as we are in a man with potential executive ability—one who can learn our business and then qualify for promotion. To such a man there is a brilliant future.

This is not stocks, bonds, real estate, insurance, or books—nor is it posters.

Do not investigate unless you feel confident that your services are worth $6,000 per year or more.

We can use a man immediately in each of the following territories: Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Kansas City, and one in Chicago.

We will grant you a personal interview if you are able to interest us over the telephone. Phone Mr. C. C. Below on Monday for appointment, Randolph 4743, or if you prefer, address P G 112, Tribune.

A REAL OPPORTUNITY

To represent one of the country's largest manufacturers and receive your respective share of a new business already running into the millions is yours if you meet the requirements below.

You must be between the ages of 28 and 50, own a car, and have experience selling high priced items such as soda fountains, cash registers, etc., to the retail trade.

You must have enough confidence in your ability to dictate your compensation by the volume of business you produce.

If you are such a man we can offer you virgin territory on a new specialty for which there is demand. It is sold on easy deferred payments. Earns a handsome profit and creates a substantial increase in business.

We have men in the field who have earned as much as $1,500 in one month and many who are earning from $4,000 to $10,000 per year.

We co-operate with national advertising and train you to make your immediate success possible. We positively offer the greatest money making opportunity offered specialty salesmen in years.

If you are wide awake enough to recognize a real opportunity, call WALTER FOSTER, Hotel Morrison, Monday, for appointment.

A1 SALESMEN.
SOMETHING UNUSUAL.

I am interested in securing about 20 young men of good character who can furnish good references; should be between ages of 25 and 35 and preferably married. If you have the above qualifications I shall train you for 2 full days in our salesroom, teaching you our methods of selling our products. If you need immediate money I can advance you a reasonable amount. After this training, providing you accept, you will then be placed in the field with experienced men and with an assured income. At the present time our company maintains 38 offices in the country, doing the same thing for our organization. Program for the year is to establish offices all over the country. We are at the present time successfully operating throughout 45 countries of the world, making us the largest specialty company of its kind in the world today. We shall be able to place the successful applicants in real executive positions in as short a time as possible. The above is an honest advertisement for good, reputable men, and I am prepared to back it up. Any man you may be employed at a satisfactory salary, I have the courage to have you give it up for me. Real selling with a future. South Side and West Side men preferred. Ask for MR. FOX, 2107 Transportation Bldg., 606 S. Dearborn, 9-12 a. m.

A RARE OPPORTUNITY FOR A SALESMAN.

We want four men to start training at once for executive sales positions created by our rapidly expanding organization. This company has nearly 600 factory branches throughout the world and is now introducing an investment new in its line which $49,000,000 worth was sold in 1926. Sales for 1927 will nearly double.

Compensation in keeping with position that is now forming in the best market in the world and which is fianced and controlled by the company which has made us success in Europe. Asia, Australia, Africa, and South America.

Free schooling for selected men and high salaried positions after you qualify. Applicants considered by personal interview only, any day before 12 NOON. Call early, before desired number are selected. See personnel manager, Rm. 384 Mcjunkin Bldg., 4554 Broadway, corner Wilson.

A SUGGESTION.

Approximately half the real estate selling talent of Chicago is wandering around seeking employment. Why not other half is chasing the myth of a "TRADE"?

Why not face facts—recognize that the establishment of clean selling plus untiring effort have always been the requirements and the only factors—that have brought real success. If you want to be intelligently guided in your efforts and you want to establish a connection of which you will be proud—if you want to make a big money producer, and last but not least, if you want to WORK—then come in and see me.

MISSISSIPPI COAST LOTS

Desirable Mississippi coast lots can be purchased by men and women of moderate means. We mean a lot that is worth buying; a real home site, located near the banks of the beautiful Bayou Portage, in our tract of 160 acres that fronts on this winding stream that furnishes the best of fishing, bathing, boating and water sports. Not over seven or eight minutes from the main station of the L. & N. R. R. at Pass Christian, and only twenty minutes from the main stations of the Illinois Central railroad and G. M. & N. railroad in Gulfport; about twelve minutes from the main railroad station in Long Beach, cities on the Mississippi coast; rural consolidated high school at the entrance of our land. Churches within a short walking distance; post office, garage and stores within a few blocks. Hard paved Warrenite Bithulitic highways from our land to Pass Christian, Long Beach, and Gulfport over entire route. Abundance of pure artesian water flowing from our own well; telephone service. These lots are 50 by 135 feet. These lots are offered for $600. Terms: $50 cash, balance payable $10 per month without interest. No taxes first year. Purchaser of each lot has an undivided interest in our community water front landing with all privileges and the use of Bayou Portage, a place to anchor and keep your boat; where the whole family can fish; plenty of deep water in a real stream that rises and falls with the tide.

Title to this land has been approved by the best law firms on the Mississippi coast. We own this land free from any incumbrance, and have sold more than Forty Thousand Dollars worth of land from this tract.

REAL ESTATE LOANS.

SECOND MORTGAGE LOANS

Hats off to Henry Ford for making it possible for the average American citizen to buy transportation cheaply, to get his real money's worth for an automobile dollar and to have some of the comforts and luxuries of modern civilization.

Hats off to The Chicago Morris Plan Bank for making it possible for the average Chicagoan to get more out of his home buying dollar, that the average Chicagoan may live like folks in his own castle wherever it may be.

The Morris Plan Bank, though small in comparison with the Ford industry, has always taken the position that a plan must not be built up to a price but service must be rendered and should be priced fairly and reasonably.

Just as the Morris Plan Bank has made over 150,000 loans for $440,000,000, at a price which was unheard of when the bank was launched, so the same group responsible for the Morris Plan Bank developed a second mortgage plan. In this project we have the profound and practical financial support of Mr. Julius Rosenwald. Could it be expected then that the second mortgage loan offered by this bank as agent could be anything but wisely designed, correctly operated, and reasonably priced?

That is the essence of the terms offered through our real estate loan department. Loans made from 1 to 3 years, to favor the small dwelling houses and do not go beyond the financing of a 3 flat building. Monthly payments within the range of the home owner's earning ability. Price 6% accruing interest and commission of 3% for 1 year, 6½% for 2 years, and 9% for 3 years.

As you compare rates and terms do you know of any organization which is offering such facilities at a lower rate and upon more reasonable terms?

Each car is sold under Studebaker's National Used Car Pledge, which allows the purchaser 5 days' driving trial.

STUDEBAKER PRESIDENT. Latest model 7 pass. Big Six sedan that was driven for a few months by a South Shore clubman. He wanted a 5 pass. model so we obtained this practically new car at a very favorable price. This is your gain, so today you get this fine Studebaker at a substantial reduction. The motor, finish, upholstery, etc., are all in the same new condition as on the day first purchased. Equipment includes 4 wheel brakes, snubbers, bumpers, spare tire, etc. You can make big money saving by acting immediately. Carries 30 day guarantee.

OVERLAND SEDAN. You'll find this six is a fine performing, good looking car, that will satisfy the most exacting buyer. Just refinished and the extras are step plates, trunk, bumpers, 5 dandy balloon tires, etc. Real value for $495.

OLDSMOBILE COUPE. 1927 model, that will give new car satisfaction; equipped with 4 wheel brakes, snubbers, spare tire, bumpers, etc. Like new in every respect, but price. Today $595.

REO SEDAN. Here is a car famous for its long life. Check over every detail and you'll agree it's in wonderful condition. The equipment includes, spotlight, heater, spare tire, snubbers, etc. The body was just refinished. Special for $595.

HUDSON COACH. This is one of the best enclosed car bargains in our stock. Mechanically A1, and the finish and upholstery are attractive. Equipped with shutter front, trunk, spare tire, shock absorbers, etc. A real buy for $545.

JORDAN TOURING. A big, powerful car will give you economical transportation during the winter. Has driving light, spare tire, snubbers, etc. Runs good. A snap for $295.

WILLYS-KNIGHT SEDAN. This is a smooth running 7 pass. car and the appearance is 100%. Extras are snubbers, bumpers, heater, spare tire, etc. Today $395.

HUPMOBILE SEDAN. This six was used only for a few months last summer, but this time was given careful treatment. Result is it looks and runs better than many new cars selling for over $1,000. Equipped with 4 wheel brakes, snubbers, slip covers, spare tire, bumpers, etc. Today $845.

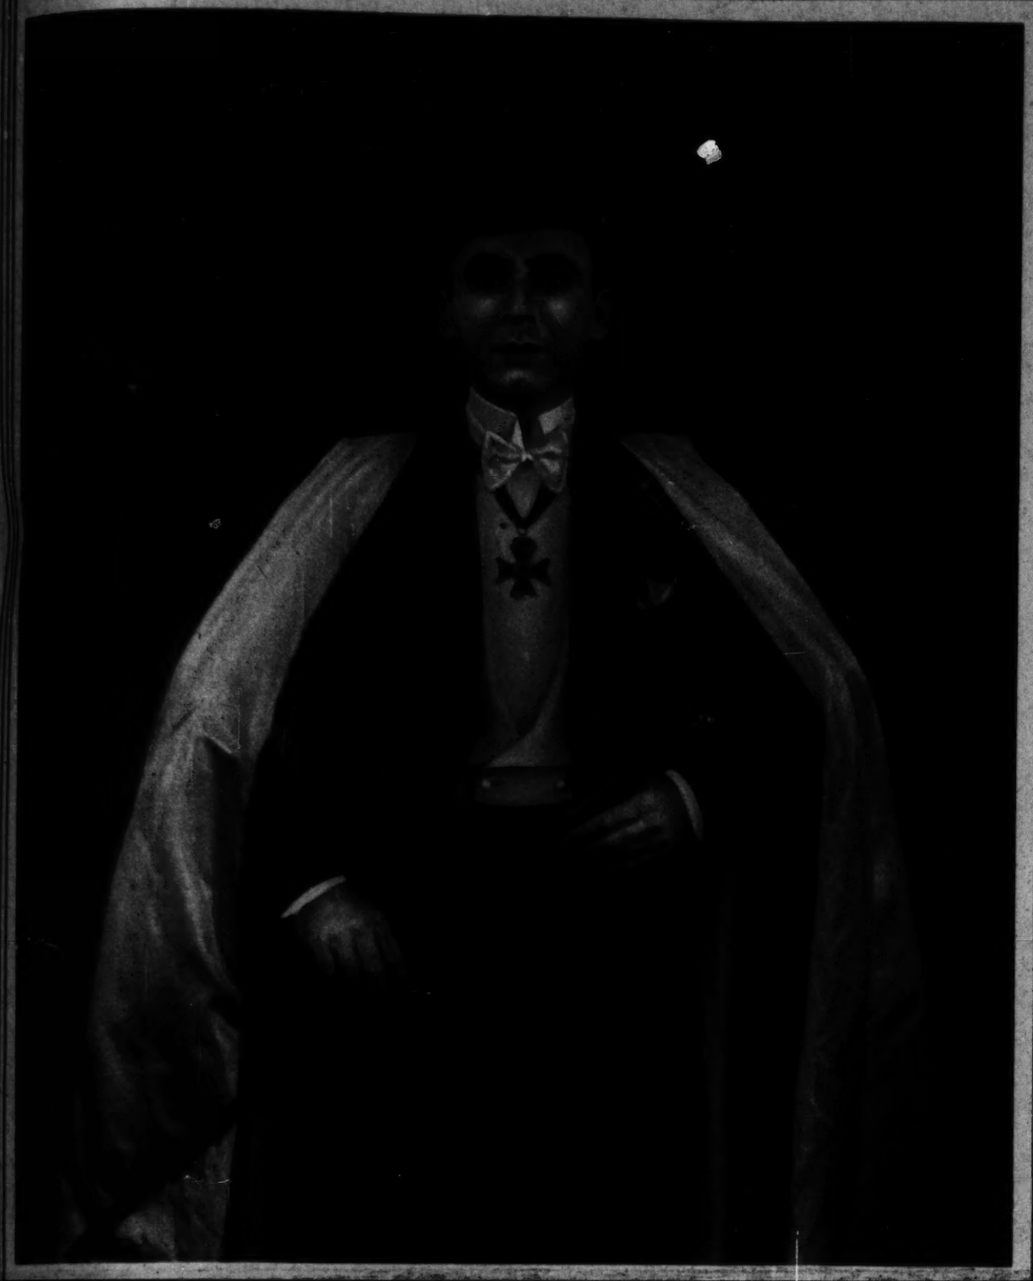
THE WORLD'S GREATEST NEWSPAPER

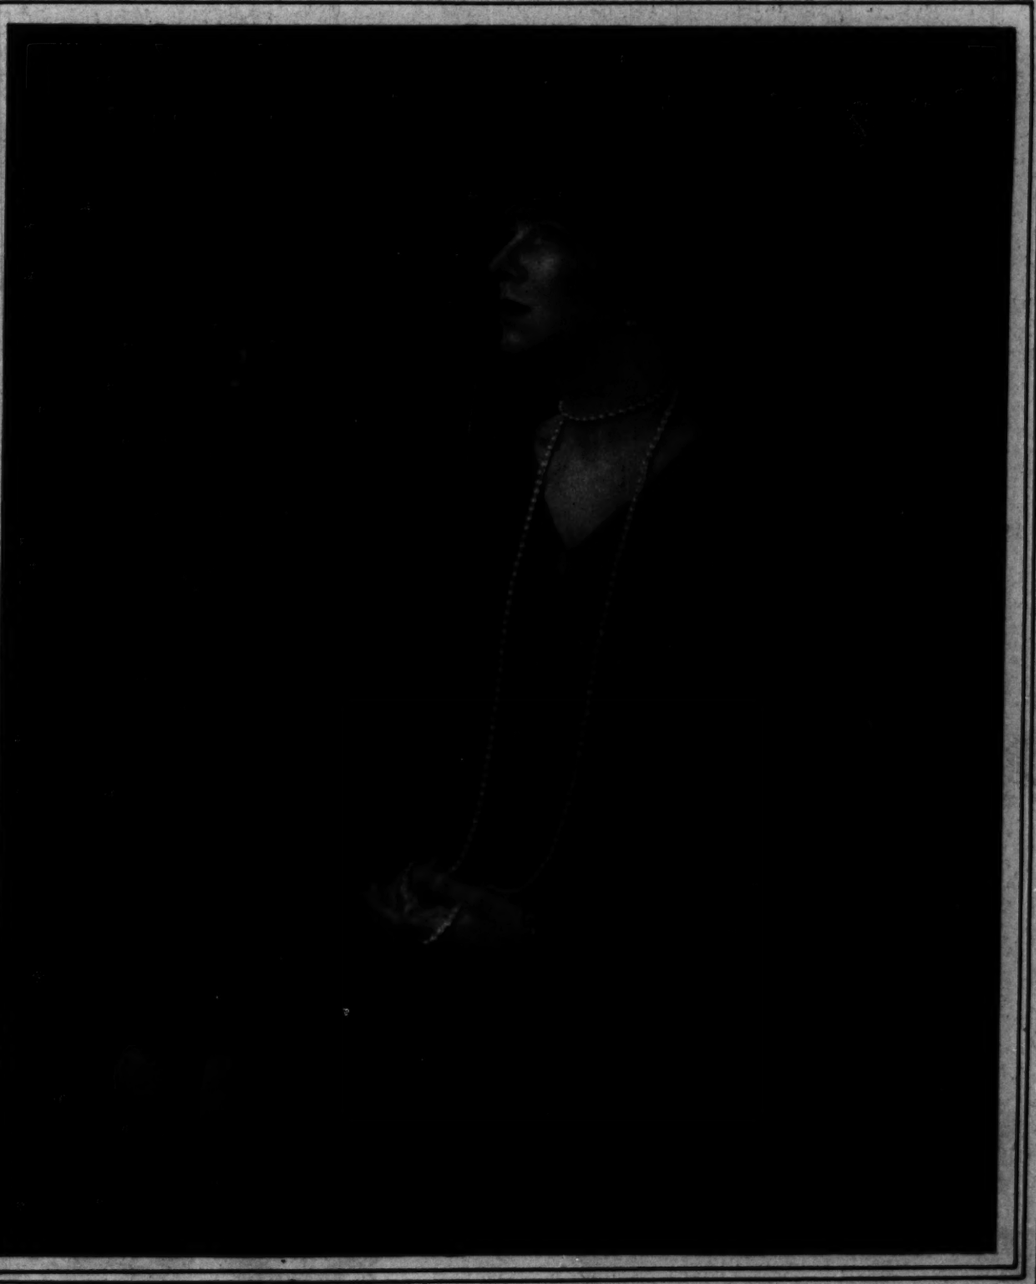
December 4, 1927



ROBERT EMMETT KEANE as the magician in "The Spider," which Mr. Donaghey described as the button-button piece different from any and from all the other button-button pieces.

MISS CLAIRE WHITNEY was the girl in the case in "The Spider," the startling mystery play which kept Mr. Keane in Chicago for such a nice long stay.

OWEN DAVIS JR. was the likable country lad who was captivated by and then captivated the circus siren in the fine play, "The Barker," which starred Richard Bennett.



MISS FRANCES WILLIAMS was the perfect cabaret girl type in that version of George White's "Scandals" which quit Chicago not long ago after a long and pleasant visit here.

Camel—the cigarette that knows how to "be itself"

There is no "pose" about Camel. It's just a good honest cigarette—the best ever—and it doesn't try to be anything else.

Camel
CIGARETTES

If all cigarettes were as good as Camel you wouldn't hear anything about special treatments to make cigarettes good for the throat. Nothing takes the place of choice tobaccos.

Memories of the Great War

BRITAIN REMEMBERS the hour of peace. The Prince of Wales salutes the heroic dead after placing a wreath on the cenotaph during Armistice day ceremonies.
(Photograph copyright by Pacific and Atlantic.)

THE SILENCE—An awesome hush settles upon a vast throng in front of the Royal Exchange during London's two-minute pause at 11 o'clock. In strange contrast was the delirium that followed—with the possible exception of Armistice day, 1918, perhaps the maddest hysteria the world has ever known. (Photograph copyright by Pacific and Atlantic.)

FOCH visits the scene of the armistice. The generalissimo of the allied forces signs the visitors' book in the railway coach where he signed the armistice nine years ago. The scene is Rethondes, and the occasion, the dedication of a permanent shelter for the historic car.
(Photograph from Pacific and Atlantic.)

ERIN MOURNS—Dublin pours out numberless throngs for the Armistice day observance at Ireland's cenotaph, a wooden cross built of timbers from a war-ravaged farm in France. In the background, the Wellington monument.
(Photograph copyright by Pacific and Atlantic.)

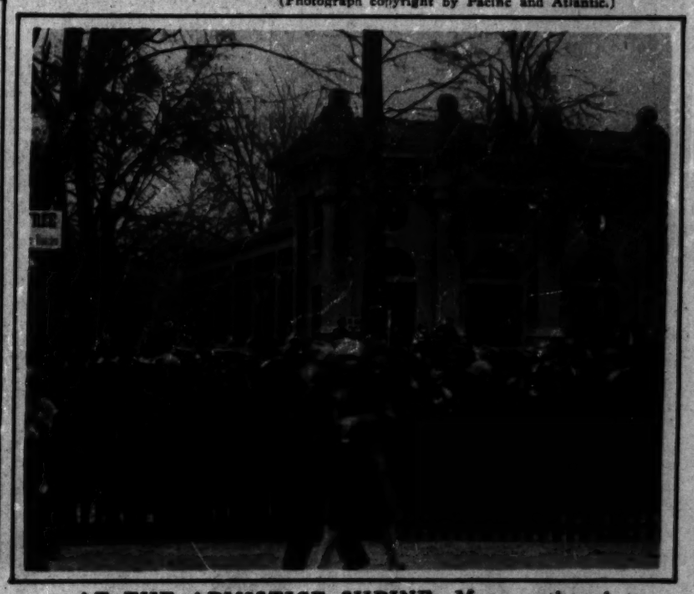
(Photograph from Pacific and Atlantic.)

BRITAIN'S MOST DECORATED SOLDIER—The Prince of Wales shakes hands with A. Greenwood, wearer of more medals than any other man in the imperial armies. (Photograph from Underwood & Underwood.)



AT THE ARMISTICE SHRINE—Many gathered to see the acceptance of the concrete shelter which houses the railway coach at Rethondes. It is the gift of an American to France. (Photograph from Pacific and Atlantic.)

ROB ROY
$5.50
For Men and Women

A new type driving glove

Especially made not to cramp your fingers or shut off circulation as you grip the wheel

How often have your fingers ached with cold? In spite of the heaviest gloves.

This may not be due to faulty blood circulation. It's because the gloves themselves bind your fingers as you grip the wheel. A lightweight glove is actually warmer—if it's made right.

The Rob Roy shown on this page is made from imported skins—trim and smart enough for street wear, yet warm in any weather. Here is the difference:

First, the finger seams are sewn a a special way. [Note the illustration]. This prevents cramping as you grip the wheel. Then the fingers themselves are fractionally larger. To give you free circulation.

The Rob Roy has a seamless lining of wool—[knitted as a separate glove]. In the exclusive new Hansen "Nava-Hue" pattern of harmonious colors. More real warmth than most fur—with half the bulk. The warmth of this light glove will amaze you. Ask for it by name.

The New ARISTOCRAT

The same original "free circulation" driving glove—with enhanced style and finish. Lined with imported lambs wool. The warmest glove you ever wore. And the "Aristocrat of Gifts" to jot down on that Christmas list

IN THE LAND WHERE DREAMS COME TRUE—SOMETIMES, Harold Lloyd and his Great Dane, Prince, are snapped "at ease" at the barbecue on the noted comedian's Hollywood estate.

SANS HIS HORN-RIMMED SPECTACLES, Harold Lloyd surveys his sunken gardens, in the foreground, turning his back, for the time being, on the old mill and one of the greens on his exclusive golf course.

A DOZEN WORLD FAMOUS GOLFERS, contenders in a national tournament, participate in the formal opening of the nine-hole course adjoining the Beverly Hills home of the man of a million mimics. Joe Kirkwood holes the ball, Harold Lloyd holds the flag, and Leo Diegel, Douglas Fairbanks, and George von Elm hold their breaths.

A RARE SIGHT, if we are to believe Hollywood's detractors, is that of a movie star taking a drink—of water. This is it. Harold's magnificent grounds include his own private well. And he did it all with his specs, his pantomime, and his uncanny ability to extract laughs from a sad old world.

AMERICA'S SWEETHEART, she once was acclaimed, and, after all these years, Mary Pickford still retains a marvelous hold on the theater-going public. The little girl who has never grown up dons a military uniform and, with "other" army officers, attends a football game on the west coast.

BUDDY "L"

Chest of Tools and Toys for Boys

Scores of surprises await you in the toy department of Chicago's leading stores. See the Buddy "L" Chest of Tools. Captain Kidd's treasure chest held no more wonders than this big, sturdy, steel bound, black and red chest that seals with a genuine Corbin lock and that holds real tools—not toys. Fine carpenter tools made by such famous firms as Disston, Stanley, Vaughan & Bushnell, Greenlee Bros., Millers Falls and others—quality tools big enough even for Dad to borrow and tinker with around the house.

Just think of all the dandy things you can build with wonderful tools like these—bird houses for your feathered friends, a dog kennel for "Sandy," a shack for the neighborhood club, airplanes, playthings, even Captain Kidd's pirate boat—almost anything and everything you would want to make.

And, O, boy, such fun! There's pencils, rules, try-squares and compass to lay out the original plans; then a Disston and a coping saw to do the cutting; a plane and chisels for the finishing work before you put it all together with the finest balanced claw hammer you ever held in your hand.

You have always wanted a chest of real tools—not playthings. Look at this picture. See the big saw and the man-size hammer. See the vise, plane, brace, drill, spoke-shave—all big, best quality tools that you never will wear out.

And say, Sonny, when you get your Buddy "L" your work shop will be the meeting place for all the boys in your crowd. You can even form a club and really build things to sell—toys for other boys, doll furniture for little girls, telephone stands, book racks—dozens and dozens of useful things that would be fun to make and make money for you at the same time. You just can't imagine what a wonderful chest of tools this is until you really see it.

The Right of Way to Land of Play with the big Buddy "L" Outdoor Railroad and dump trucks, coaches, fire apparatus, trains, concrete mixers, sand screeners, steam shovels—and many other fascinating Buddy "L" Playthings. Toys that not only amuse you but develop your imagination, create your confidence and build your character.

Working models of big, powerful, man-size construction machines and trucks that really work. Over 2 feet long, exact in design, accurate in detail. Made from heavy steel, braced, trussed and spot-welded. You cannot break these sturdy playthings, they will not come apart. And they give you, every day for years and years, new things to plan, to build and to do. Tell Mother and Dad that they pay no extra price for the extra years of fun built into every one. With machines like these you can excavate, build foundations, mix concrete and erect the buildings, lay the streets and sidewalks of a regular "make-believe" city. These are playthings you will always keep and always cherish. And you can trust Buddy "L" to produce new toys each year. The Buddy "L" line grows up with you.

Ask for Buddy "L" toys this Christmas. Get your friends to do the same. Form a Buddy "L" Club and enjoy all the wonderful times that Buddy "L" Toys are sure to give.

TO THE BOY KING from Yankee youngsters. The school children of Sandusky, Ohio, send a box of American paints, brushes, and pencils, along with a tiny artist's smock, to Michael, 6-year-old ruler of Roumania. EVERY OTHER HOUSEWIFE

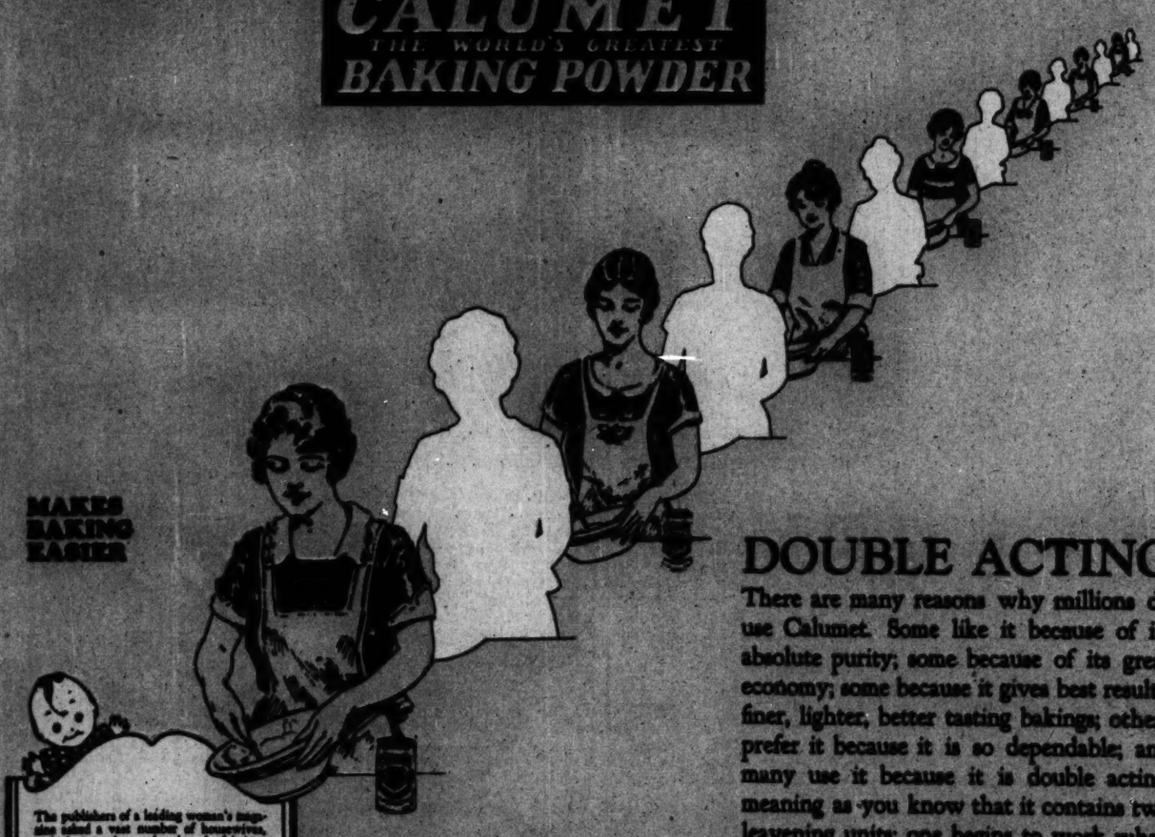
If two or three women were to say that they preferred Calumet to other brands of baking powder, you possibly would not be deeply impressed. You might think that their choice was swayed by little personal likes and dislikes, or that they were not well posted on the subject of leaveners. But, if out of millions of housewives, every other one were to tell you that she employed Calumet you would immediately decide that it must possess exceptional merit, because it would be utterly impossible for so many to be mistaken in their judgment.

CALUMET
THE WORLD'S GREATEST
BAKING POWDER



The publishers of a leading women's magazine asked a vast number of housewives, picked at random, what brand of baking powder they used. The canvass showed that

56% USE
CALUMET
THE WORLD'S GREATEST BAKING POWDER
44% USE
Other Brands

Think of that. More Calumet is used than of all the other brands combined. There must be a good reason why this is so. There is—Calumet is the world's biggest selling baking powder because it deserves to be.

LESS THAN 1¢ PER BAKING

DOUBLE ACTING

There are many reasons why millions do use Calumet. Some like it because of its absolute purity; some because of its great economy; some because it gives best results, finer, lighter, better tasting bakings; others prefer it because it is so dependable; and many use it because it is double acting, meaning as you know that it contains two leavening units; one begins to work when the dough is mixed; the other waits for the heat of the oven, then both units work together.

So, regardless of what your baking needs or desires may be, you will find that Calumet meets every one of them. You may specialize in fine pastries, or bake for exhibition purposes; you may want to give your family more healthful and nourishing foods; or perhaps reduce living costs; or get rid of baking worries — you will have your wish gratified through the use of Calumet. Try it and you will surely say "That is my idea of an ideal baking powder."

Do You Look as Tired as You Feel?

How tiring party-bridge can be. After an afternoon or evening of playing, you feel tired—look weary—show facial fatigue. This fatigue of the face that comes from laughing and living is the direct cause of lines and wrinkles.

This Cleansing Treatment will relieve facial fatigue

BY MADAME JEANNETTE DE CORDET

PERHAPS there's but a moment left between an afternoon of bridge and a dinner date . . . the bridge has left you tired, and for dinner you must be fresh.

A quick and gentle massage with Pompeian Night Cream—nothing will rest your tired face more—nothing will give back its fresh glow quicker.

A generous spread of the Cream on your face—then let your hands slip over your face according to the movements prescribed. Gently around the eyes, over your brow, and down to the temples—there let them rest for a moment. Stroke from your mouth and nose out over your cheeks—stroke up from your chin.

Leave a coating of cream on your face while you bathe. Just before you dress, wipe it away. Then how clean and gloriously youthful your skin feels—how rested and refreshed.

Pompeian Night Cream has a dual purpose. It is at once cleansing and nourishing. Because it is a rather heavy cream it needs to be gently worked into the pores. Because it is a nourishing cream it needs to be left on the face . . . a half hour, an hour, all night if you can. Pompeian Night Cream cleans the skin and relieves Facial Fatigue.

This soothing away of all traces of weariness from your face each time you are tired—after a shopping expedition, a strenuous afternoon of sports, or a night of dancing—this gentle cleansing of your skin with Pompeian Night Cream means a fresh and youthful face in the years to come—no fagged lines to show that you have led a busy life, but a complexion that shows intelligent care.

DAY CREAM
a light foundation for powder

Pompeian Day Cream prepares your skin for a busy day. It is light and disappears instantly—yet it gives a smooth, cool, delicate finish. A little cream spread on your face the first thing in the morning makes powder dust on evenly and stay on. Then through the day you are relieved from embarrassing face shine—from frequent powdering. Pompeian Day Cream is also slightly astringent and enlivening to the skin.

Don't miss ACHMED ABDULLAH'S great story of love, intrigue and high adventure in today's Rotogravure Magazine!

Three young men broke in Paris—and an Irish girl who needs help desperately to maintain her throne in a far away Asian kingdom! The men have no money, but they have their reckless talents to offer—and the great campaign to win back Kevistan starts today! The story is called and today's installment is only the second. You can start the story easily today and enjoy every bit of it from now until the end. Don't fail to read today's installment—in the Rotogravure Magazine Section!

Unlucky Folks

By W. E. Hill

[Copyright: 1927: By The Chicago Tribune.]

Mrs. Maude Beebe Dribling (in the spotted scarf) does have the worst luck in the rotogravure sections and the society papers. They are always omitting her name from the group photos snapped at Piping Rock, or the Lido, or Santa Barbara. At least twice a month Mrs. Beebe Dribling has to write the head of some editorial department. "In last Sunday's paper," Mrs. Dribling will complain, "my name was nefariously omitted from the group taken on the beach at St. Joe, and the name G. B. George substituted. Will you see that this is corrected in next Sunday's issue? Otherwise," etc., etc. O, it's a hard life, girls and boys!

Meet Alonzo P. Miggs, who is consistently unlucky in business. If Mr. Miggs buys Oregon Catnip at seven and a half it will be down to minus ten by tomorrow. If he sells, it will jump twenty points ten minutes later.

Gertrude, though warm-hearted, is unlucky at love, it would seem. Gert has but to look at a swain and some other girl up and marries him. Other girl friends say she is too affectionate. "Be cold," they tell her. Gert has never walked home from a joy ride, although she has often been asked to. "Kid, if you don't let me alone when I'm driving we'll run off the road," said the last man at the wheel. "You gotta calm down or get out and walk home!"

Bebe is all dressed up for the Ritz, but no such luck. Her new boy friend will know of a quaint little out-of-the-way place called "Ye Olde Time Woodchucke Hole," with the waitresses all dressed up like woodchucks and a dollar dinner with choice of soup or shrimp surprise. In a cellar, probably. Poor Bebe.

Poor Francie! Don't you feel sorry for her? She did have the worst luck anybody ever heard of. Francie so wanted to make a good appearance before the other girls and boys and wear pretty clothes like the rest, as any normal girl would. And when she started in keeping company with Bennie Bouncemitz it seemed as though she couldn't stand having Bennie see her in the same dress she'd worn once before at the steamfitters' picnic, and that she just would die of shame if she had to wear her last year's slave bracelet to another roadhouse. So, with this in mind, she poisoned her father, mother, brother, baby sister, and burnt up one second cousin and an uncle by marriage in the furnace. Would you believe it, the insurance premiums on every one of them had lapsed some time back, and all that fuss for nothing! Francie could have screamed for mortification. Her lawyer is going to base his plea on Francie's extreme youth.

Howell is one of those unfortunate boys who does almost permanent jury duty. Some one told Howell that if he didn't vote last year they wouldn't get him; so he didn't, and right away he was called. And this year a friend said if he did vote, why he probably wouldn't be called. So he voted, and right off the bat he was summoned for jury duty. Doesn't seem to work either way! His wife thinks that because he reasons so well the judges want him on all their juries.

Mr. Glickmore, the commuter, is having a streak of bad luck. Seems as though there were a jinx on the 8:10 into town. This is the third morning he's shared a seat in the smoker with a talkative neighbor. The neighbor has been telling at great length all about his wife's mother's impacted wisdom tooth. How it had to be chiseled out. All about how it bled. And how next morning it bled some more.

Luck is agin Harold, the sophomore English stude. Three out of four exam questions are on just what Harold forgot to study up. It's going to be terrible if Harold fails to pass. Because then his family won't let him take Prof. Baker's course at Yale next year.

"Morrie, what's he done, do you suppose? Why do you suppose she's trying to choke him?" Morris and Adelaide are very unlucky in their movie going. Early or late, they invariably arrive in the middle of the feature picture. Then they have to wait for the first half of the next showing to find out what it's all about.

The salon of Richard Hudnut, 20 Rue de la Paix, in the heart of fashionable Paris. It was here that Parfum le Début was first introduced to an appreciative clientèle . . . Every ounce of Parfum le Début offered in America is made, sealed and packaged in the Paris laboratoire of Richard Hudnut.

The interior of the salon of Richard Hudnut. Exquisitely appointed with a decor in silver, crystal and soft pastels, creating an almost fairy-like loveliness.

One senses at once that here, in the decorations of the salon of Richard Hudnut, is a veritable triumph of the spirit of modern art. No wonder Paris was almost as captivated with the glimpse of the salon as with the introduction to Parfum le Début.

Today ROMANCE Tomorrow ——

Today, Romance may beckon. Tomorrow, adventure. The afternoon may bring a blithe mood of gaiety and evening find you, indeed, la belle femme sophisticate.

For each one of these four loveliest of feminine moods, le Début offers an exquisite and captivating odeur — a fragrance, subtly distilled, that has caught enchantingly the very spirit of each mood.

Here is a parfum de Paris, new, provocative, distinctive — sealed in the most exquisite and colorful little chalices that ever graced your dressing table. . . So, sometime, in your favorite shop, lift the stoppers from these four piquant petits flacons and explore the mystery and delight which each fragrance holds for you.

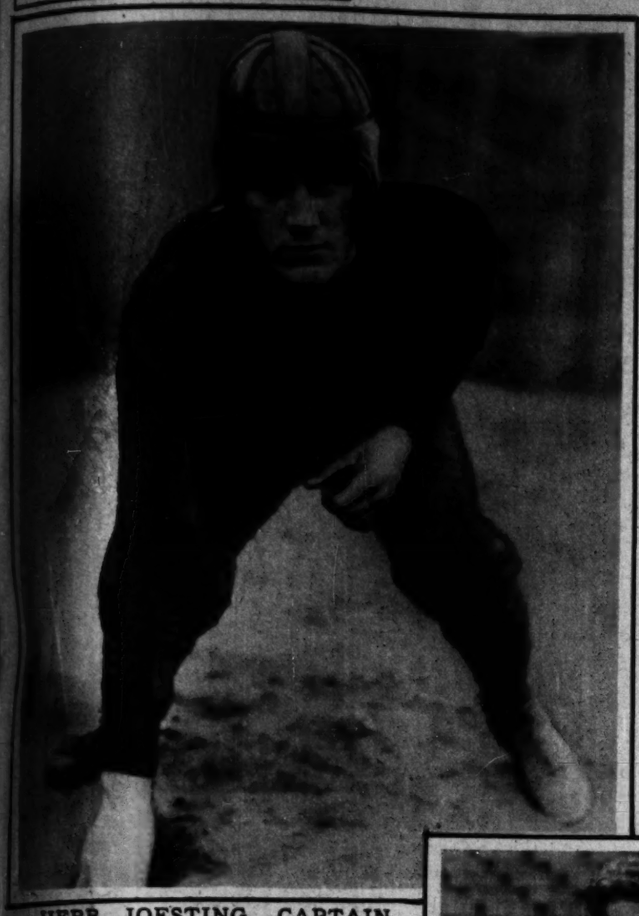
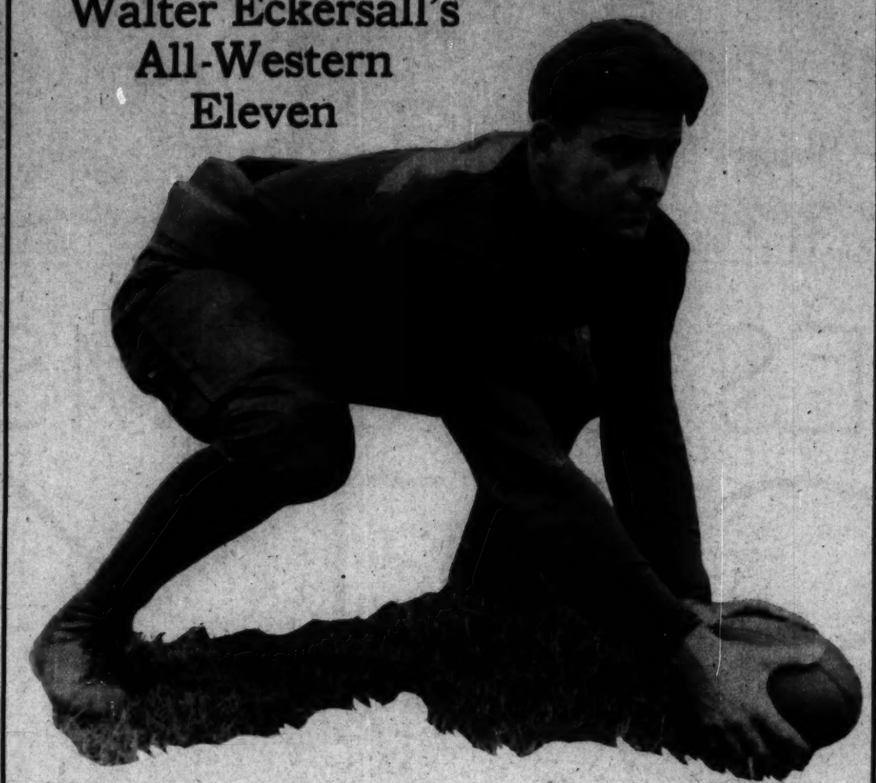
Walter Eckersall's All-Western Eleven

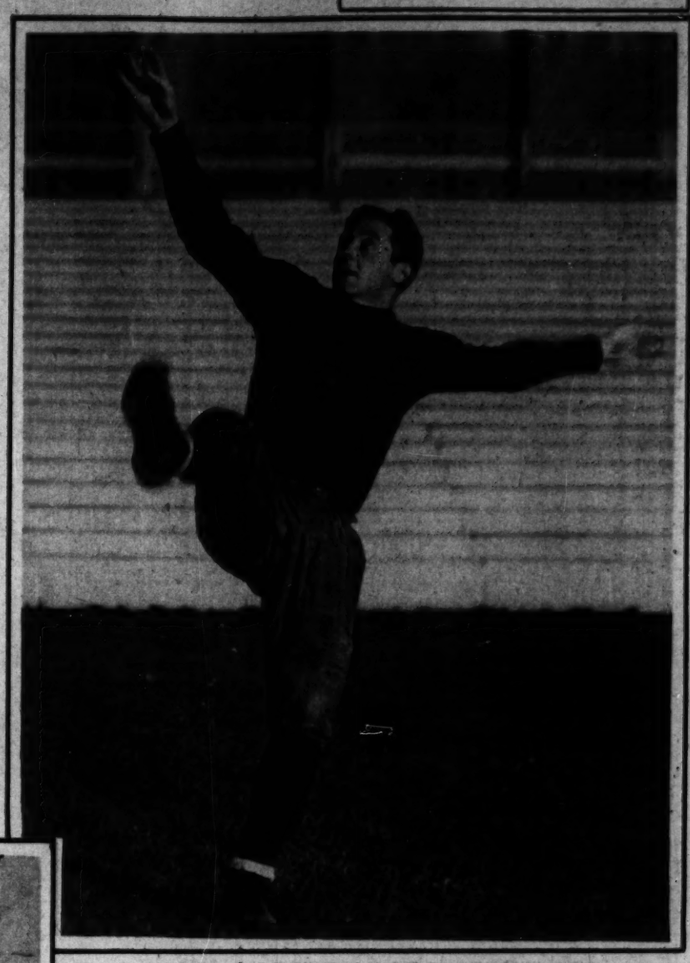


HERB JOESTING, CAPTAIN AT MINNESOTA in its most successful season since 1919, is awarded the full back position. He is the best full back in the country, and a natural leader.



KEN ROUSE OF CHICAGO has been selected for center. The Maroon captain played brilliantly all season, but was pressed all the way by Capt. Reitsch of Illinois.

These are the greatest football men of the west, according to Walter Eckersall, football critic of The Tribune and the world's foremost authority on the game. Mr. Eckersall discusses his selections at length in the sporting section of today's Tribune. Next week, Eckersall's All-American!

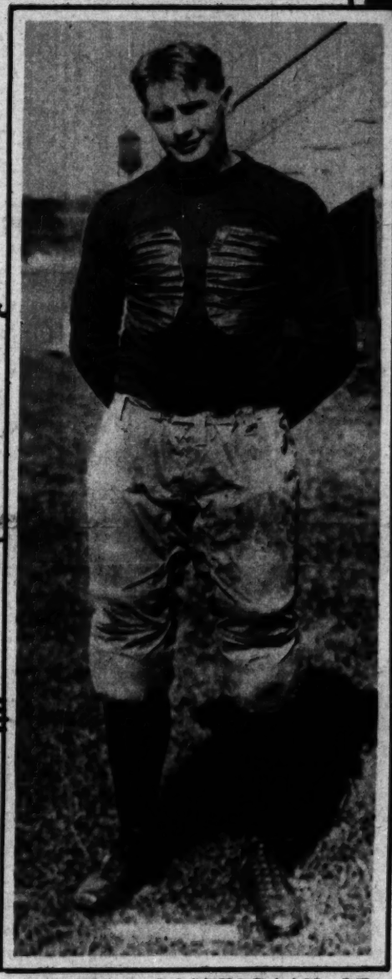


LOUIS GILBERT OF MICHIGAN is honored with the position of left half back. This player's punting, throwing and catching of forward passes played a big part in the Maize and Blue offensive.

FLECK OF KANSAS AGGIES has been honored with the position of right end. He played consistently all season and few gains were made off his side of the Aggies' line.

PRESNELL OF NEBRASKA has been given the position of right half back. This player was one of the outstanding performers in the Missouri Valley conference, and one of the leading backs of the country.

BAER OF MICHIGAN is the choice for right guard. He was the most dependable warrior in the Wolverine forward wall, and played a spectacular game against Minnesota.



BENNIE OOSTERBAAN OF MICHIGAN, one of the greatest ends in the country, has been placed at left end. Bennie was a great factor in all of Michigan's games, and was one of the best forward pass receivers of the year.

CAPT. JOHN SMITH OF NOTRE DAME is placed at left guard. Although smaller of stature than the average lineman, Smith more than made up for what he lacked in weight by his aggressiveness.

"SHORTY" ALMQUIST OF MINNESOTA gets the quarter back post. This warrior was just as valuable to the Gopher eleven as was Capt. Joesting.

RASKOWSKI OF OHIO STATE, who played aggressively all season, is given the left tackle berth. The Buckeye lineman made a decided impression on those who saw him in action.

LUCAS OF MISSOURI is put at right tackle. He was looked upon as one of the best forwards in the Missouri Valley conference.

FOOTBALL'S BIGGEST CROWD sees history's greatest intersectional—Christy Flanagan, the thunderbolt of Notre Dame, tears off tackle for a gain in the fourth quarter of the epic clash with Southern California before the 117,000 spectators at Soldiers' field, Chicago. Pressed hard for individual honors by Captain Morley Drury of the Trojans, Flanagan yet was the star of the day in the 7 to 6 triumph of the Fighting Irish.
(Tribune photograph.)

AMONG THOSE PRESENT at the Notre Dame-Southern California game sat Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig, crowned by cap and hat, respectively, home run wizards of the baseball world. And we wonder what a home run swatter thinks about when he sees a Flanagan or a Drury ripping up the turf in a gridiron specialty. (Tribune photograph.)

AS 314 WENT TO DEATH ON THE PRINCESS MAFALDA—Rescue crews take off survivors from the ill-fated Italian liner which sank off Bahia, Brazil, following a boiler explosion. At the moment of the tragedy, which was made more frightful by stampede in the tropical darkness, 1,259 souls were aboard. Note the lifeboats and the figures visible within them. YOU COULDN'T KEEP OUT OF THE MOVIES if you looked like him; he's the star of movie stars, a composite of Charlie Chaplin's forehead and hair, Ronald Colman's eyes, Buster Keaton's nose, John Barrymore's lips, and Douglas Fairbanks' chin. He's worth $10,825,000, makes $5,150,000 a year, is insured for $6,742,500. If you're his twin, help yourself to fame and fortune.

A DAM DRIES UP A RIVER—The bed of the Tippecanoe river, exposed a mile below the Oakdale hydro-electric dam, Indiana, by the storing up of the water.

TWENTY MINUTES LATER—Following the opening of the gates at the Oakdale dam, four feet of water flow over the exact spot pictured at the left. Residents of the region, charging spoliation of the river, endangering of life, interference with fishing, and damage to property rights, demand that the power company which operates the dam provide a natural flow beneath it.

A new Xmas Gift!

brings perfect toast 365 mornings of the year

The Toastmaster has been tested and approved by Good Housekeeping Institute, and has been awarded this seal of approval
Tested and Approved 1910 Good Housekeeping Institute Owned by GOOD HOUSEKEEPING MAGAZINE

You can leave the room . . . read the paper . . . forget the Toastmaster entirely . . .

it always makes perfect golden-brown slices of toast

This ingenious Toastmaster is utterly different from any toaster you have ever used. For it takes a piece of bread, quickly transforms it into the most delicious slice of toast you've ever eaten—then automatically delivers it, and turns off the current. Does this whether you watch or not. And the toast can't burn.

All you have to do is: 1. Drop a slice of bread into the oven slot. 2. Press down the two levers. This lowers the bread into the oven, automatically turns on the current, and regulates the length of time the bread is to be toasted. 3. Pop! Up comes the toast when it's done to your individual liking, and the current is automatically turned off.

1 Drop a slice of bread into the oven slot

2 Press down the two levers. This lowers bread into oven and automatically turns on current

3 Pop! Up comes the toast when it's done and the current is automatically turned off

Both sides are toasted at the same time in an enclosed oven. Thus all the goodness and flavor of the bread are sealed in—and the toast is always piping hot when served. It takes only half the time to make toast this way as it does when each side is toasted singly.

Give Toastmasters for Christmas

Finished in flashing nickel, the Toastmaster makes an attractive piece for the server or dining table. Give at least one Toastmaster for Christmas. Your Electric Light Company, department store or electric dealer now has it. In case your dealer cannot supply you, simply send us your name and we will tell you where you can conveniently see the Toastmaster. Waters-Genter Company, 252 N. PRINCES AND POTENTATES attended the wedding of Princess Anne of France and Amedeo, Duke of Apulia. The guest list included three kings, forty princes and princesses, and twenty cabinet ministers. In the foreground are Prince Umberto of Italy and Princess Marie Jose of Belgium, followed by the Duke of Aosta and Princess Giovanna, walking in the royal cortege to the wedding ceremony in a Naples church.

GUY FAWKES returns to life! A London street urchin dresses up as a "guy" and waits outside a tea-shop for coins from passersby. Thousands of Englishmen celebrate Guy Fawkes day annually on the anniversary of the "gunpowder plot" of 322 years ago.

HORSE SHOERS ON PARADE—In dear old London, apparently there still is a widespread call for what are known there as "shoeing smiths." At any rate, the smiths rig up a tableau and are given a place in the lord mayor's show, a festival that dates back to the time of King John.

Let quaint WESTMINSTER CHIMES

SESSIONS WESTMINSTER CHIME NUMBER TWO. $34. OTHERS $32 TO $37

express your Christmas sentiment

TO THE FRIEND you cherish most, send this most graceful gift,—the new Sessions Clock of choice mahogany with famed Westminster Chimes. Day after day, every quarter-hour, its lilting chimes will sing anew your jolly holiday remembrance.

By a masterstroke of scientific workmanship, Sessions now can sell these clocks at a price far below that of other Westminster Chime clocks. They cost but $32 to $37, less than even ordinary chime clocks. Yet there has been no compromise with quality or workmanship. The full five tone bars are here, with an exclusive Sessions Chime stand that creates lingering, floating notes, richer and fuller by far than is found in clocks more costly. And these clocks tell the time correctly, for many years.

Let these lovely chimes speed your yuletide message. If your dealer hasn't these new Sessions clocks, send for detailed information about them. The Sessions Clock Co. New York, 233 B'way. Chicago, 5 N. Wabash Ave. Factories, Forestville, Conn.

Light-Weight Two-Layer Fabric, Wool in Outer Layer, Cotton Inner Layer, Air Space Between . . . No Wool Itch

THE effects of violent changes in temperature, which you must meet all winter, are offset by wearing Duofold, the modern underwear for modern life.

1. Comfort indoors—warmth outdoors—because the fabric is made of two thin layers with air space between. Light in weight, yet warmer outdoors than a single heavy layer fabric.

2. No wool irritation—because the wool is in the outer layer and is prevented from touching the skin by the inner layer which is made of soft cotton.

3. Health protection—because the inner layer that first absorbs body moisture is protected from cool air by the outer layer and the air space between layers. Body warmth is kept IN and cold OUT. Body moisture is then absorbed by the outer layer, from which it evaporates, away from the skin, preventing chill to the body. The body is kept and always feels dry and comfortable, even in overheated rooms!

For Health and Comfort under modern living conditions, wear Duofold from fall to spring. And be sure to put it on your children, even down to the babies.

Made in a variety of fabric combinations and styles at reasonable prices. Sold by leading department, dry goods and men's furnishing stores.

School Teachers! NOTE:—The Game of Flags is instructive and entertaining. It teaches facts concerning races, lands and national emblems! To encourage teachers to assist their pupils 5 special prizes of $100 each will be awarded to the five school teachers whose pupils submit the best entries.

Here Are the Simple Rules:

Each Sunday for 14 weeks The Chicago Tribune will print a set of composite Flags of 3 different nations. Each set of Flags when cut apart and put together properly will make complete Flags. The public is invited to cut apart, assemble the Flags and name the nations they represent. The Chicago Tribune will pay $10,000.00 in Cash Prizes as specified on this page to the persons who send in the nearest correctly named and neatest complete set of Flags, in accordance with these rules.

2. This contest is open to everybody—men, women, boys and girls, except employes of The Chicago Tribune and their families. It does not matter where you live.

3. You pay nothing, just prove your skill.

4. The composite Flags must be cut out, assembled properly and pasted or pinned together. Below each Flag when assembled must be written the name of the country the Flag represents. Clues will be printed beneath each composite to aid in identifying the Flags.

5. In all, 42 Flags will be printed—3 each Sunday for 14 weeks. Flags are to be submitted only in complete sets of 42. Hold all Flags until you have the complete set of 42. Then send them to "Flags," The Chicago Tribune, Postoffice Box 1539, Chicago, Ill. Be sure to write your name and address plainly on your entry. All Flags must be in by midnight 21 days after set No. 14 is published. We cannot undertake to return any entries.

6. Each entry should be sent by first class mail—postage prepaid. Entries with insufficient postage will be returned by the Postoffice Department. Contestants may send as many sets of Flags as they wish, but no contestant will be entitled to more than one prize. Accuracy will count. Neatness will count.

7. To encourage school teachers to assist their pupils, 5 special prizes of $100.00 each will be awarded to the 5 teachers whose pupils submit the best entries. Teachers in public, parochial and private schools are eligible for these special prizes.

8. You need not purchase The Chicago Tribune to compete. You may trace or copy the Flags from the originals and assemble them from the copies you have made. BRICKS WITHOUT STRAW by DORNFORD YATES

"Then go to the devil," roared Sir John.

In Which Fate Steps to the Center of the Stage and Makes a Better Match Than the Most Devoted (and Calculating) of Parents.

NADEGE LAMBERT, spinster, tilted her chin.

"Don't be absurd," she said, shortly. "I agreed to marry you, not to ignore the existence of every one else."

The man pulled his mustachios.

"I never see you, Nadège. You know I don't expect you to give up your friends, but—well, we mightn't be engaged, might we?"

The girl shrugged her white shoulders.

"I don't know what you expect. I never pick up a paper without seeing some reference—usually nauseating—to our approaching union: I flaunt your quite excellent ring: you have the right to kiss me whenever you please."

"I want some of your time, Nadège."

Miss Lambert rose to her feet and stretched luxuriously. His eyes on the lithe figure, Dominick Medmenham, bachelor, sat very still.

"I'm afraid you're out of date," said the lady. She raised her beautiful eyebrows, to point the sneer. "A woman's time is her own. It wasn't once: she had to give it up right and left: the process was called 'devotion.'"

"You mean——"

"This. You're all right. If you weren't, we shouldn't be engaged. As a husband you'll be quite admirable. Clean, not too good looking, civil. We shall muck in together very well. But you must be content with that."

"With what?" said Dominick, quietly.

From over her shoulder, powder puff in hand, Miss Lambert looked him in the eyes.

"Are you out for trouble?" she said.

Medmenham smiled back.

"You know that I'm not, my lady. But we must have this out. Of course, your time is your own, and always shall be. But—well, I don't want to sound soppy, but I rather like being with you. Don't you like being with me?"

"If I couldn't bear it, we shouldn't be wrangling now. But I do wish you'd get it straight. A girl believes in amusement: it's the article of her faith: but she doesn't marry for amusement unless she's a fool. She takes the best man she can get that won't let her down."

"Thank you," said Dominick, gently.

He rose, stepped to the fireplace, and took the girl in his arms.

"I love you, Nadège," he said, simply. "I'll never quote it against you, but—don't you love me?"

Miss Lambert averted her face.

"I imagine I do. I don't know. Need you be so Victorian?"

"I must be natural," said Dominick, "now and again. And so must my wife." The girl slipped out of his arms: he let her go. "I don't know whether you love me, and I want to know very much."

"At the present moment," flashed Miss Lambert, "the answer is definitely 'No.' But that's your own fault. Every one dislikes being badgered."

Dominick stared upon the ground.

"I want you to be happy," he said, "but I want to be happy, too. And I shan't be happy, Nadège, if I haven't your love."

The girl hesitated. She perceived very clearly that she had gone too far. She had meant to lead Dominick a dance; and he had smiled and watched her, but had not danced. And now her pride was involved. She must confess that she loved him, haul down her pert little flag, or—the balloon would go up. Of that there was no doubt at all. Dominick was in earnest: everything was hanging upon her reply. If only he would look up . . . and see the light in her eyes. . . .

The sudden blare of a fox trot staggered into the room. The band had returned to its labors, and "Pony" Bullock would be coming to claim his dance. And that would tear everything up. They couldn't be seen "philandering." If only he . . .

As she put out her arms toward him, some one half entered the room, stifled an exclamation, and withdrew precipitately.

Nadège could have screamed with rage.

Instead, she took her seat upon the arm of a chair, white to the lips.

"Have we done enough damage?" she said.

Dominick drew himself up.

"I want to know where I am."

"I'll tell you. You're on the edge. And, if you want to stay there, I'd have a care. You can't 'come thro' the rye' in Charles street. It isn't done. And, in any event, I don't like it. Our marriage will be convenient: your name is quite a good one, and I can put up the wealth. Try to dig any deeper, my friend, and, I warn you, you'll ring the bell."

Dominick looked away.

"You may take it as rung," he said, quietly.

Miss Lambert drew off her ring.

"Catch," she said.

Before he had time to turn, she flung the gem. This struck against his shoulder and fell at his feet.

"Sorry," said Nadège, carelessly. "Where did it go?"

"I don't know," said the man.

Then he turned on his heel and walked out of the room. . . .

Five minutes later "Pony" Bullock in some dudgeon abandoned his search for Nadège. By so doing he saved his time. The lady was seated in her long, low, slate blue limousine, unconscious of the magic which the moon was making in the ways, shakily whispering "That's that" over and over again, with the tears running down her cheeks.

. . . . . .

The affair did not end there.

You may break an engagement ten days before the marriage, but those that made the match will scarcely throw up their hats. More. This particular union was to be the summit of the ladder which the bride's mother had so successfully climbed. Money being no object, such an attainment was to be suitably marked. The splendor, indeed, had already begun to blaze. For this the bridegroom's father had no use at all. The match appealed to him because it was "sound." To maintain Black James as the estate required had long been beyond his means. Now he would retire to the dower house, and the fine old place he had supported would come by its own.

The decoration of the dower house was almost complete. The bathrooms he had installed were in excellent taste. Black James was too big. The dower house, on the other hand, was entirely convenient.

And so it is not surprising that the affair did not end in Charles street or the long limousine.

Upon learning the unsavory news, Mrs. Lambert politely regretted that things had gone too far and that the passionate matter must take its course. When her daughter stared, she raised her elegant eyebrows and tossed her a note. This was an intimation that royalty was graciously disposed to honor with its presence the forthcoming rite. Mrs. Lambert could hardly have made a more foolish mistake. Nadège read the note through and laid it down. Her comment would have been unpardonable had she meant what she said.

At first Mrs. Lambert was unable to speak; then she threw back to her father, who had been born in Wapping and remained a master of insult to the day of his death. This was a second error, worse than her first. Nadège heard her out. Then she left Eaton square, never to return.

Sir John Medmenham's temper had long been as short as his purse, and Dominick broke the tidings at an unfortunate time. His father had just approved the final draft of a marriage settlement which was worth reading.

When he had spoken, the baronet rose to his feet.

"Is this irrevocable?" he demanded.

"I'm afraid so, sir."

"Then go to the devil," roared Sir John. He slammed the table before him with the flat of his hand. "Go to the devil and tell him you're short of a home. D'you owe any money?"

"Not very much, sir."

"Send the bills to Forsyth before the end of the week."

"Thank you, sir."

"Don't dare to thank me. I'm doing it for my name."

Dominick took his leave.

There was nothing to be said or done. In time his father might relent; of this, however, he was doubtful. So was Forsyth, solicitor, recalled from the country station by an uneasy groom. Do what the lawyer would, charm he never so wisely, Dominick Medmenham was disinherited that day.

IT was nearly a year later that Nadège pawned her umbrella for half a crown; this in a quarter of London in which, ten months before, she would have feared to set foot.

The afternoon was sultry and, as she walked along the coarse, unfriendly road, she felt for the first time the definite stab of fear. Other stripes she had suffered again and again. Misery, want, horror had all laid on; but not until now had she actually been afraid. She was not destitute—tomorrow evening she would be paid two pounds; but in ten days' time the tour would come to an end, and so far she had not succeeded in finding another job.

She had not enjoyed the life of a chorus girl. Had she been able to obtain work in London, it would not have been so bad; but the provinces were awful. The squalor of the lodgings, the sordid purlieus which harbored the stage doors, the sulky dreariness of the Sunday journeys' ends, would have been intolerable but for the downright bravery of her companions in woe. These laughed, cursed, and laughed again; reaped where none had sown, gathered where none had strawed, and, having no hope, found their present misfortune matter for jest.

Tragedy being their portion, they wrung a pitiful humor from every line; the present being lean, they feasted on the fat of the future; wading in the slough of despond, they chanted the frothblowers' anthem and, their feet being too heavy, lifted their hearts instead.

Nadège was not of them and could not play their game. Her acquaintance with grief was not yet familiar enough to breed so fine a contempt. It was shame that had kept her going. If they could mock at such music, at least she could face it—somehow. She did, with an excellent grace, and, smothering her horror and disgust, earned her living for ten months, with nothing to spare. And now the tour was ending and she had nothing in view—nothing.

She entered a confectioner's shop and expended a shilling on a meal. Then she walked to the theater. This was abominably hot—stifling. Her dressing room was commanding a fried fish shop, whose vile burned offerings ladened the stagnant air.

As she opened the door: "Come right in, darling," said Mabel Legrand. "Did you see the Prince of Wales? He's waiting for me down below with a bunch of aspidistras he grew himself. That's what smells so nice."

A shriek of laughter greeted the inelegant jest.

"And Enid Perone's lost her purse. There was one and threepence in it and a letter from another man's wife. But she's not worrying. She think's the chauffeur may find it when he's doing the car."

"There's the ticket for my suitcase," said Enid, ruefully. "I put it up on Tuesday and now I can't get it out."

"I'll lend you a cardboard, dear," said Maisie Buck. "It's really the one I keep my sables in, but, now we're back in London, my maid'll be getting them out. Have you all got your vouchers for Ascot?"

Nadège laughed with the rest and observed the familiar rite of undressing and making up.

As she powdered her face a rap fell upon the door.

"Overture and beginners, please, ladies."

There was no air in the East End that night; the house was packed and reeking; after her four changes Nadège was ready to drop.

With depression fast upon her shoulders, she dressed more slowly than the rest. As she was leaving the dismal, empty room the storm, long overdue, broke with a crash. When she reached the stage door the rain was falling in sheets.

Nadège hesitated, shrinking. With no umbrella, no coat, to enter the streets seemed madness. Her rooms were two miles away, and the busses which stopped at the corner were sure to be full. A taxi stood in the shadows, but she had not the fare; besides, it was engaged, waiting for somebody else. Perhaps, if she waited a little, the downpour would cease. The trouble was that the busses would soon stop running. Nadège did not want to walk home. For one thing, she was dead beat; for another——

She peered out into the night; as if in reply a squall swept up the alley with a bellow of wrath. Again she drew back, to stand watching the spouts of water bend to the wind.

The taxi driver stood in the doorway, hat in hand.

"May I give you a lift?" he said, quietly.

It was Dominick Medmenham.

By the time they had reached her lodgings the rain had ceased.

"I can't ask you in," said Nadège. "Perhaps you wouldn't come if I could."

"We could sit in the taxi," said the man, "for the length of a cigaret."

Nadège reëntered the cab.

"Was this chance, Dominick? Or did you seek me out?"

"It was chance, Nadège. I didn't know where to look. You've changed your name."

"I know. Why are you doing this?"

"One has to live," said the man. "And you?"

"Same here. Mother went over the line. I couldn't stay on."

"My poor lady," said Dominick.

The girl drew a sharp breath.

"I do very well," she said. "It's a lazy life, and every one's awfully kind. Why did Sir John turn you down?"

"We had a dispute," said Medmenham. "He's getting old, you know. And what with the gout and the times the ice was always thin. And then one day I went through. I'm honestly happier—with something to do."

"So'm I," said Nadège stoutly.

There was a moment's silence.

Then: "I'm an owner-driver," said Dominick, "and I live in Mayfair. I've a tiny flat over the garage, as tight as you please. Sometimes on the old crowd picks me up. They're awfully nice. Stand on the pavement and talk, and if I've driven them home they try to make me come in. I drove Milly Bemuse and her brother a week ago. When they got out she gave me a five pound note. When I protested, 'Don't spoil my evening,' she said.

"And old Lord Hillesley was immense. When I set him down at Arthur's, he gave me my proper fare; then he asked me to park the cab and come in to lunch. But I've never seen you, Nadège. Perhaps you've been out of town?"

The girl nodded.

"Did you ever drive mother?" she said.

"Once. But she didn't recognize me."

Nadège laughed.

"I can well believe that," she said. And then, irrevelantly, "I'll never go back."

Dominick swallowed.

"Have you no money of your own, Nadège?"

"Not a penny. Father had nothing. But I manage all right, Dominick. Of course, I don't dine at the Rits, but neither do you; and I don't give fivers to taxis because I used to know them in better days."

"O, my dear," said Dominick.

There was another silence. Nadège dared not trust her voice.

At length: "I must go," she said quietly.

At once he left the cab and handed her out.

With her fingers in his, "You've been very kind," she said gravely. "Kinder than I deserved."

Medmenham bowed his head.

"I've been very fortunate," he said. Then he looked up. "I shall be at the theater tomorrow to drive you home. It may be wet, and you can't always get a taxi down in those parts."

"Very well," said the girl unsteadily.

She turned away abruptly, stepped across the pavement and opened the door. Medmenham saw a mean hall, lighted by a naked gas jet. Nadège passed in blindly, thrust the door to behind her, and burst into tears.

THE tour was over.

The curtain had fallen upon "Jess Hale" for the last time, and the dressing room was full of half-hearted laughter and regret.

"Opening Blackpool," said Mabel, "on the nineteenth of June. Don't forget, any one. But 'once of the Bank of England' will always do."

"I don't like Blackpool," said Enid. "I had washing there."

There was a ripple of mirth. As the scene of some negligence or other, half the towns of England had no favor with Miss Perone.

"Cambridge," said a fat, fair girl, wiping the grease from her throat. "I do hope I shan't get entangled with one of the undergrads. What are you doing, Con?"

A woman of forty lifted a white, peaked face.

"Resting, m'dear. I'm tired. Enid, have the address of those rooms at Ilfracombe."

"Auntie Ruddock's?" said Maisie. "She's a good sort, she is. Eighteen stone in her bloomers and one long smile. I put her to bed once, and she never forgets a friend."

Nadège took no part in the chatter, for she had nothing to say. Like poor Constance, she was "at liberty"—out of a job.

The first to be dressed, she left the room amid a flurry of affectionate good will.

As she came to the stairs, somebody called her name, and there was Mabel Legrand dressed in a greasy kimono about her ample limbs.

Nadège returned, wondering.

The other put her arms round her neck.

"You poor baby," she said gently, "don't be afraid. I'll see you don't come to any harm." His wife

...ed. Go home. I don't care what it costs—it's cheaper than going on. I've no heart left, and my skin's turned into a hide; but I'm forty-five next Tuesday, and I've done it for twenty years. I came from a Devonshire rectory. You wouldn't guess that, but I did. Used to keep house for my father and drive out to call. Me." She shook a sob from her throat. "What d'you think I'd give now to be sittin' sweet peas in that garden and ringin' for tea? So go home, darling. Go home—before it's too late. Chuck your pride in the gutter; it's putrid stuff. See where mine's brought me—to Blackpool—on the nineteenth of June."

She kissed her roughly, flicked a tear from each eye, laughed, and turned back to her room.

"See you some day," she shrilled. "So long, Nadège. Be good."

Before Nadège could reply the door was shut.

THE girl passed down the stairs and into the street. Medmenham was there, as usual, to drive her back to her rooms.

The attention distressed Nadège. It was out of all order for Dominick to wait upon her: she could make no sort of return: what was far worse, she valued his coming as she had never valued anything before. Each of those nightly rides was charged to her most private account: she would pay for them one by one in something more pitiful than tears. For many years would pass before she could leave a room door without glancing up and down for a taxi which she knew would never be there? Nine, ten: he would have driven her nine times.

All these things in her heart, she had protested more than once; but every night the taxi had been there, its driver standing beside it, with his hand at the door.

As Dominick drove her from the theater for the last time.

Arrived at her lodgings, Nadège was out of the cab before he could leave his seat.

"Good-night, Dominick," she said, and put out her hand. "Good-night and good-by, and God bless you for being so sweet."

"Why 'Good-by'?" said Medmenham, holding her hand in his.

"The tour's over. I—I open at Blackpool next week."

"Are you traveling tomorrow?"

Nadège tried to think straight. If she said "yes," he would come to drive her to the station.

"No," she said.

"Let me drive you into the country—not very far. Into the woods somewhere. I'll bring some lunch." The girl shook her head. The hold on her fingers tightened. "Don't say 'No,' Nadège. I know I'm asking a lot, but I've not had a soul to talk to for nearly a year."

Nadège stared at the badge strapped to his coat. One day in heaven, and how many nights in hell?

"I've cost you enough," she said, slowly.

"O, Nadège. Between friends . . ."

Almost roughly the girl withdrew her hand.

"All right. I'll come. Thank you."

Medmenham lifted his cap.

"Will half-past ten be too early?"

"No, Dominick. Good-night."

When she had the door open she turned and lifted her hand.

The man waved his cap cheerfully.

. . . . . .

Nadège sat under a hawthorn which perfumed the air. Her fine, dark hair was free of her little felt hat, her grave brown eyes were feasting on what they saw. This was a slice of country, smiling beneath the favor of a summer's day—the slant of a flowery meadow, with a buxom hedgerow beyond; to the left a fresh field of young wheat, flanked by a whispering wood; to the right a cherry orchard, rising sharply to the skyline and making a long bank of blossom against the blue; and, rounding out the picture, a mountain of apple green foliage, the thick, gay summit of an opposing ridge, the comfortable bulwark against an unkind world.

Her color was faint, and the droop of her beautiful mouth told its own tale. She had always been slight, but her little wrists were slimmer, and her ankles were very fine. Her slippers had been well cared for, but they were growing old. Her simple, dark blue dress was the one she had been wearing when she left Eaton square.

Medmenham read these messages with a full heart.

Their lunch was over, and the man was sitting beside her, a pipe between his strong teeth. For more than half an hour they had not spoken, but had sat still together, the one looking at the other, and the other gazing on the country and finding there a refreshment which she had never known.

At last the girl took a deep breath.

"D'you often do this, Dominick?"

"This is the first time, Nadège."

"The first time? How strange. If I were in your place, I couldn't keep away."

"I've had no one to go with," said Medmenham. "When will you be back in town?"

"I don't know," said Nadège, slowly.

"Won't this tour bring you to London?"

"I—I don't know yet. It may. I've not seen the bills." She got to her feet. "Those woods attract me, Dominick. D'you think we could walk to them? I'd like to see what's lying the other side."

"Of course. Wait a moment, while I disable the cab."

This was behind a haystack and out of the sun. Medmenham knew the value of a smart looking cab.

A path led into the valley, and, presently, over a stream by a gray oak bridge. Very soon they were walking in the shade of the green coverlet to which they had looked.

The ridge commanded a road and a railway line. The country was handsome, but the road was busy with cars, and a train flung through the fields with a rushing snarl. Two pale blue charabancs stormed the dusty stretch: dogs in the manger, they held the crown of the road: from the rear of the second, some men, wearing women's hats, derided the occupants of a following car: behind the car a dark red face was chafing and furiously employing an ear splitting horn.

Nadège turned away.

"Why is life so beastly?" she said. "So beastly hard and cruel? I've been all right: people have treated me kindly wherever I've gone: but I've seen so much ill feeling, such—such squalor, such needless pain. I stayed in rooms once where the husband was out of work. He cleaned my shoes and carried up my hot water, and actually mended my trunk. Nobody could have been nicer. One day the police came and took him—for 'grievous bodily harm.' His wife jeered at him from the landing, while it was going on. It appeared he'd half killed a night watchman who lived next door. Why? Because the man's wife had boasted that, when the hot weather came, they should go to the sea."

"I'm sorry you've seen such things," said Medmenham. "Life out of joint is dreadful: and, once you've seen it, the slightest whiff of disorder brings it back."

"That's right," said the girl. "Study Hogarth enough, and only a constable will take the taste from your mouth. That's why these woods and meadows have helped me so. As for that orchard. . . . Let's go back there, Dominick. I'm sorry to be so capricious, but I've—I've seen so much of Hogarth that—well, I'm glad of a change."

"My poor lady!"

Nadège forced out a laugh.

"It's the contrast—that's all. I used to live so soft. But I can't complain, really. I do very well."

"I'm sure of that," said Medmenham. "And the first chance you get I'm sure you'll go right away. Will you take me on as your chauffeur when you're a star?"

"No. I think I'll build a house here and give it to you. And that would be useless. Why did Sir John turn you down?"

"We had a disagreement," said Medmenham, "and he went off the deep end."

Nadège stopped in her tracks and laid a hand on his arm.

"Tell me the truth," she said. "Was it because our engagement was broken off?"

"It was," said Medmenham. "But——"

Nadège clapped her hands to her eyes.

"I knew it," she moaned. "I knew it. O, Dominick, how you must hate me! How you must——"

"My dear Nadège, what has it to do with you? How can you blame yourself for the utterly reasonless whim of a man tormented with gout?"

Nadège uncovered her face and stared at the sky.

"And you wait upon me," she said. "You play the part of a servant to the woman who's smashed your life."

"A servant! Because, by the police regulations, I have to sit outside and you in the cab. My dear, what nonsense! Besides, between friends . . . And now let's get back to your meadow and sit in the sun."

In silence they crossed the bridge and passed through the smiling fields.

"Needless pain," said the girl. "You see, I belong to Hogarth. I'm typical of that vile world I condemn. Those two men in the charabanc made me feel sick and tired, and I ought to have been by their side."

Medmenham stood still.

"I refuse," he said quietly, "to let you talk like this. We both know the facts. Because you found me exacting, you broke our engagement off. Whether I was or was not, you were wholly within your rights. More. You did the right thing, Nadège. No girl should ever marry against her will. To saddle yourself with what happened——"

"What of the woman who boasted that she should go to the sea? An idle, unkind word—see what havoc it made. You can't say she wasn't to blame. Of course she was. She couldn't foresee what would happen; but who ever can? She just did a rotten thing—and bred the most frightful misery as the result."

"But, my dear, you did right." Nadège stared. "She spoke out of careless ill will; she wanted her neighbors to feel that she was better to do, so she put it across them—a common but unkind act. But you were doing your duty."

"My duty?"

"Your absolute duty. I don't care how far things have gone; it's not the game to marry a man you don't love."

Nadège stood like statuary; she seemed to have stopped breathing; her eyes, which were fixed upon a hedgerow, plainly saw nothing at all.

Suddenly, without a word, she touched bottom; the water of retribution passed over her head; Dominick had spiked her last gun; she could not even turn it upon herself.

Arrived at the head of the meadow, she sat herself down.

"Tell me of yourself," she said, dully. "I want to know how you live."

THE man told her faithfully a cheerful, prosperous tale. His life was full and amusing. If it was also hard, he hid the fact. He made good money, would soon have paid for his cab. Foul weather was trying, but brought much grist to the mill. He had four regular clients, two of whom were old ladies that feared the streets; had twice driven royalty; and once a man to the bank he was going to rob. His fares interested him. The comfortable ignorance with which propriety lay back on the cushions which scandal had but just left amused him to death. He had set down a potman, to be hailed by a pompous prelate on his way to a temperance hall; he had taken Miss —— to the divorce court and had carried the president back; a duchess had followed a bookmaker, heavy with wine.

The lively account took Nadège out of herself; the pleasant peace of the landscape ministered to her soul; soon she was looking and listening with a smile on her lips; in an hour they were talking easily, remembering the bygone days.

The sun was sinking when the girl picked up her hat.

"Time, Dominick," she said, setting her hair to rights. "I shall have to be getting back."

"To your rooms? Why on earth? Let's find a small inn and ask for a country tea."

Nadège shook her head.

"I can't do that," she said slowly. "You've given me the most perfect day I've ever spent. And now I must go." She rose. "I shall never forget it—never. Or how very sweet you were. I'm very grateful."

Medmenham looked up at her face.

"Perhaps, some day, Nadège, you'll let me bring you again."

"Perhaps, some day."

Medmenham got to his feet and put out his hands. The girl put her fingers within them without a thought.

"And please don't become a great lady before your time. I mean, when I've something to offer, I'm going to ask you again. When I've four or five cabs on the streets and don't have to drive. That means a good income, Nadège. I can't ask you to wait—I know that. And I daresay it's hopeless, and I know that I'm out of court. You can't post-date some statements, and that's what I've done.

"I shall never forget it—never," she said.

But O, Nadège, I just wanted you to know that I love you—love you far better, darling, than ever before, and God knows when I'll get a chance of telling you so again."

He kissed her hands hungrily. When he raised his head he saw the look in her face.

"Nadège!"

She nodded.

"I love you, Dominick. I always did. I was mad, I think, that night. I'd meant to make you protest, insist on your rights. You were so gentle and easy. I wanted to get a rise. So I played and lost and doubled and lost again. And at last I staked all I had. It was rotten and mean and senseless. But I was like that. But I'm not any more, Dominick."

The man drew her into his arms and kissed her lips. She went on wistfully.

"When I've got a job in London I'll let you know. And then, if you still want me, dear, I'll be your wife."

Medmenham held her off and looked into her eyes.

"Do you really love me?" he said.

"Yes, Dominick."

"Then give up your tour. Give up your prospects and marry me, poor as I am. I've a tiny flat, I told you, and I can keep us both. It won't be very exciting; I'm afraid it'll be very rough. A servant's out of the question. But, if you can stick to it, Nadège, you'll make my life. I need you. I've no one now. When I come in, soaked to the skin, I have to light my fire—lay it sometimes and then light it; I must have warmth. But I often go hungry to bed, because I'm too tired to set about getting a meal. I know I'm asking a lot, but——"

Nadège put her arms round his neck and burst into tears. Not for five minutes could she control her voice. Then: "Let's sit down," she whispered.

With his arm about her shoulders, she began to speak, very low.

"I never knew that men loved women like this. I don't think they do. Of course you know that I'm broke. The moment you saw me you knew I was down and out. I saw it in your eyes, heard it in all you said. You knew I wasn't going to Blackpool, guessed I was out of a job. Yet I might be a leading lady, the way that you've treated me. The question was how to save me—I've seen it all. How to spare my feelings, yet save me still. Your feelings didn't count. And, in the end, you ask me to do you the favor of becoming your wife. You point out how much it will help you if I will give up my career to cook your food, lay yourself open to a standing reproach, deliberately stigmatise yourself, in order that I may anchor without hauling down my pride."

"I don't seem to have been very clever," said Dominick, thoughtfully. "And in common decency I must decline the crown. Our marriage will be one of convenience. You're sick and tired of the sordid, and I don't like living alone."

"My dear, I'm a beggar. I've fourteen shillings and six pence, and I'm short of a job."

"And I of a housekeeper. I can't afford one. But I can run to a wife." He slid a hand into his pocket, and brought out a ring. "And here's the reward of virtue. If you hadn't picked this up——"

Nadège gave a cry of delight.

"I had to, Dominick. It—it seemed so awful to leave such a stone on the floor. Why didn't you sell it?"

"Because, to restore it to me, you had to stoop. That made it a document. 'I beg your pardon,' it said. And I valued that very much.

Nadège caught his hand to her heart.

"Faithful to a dream," she said.

"Perhaps," said Dominick. "But you see, my sweet, it's come true."

IT was some ten days later that Sir John Medmenham swallowed and dabbed at the Daily Glass.

"Have you seen this, Forsyth?"

"Your son's marriage to Miss Lambert? I have."

"What the devil does it mean?"

"If I'm to speak frankly, Sir John, I think it means this: The first match was made for them, and that's why it came to naught; but this one they made themselves."

"Bricks without straw," said Sir John. "They haven't a penny piece."

"Maybe," said Forsyth quietly. "But that sort of bricks will last. They're not easy to make, but . . ."

Sir John frowned.

"The point is what's to be done. I'm ready to let bygones be bygones, but what about that woman?" He wrinkled his nose. "Plenty of straw in that brick. Poor old Lambert! We found together at Harrow in '76."

The lawyer fingered his chin.

"I think if she's left to herself she'll see the worldly wisdom of coming around."

"What d'you mean?"

"They've a flat in a mews off Mount street. I should think it's being stormed now. They were both very popular, you know. If Mrs. Lambert stands out she'll be ostracised."

Sir John sat back in his chair.

"Have you got the address?" he said. "I don't mind being ostracised, but I'm damned if I'll follow her lead."

He called on his daughter-in-law on the following day.

The latter and Lady Sue Fustian were laying linoleum in the bathroom, and doing it very well.

Nadège led him into the kitchen politely enough.

"Thank you very much for coming," she said. "Dominick's out with his cab."

"Your father and I," said Sir John, "were very old friends. It gives me great pleasure to know that you bear my name."

"I'm an unprofitable daughter," said Nadège.

"My dear, that's largely my fault. I looked too hard at the settlements and not hard enough at your eyes. You must forgive me. And I don't at all like Dominick's driving a cab."

"That's my fault, Sir John. I broke the engagement, you know."

"I'm afraid it was I who—er—reduced him to the ranks. At any rate, between us we upset things. Will you help me to put them right?"

"Of course I will."

"I have to go to Vichy at the end of the week. I want you and him to come and take charge of Black James while I'm away. If he likes to work later on I won't stand in the way. But I don't like his driving a cab. The streets are dangerous."

"You ask me to help myself to something I don't deserve."

"That's a way conspirators have." He rose to his feet. "Give him this note from me and plead my cause. And I'll call for you tomorrow at four o'clock. We'll walk around to ————'s and inspect the family jewels."

Nadège took his hand in both hers.

"I let you down once," she said. "I'll never do it again."

Sir John stooped and kissed her.

"It's perfectly plain," he said, "that you and I are going to get on very well."

After a word with Lady Sue he took his leave.

At the entrance to the mews he paused.

"Forsyth was right," he murmured. "Nothing like bricks without straw." He rubbed his nose reflectively. "Strange fellow, Fate. By cutting them off that woman and I seem to have done the right thing."

THREE weeks had gone by, and Black James was basking in the sunshine, like an old hound.

On the balustrade of the terrace sat Nadège, her eyes roving luxuriously over the famous park. Its deer, its timber, its bracken, its light and shades made a pageant of which she would never tire. Beneath their constant ministry her memories of Hogarth were growing dim.

The girl was happy, as only those are happy who have been given the original of their most precious dream. She clung to her husband like a child, would have fought for him like a tigress, woke of nights and wept over him out of sheer joy.

Dominick emerged from the library, letter in hand.

"From Forsyth," he said, coming across the flags. ". . . I have heard from Mrs. Lambert's solicitors. They say, 'In the circumstances there seems to be no reason why the deed of settlement should not be executed in substantially the same form as that which was finally approved.' I hope you will agree with them, as I do. . . ."

"As we were," sighed Nadège. "But I owe you ten months, Dominick. I stole ten months of your life."

The man put her hand to his lips.

"You're paying me back, my darling, a hundredfold. If you remember, I wanted some of your time."

INSTALLMENT V.

A Voice from the Grave.

THE letters Morgan had taken from Forrest's strong box were still in his pocket; it seemed to him, sometimes that morning, that they had some radioactive power; they fairly burned him as they rested there. He had not dared destroy them; had not, indeed, possessed the means to do so. He might have burned them in his room. But not without leaving traces. And he had the feeling that his room had been searched while he was at breakfast—even though there was no evidence of anything of the sort when he went back later.

That, though, meant nothing; to be able to search a room without leaving anything to betray his visit must be the elementary equipment of a detective, he supposed.

He was certain that every move he made was watched. The house was full of strangers. They came and went upon mysterious errands; the grounds were crowded. Reporters were coming all the time; none had, as yet, been admitted to the house. They would be present at the inquest, he heard; the inquest that was to be held after lunch. Dr. Scaife was to come back earlier and perform an autopsy; the law required that, unnecessary as, in this instance, it seemed.

The letters laid the curse of indecision upon him. On every other point of his conduct his mind was clearly made up. But the letters threatened him at every turn. Once found in his possession, they would damn him; so much he knew. Braden was not the man to miss their significance. He could not destroy them; he had no place in which to hide them. He might himself, at any moment, be arrested and searched.

It wasn't, he thou[illegible] likely—yet, at any rate—that he would be arrest[illegible] But it was possible; it was more than possible. [illegible] might have recourse to such a move just to break down his calm ignoring of their suspicions. Of those suspicions he was sure—and that Braden, as well as Greenway, thought him involved in Forrest's death. All about him, he well knew, there was going on a secret, surreptitious search for something to confirm the evidence that pointed to him.

He had vital need to see Nora West, and to see her alone. Just how to manage it he didn't know. Her attitude toward him had changed, he knew; he hadn't, he thought, been mistaken in thinking that there had been appeal in the look she had given him last night in the library. Did she know it was he who had turned out the light when Greenway was upon her? He thought so; he couldn't be sure.

He had found her downstairs when he came down for the second time; she was making a breakfast of sorts just then with the Worralls. There had been casual, desultory talk after that; every one had read all the papers avidly.

Braden disappeared in the course of the morning; Greenway shut himself away at the telephone and talked endlessly to his office in New York. For the time the whole inquiry, so far as Morgan could tell, marked time. He waited for his chance with Nora; she seemed, he thought, to be avoiding his eye. And at last he took the bull by the horns, went over to her as she stood by the window.

"Look here," he said. "I've got to see you."

"Yes," she said quietly. "I know. Wait. I'll manage."

She turned away from the window.

"Ugh!" she said. "This house is dreadful! Beth, let's find some arctics and go out!"

"In the snow? You couldn't hire me to!" said Beth Worrall. "I won't stir till I go back to New York—and the sooner the better!"

"Don't coddle yourself so!" said Nora. "It's not bad out."

"I don't see how it could be worse," said Marshall, going to the window. "Don't be an idiot, Nora."

"Won't any one come?" she said. "Jim?" He shook his head. "How about you, Mr. Morgan?"

"I'm game," he said. "Wrap yourself up—you don't want to catch cold."

"I won't," she said. "I'm as strong as a horse. Come on—there are overshoes and things in the big closet over there."

They went out together, a few minutes later, by the front door; their appearance was the signal for a concerted rush from the reporters, a swift clicking of cameras. Even a movie machine that had been set up hopefully began to work. Nora laughed; for the first time that morning there was some color in her cheeks.

"Look here," said Morgan. "I'm frightfully sorry, but there really isn't a thing for us to tell you. Braden——"

One of the reporters laughed.

"Braden!" he said. "We know him of old. You're Capt. Morgan, aren't you? And the lady——"

"I'm Nora West," she said. "And we don't know a thing."

A small, fox faced youth wormed his way to the front.

"Capt. Morgan," he said, and named his paper, the one that had dragged out the old story of his broken engagement to Mary Forrest, "if you'd say a word about——"

"I've nothing to say," said Morgan. And his tone silenced even the fox faced youth. "We've come out for a breath of air. We know nothing you don't know yourselves. Probably not as much—you talked with Braden, didn't you?"

Reluctantly the reporters gave ground, went back to their vigil. And Morgan and Nora walked on.

"Look here," said Morgan when they were out of earshot. "You know why I had to see you, don't you? I mean, you know it was I who turned out the light in the library last night—this morning?"

"I—I thought so," she said. "I hoped so. It was Mr. Greenway who nearly caught me—I know that."

"Yes," he said, grimly, "it was. You're right about that."

They were walking along the vegetable garden now, and near the garage they met Braden and Parker, the chauffeur. Braden's stop watch was out again; he was, plainly, conducting more experiments. Parker looked scared and sullen; Braden seemed well satisfied with himself.

"Hello!" said Morgan. "You won't need us for a few minutes, will you?"

"I had to have some air," said Nora. "I couldn't stand it any longer in the house. And Capt. Morgan was the only one who would come out with me."

"It's poor walking," said Braden. "Go ahead and enjoy yourselves for all of me, though. You won't be needed before the inquest."

They walked on.

"There's something I want to tell you," said Nora. "I mean—I was beastly to you last night before dinner. You were right. I've been an awful fool. Lee——" She choked on his name.

"O, Lord!" said Morgan. "What of it? We all make mistakes. I—I'm sorry——"

"I wanted to tell you," she said.

"You needn't have," he said, almost curtly. "It doesn't matter. This—this I've got to tell you does. I—I got there first this morning. I found the key before you ever came in at all."

"O!" she said. "Yes——"

"Steady," he said. "You—you've got to watch yourself. There can't be any one near enough to hear what we say. But we're being watched—I'm being watched, every minute. They won't let me out of their sight."

He saw her lips quiver; he saw the curious, scared look that came into her eyes.

"Because—because you went to find that key?"

"O, Lord—no! Because they think I killed Forrest. Because I'm the only one who hasn't got an alibi to prove where he was the moment the shot that killed him was fired."

"You—but—you were where we all were—in the hall?"

"I can't prove it," he said. "No one actually saw me till afterward. And Braden worked it out this morning that it needn't take an agile man more than five seconds to get into the hall from the library window by the terrace."

"O!" she said, and waited.

"That doesn't matter—except that it's why we've got to be careful," he said. "What does matter is that I found that key and opened Forrest's safe, and that—well, that I've got your letters in the inside pocket of my coat right now."

There was no color in her face now as she looked at him.

"My letters——" she said. "O, thank God!"

"Hold on," he said. "I've got them—and having them's as safe as carrying dynamite into a burning building! I can't burn them—I haven't any place to hide them. I can't even give them to you now—they'd see me do it."

"How did you know?" she said. "How did you know about my letters?" He saw the way the color was flooding her cheeks now; she stared at him, and there was dismay in her eyes. "You——"

HE told her of his eavesdropping.

"I couldn't help it," he said. "Not after I heard the way you were talking to him. I—you see, I'd known all the time the sort he was. I didn't know he was as bad as he turned out—but—well, I've seen too many mouths like his to be fooled. I—I'm frightfully sorry I was there, in a way, of course—I mean—that I had to hear things——"

"O!" she said. "Thank God you were! What would have become of me if you hadn't been?" Then suddenly a new thought struck her with the force of a blow. "But if you were there—at the window—why, you were there after I was! You didn't come back to the hall before I did—you weren't there—you——"

His eyes met hers steadily.

"O!" she said. She seemed to shrink away. "How—how ghastly! You'd quarreled with him about—about Mrs. Forrest. You—you were in love with her. You must know—you must have been there—you—why—it must have been you——"

"You're wrong," he said quietly. "As wrong as you were last night before dinner. Won't you remember that and try not to be so swift to judge?"

She caught her breath.

"That—that's fair," she said, and tried to smile. "I'm not the one to judge any one else, am I?"

"That's not what I meant," he said hotly. "It's just—you're half right. I was in love with Forrest's wife—before he married her. I stayed away from home for years because she'd married him—like the half baked fool I was! I knew the minute I saw her again—it was the same night I first saw you—that it was all over. I don't know why—it was, that's all.

"I was a fool to come here. I didn't like Forrest—I didn't trust him. He was in the pay of a man who had every reason to try to make trouble for me—Greenway. You said last night you'd seen me with Mary yesterday afternoon. I daresay you saw me put my arm about her. Good Lord, she might have been my sister. You don't like her—you did like Forrest. Well, that's for you. But you can take my word for it that he'd treated her abominably. She's been a desperately unhappy woman.

"I saw her last night, after dinner. You knew I was going to. I saw you looking at me when I spoke to her. But I saw her to tell her I was going back to town this morning. We—well, we had to have an understanding. She knew that the old feeling was gone. We were talking when Forrest came storming to the door—with Greenway. Making ridiculous, blackmailing threats. Greenway dragged him away to keep me from thrashing him there. That's the plain truth that you haven't known. It's for you to take it or leave it."

"But—afterward——?" she said. "You must know——?"

"O, I do!" he said, with a groan. "I'm going to tell you! Good God, if the chap weren't dead, if it hadn't turned into tragedy, it would be funny! It was so stupid—so unnecessary! I told you how I heard you with him. Then, when you'd gone, I went for him—to get those letters. And——"

Simply, in the fewest possible words, baldly, he told her what had happened.

"You don't have to believe me, of course," he said.

"Why didn't you come right out—tell us all what had happened?" she said. "It—it would have been so much easier to believe then——"

"I know!" he said. "But—there was Greenway. The whole thing was like finding money in the street for him. He knew of my quarrel with Forrest—he knew Mary had jilted me—he knew the whole story. He could work up a case. He could use his influence, his money. He'd have had me arrested—tried for murder. Maybe I'd have been acquitted—you can't tell. More likely they'd have called it manslaughter and sent me up.

"And—there's that option. It's not only that every cent I've got in the world is tied up in that property. My best friend's in it, too. In ten days they've got to take that option up or let it go. What chance would a man in jail, charged with murder, have against that crew? Can't you see that they could have made me take anything they chose to give? I'd have had to have money for lawyers—everything. Lord, I thought it all out. I saw a chance to bluff my way through. I still think I can."

"I—I see," she said. "But you risked everything to go down and get those letters back for me?"

"Well, I'd been fool enough to forget them before

A Sparkling Short Story Next Sunday

Aunt Mim

By Lawrence Perry

Lorna, a junior at Vassar, masquerades under a transformation coiffure in order to chaperon her sub-deb cousin at a college club house party. Posing as a middle-aged aunt, she meets a personable youth—the man of men. Complications set in, and O, what to do?

—when I could have got them easily, safely——"

"O, yes!" she said, scornfully. "Any one would have done it, of course! You needn't tell me. And now—those letters—if they find them—how would they know you'd taken them—from that box?"

"O, I'd trust Braden to put two and two and two together and make six! Lord, they'll know of your friendship with Forrest. And there'll be Greenway's tale of what happened in the library this morning. For Braden it would be just another motive—and, as it happens, the true one!"

"I see," she said. She drew close to him. Her arm slipped through his. She turned to him, laughing. "Don't look so startled! I've got an idea. You've got to give me those letters. I can get rid of them—you can't."

"But I can't give them to you!" he said. "They'd see—they're watching us this minute."

"I know," she said. "I saw some one, a minute ago, over that way. They're awfully clumsy—but maybe they don't mind our knowing. Still—take me in your arms—kiss me——"

"What?" he cried, amazed.

"Take me in your arms—kiss me—as if you were my lover."

Her eyes were blazing; her voice was peremptory, compelling. Stark with wonder, mystified, still he obeyed her. And in an instant understood. For as he held her her hands went groping under his coat; he felt the letters being drawn from his pocket; knew that she had seized upon the one secret way there was of effecting that transference.

"You—" he said as he let her go. "Nora——"

"O, don't!" she cried, and her voice broke in a sob. "Not—not now." She took a step away; her cheeks were crimson now. "I—I'll be all right in a minute—we'd better go back."

THE early dusk had fallen. The reporters had fed fatly upon the evidence at the inquest; they had the coroner's finding. Lee Forrest had come to his death as the result of a gunshot wound inflicted in some manner unknown.

The proceedings had been brief and almost purely formal. There had been testimony as to the finding of the body, as to the two shots that had been heard. Dr. Scaife had reported his findings and the result of his autopsy. The condition of the library, with its mute evidences of a struggle, had been described. No hint of a motive for Forrest's killing was divulged; nothing was said as to the alibis of those in the house.

One unexpected witness—auditor, rather—at the inquest was Andrew Draper, one of Greenway's associates in the copper deal. Morgan had been surprised to see him ride up soon after lunch, before the coroner came, with Harbison, the state's attorney, in attendance. Morgan hadn't known that Draper lived in the neighborhood; he had a country house, though, it seemed, only a mile or so away.

He rode up through the snow, a great figure on his horse, and strode in in his wet boots, rubbing his cold hands. He nodded curtly to Greenway, who was disposed to be effusive in his welcome; gave Morgan a quick, searching look that, somehow, alarmed him more than all of Greenway's malice, and went straight to Mary Forrest, who had just come down, pale but composed. To her he spoke with sympathy and with a grave, old fashioned courtesy that revealed another side of him to Morgan; a side wholly out of key with his ordinary brusque manner.

He went away with Greenway after he left Mary Forrest; it was plain, Morgan thought, that this meeting between them had been prearranged, for all the curtness of Draper's manner toward the other financier. They came back together and were present at the inquest; Greenway, indeed, was one of the few witnesses to be sworn.

With the ending of the inquest, the departure of the coroner and Dr. Scaife, the medical examiner, a sort of confusion spread through the house. More than half the servants were leaving at once; only fear of Braden and the police had kept them from making off at dawn. Even before the hearing the hall, by the door, was full of baggage; the Marshalls and the Worralls were to leave as soon as it was over.

Morgan saw Mary, after the Marshalls and the Worralls had gone, standing alone, forlorn, a pitiful figure in the black dress she had put on. He went over to her.

"You won't try to stay here, Mary?" he said.

She shook her head.

"No. I've had a dozen invitations—but I shan't inflict myself on any of my friends just now. I'm going in to town to stay at a hotel—tonight, if I can get away. I shall go abroad as soon as——" She stopped, with a shudder. "As soon as I can. They say I may be needed——"

"I'll be seeing you in town," he said, lamely, uncertainly.

But she shook her head again.

"No," she said. "I—I don't want to see you again, Jack. I—I'm going to make a clean break. I shall stay abroad a long time, when I go—I may settle down over there. We'd better make it good-by, Jack."

She held out her hand, and he took it, in silence. There was, and he knew it, nothing for him to say. He watched her as she went upstairs, and knew he was seeing Mary Deane walk out of his life. He might see her again; almost certainly he would. But between them something had, definitely, finally, come to an end. He sighed, and shook his head. There wasn't much use in trying to read the riddle of life.

Braden and Harbison were still in the hall, talking together earnestly. Upon an impulse he went over to them.

"Do you want me any more?" he asked.

"Do you want to go anywhere?" asked Braden.

"Well—naturally, I don't want to stay here any longer than I need."

"I suppose not," said the detective. Everything he said was sinister; Morgan tried to convince himself that he was a fool to find some implication in this. "Well—I think you can go. I'll see you again before you do, probably."

"I'm only under suspicion, then!" said Morgan. "Not under detention?"

"What makes you think you're under suspicion?"

"Why wouldn't I think so! Quit fencing—come out with it, Braden!"

BRADEN gave him a long, level stare. Harbison was still.

"Do you care to tell me anything more than I have heard from you?" Braden asked. "To change, for instance, your story of where you were when the shot that was heard in this room was fired?"

Morgan gave back his stare.

"No!" he said.

"Very well," said Braden.

"Do you want me to stay here—or in the neighborhood?"

"I'm indifferent as to what you do, Captain Morgan!"

Braden turned back to Harbison; Morgan, with a short, angry laugh, walked off. He started for the stairs. All right—he'd go, then! If they wanted to stop him, all right. It didn't matter. If they let him go he'd be shadowed, of course. He went to his room, flung open the door, and stopped dead, in stark, amazed anger.

A man was in his room; his own suitcase was open, its contents spread out on the bed.

"What the devil——" he said. "Here——"

"It's all right, captain," said the man. He turned back his coat, showed a metal badge. "Sorry you came in just now. I'm an S. P. A. operative, working with the police and the county detective. It's all regular."

"It is like hell!" said Morgan. "I'll give you thirty seconds to clear out——"

He had left the door open behind him; he turned, now, as he heard some one in it. Greenway and Draper were there; Greenway was grinning, evilly.

"Not so fast, Morgan," he said. "This man is acting under my orders. I think it's time we had a talk. Find anything, Harper?"

"No," said the detective. "I guess he's got it on him."

"You're sure he's had no chance to get rid of it——?"

"Certain!" said Harper. "Drew and I have been on him since he got up this morning. He's been out of the house only once—went out for a walk with the West woman——"

"He gave nothing to her?"

"Nothing but a kiss!" said Harper, leering. "I——"

"That's enough!" Draper forestalled Morgan there. "Get out, Harper—whatever your name is. Shut the door behind you."

Morgan stood, breathing fast, glaring at the two bankers.

"Well—by God!" he said. "I knew you two were pretty low—but this——"

"That sounds well," said Greenway. "It's no use, though, Morgan. We've got the goods on you."

Morgan stared.

"You killed Lee Forrest because he caught you making love to his wife——"

"You lie!" said Morgan.

"We're wasting time," said Draper. "I'll tell you first this is Greenway's plan—not mine, Morgan. He's telling the truth, though. He can finish the case against you—give the police what they need to arrest you for killing Forrest. He will—unless you listen to reason.

"You held us up on that copper deal. You bluffed us into giving you fifty thousand dollars for an option when you didn't have a hundred dollars in the bank. All right—if you could get away with it. It turns out that you can't. Because unless you meet us half way you'll be arrested for murder—you'll be in a cell when your option runs out. And you'll need money to get out of it. Want to talk turkey?"

Morgan stared at him.

"You mean you'd connive at what you think was murder——?"

"O, words be damned!" said Draper. "You killed Forrest. It may have been murder—it may not. I don't care. He had it coming to him—from some one, even if it didn't happen to be you. I don't care that for him!" He snapped his fingers. "But I use the weapons that come to my hand. Meet our terms on the copper deal and what we know goes no farther."

"I see," said Morgan. "Just what are your terms?"

Draper hesitated for a moment.

"I'll tell you!" said Greenway, his voice shrill with triumph. "The price is to be halved—we're to have sixty per cent of the voting stock."

"And Mainwaring and I are to have the bag to hold? You're generous!" said Morgan. "Suppose you tell me what you think you have [illegible] think will get me charged with [illegible]

"We're not bluffing," said Draper [illegible] within ten minutes of handcuffs, Morgan, [illegible] becomes of your flotation with you in [illegible] waring'll be here—you know him well [illegible] know how long he'll hesitate to take [illegible] money to defend you. And we know [illegible] your power of attorney, as you have [illegible] for what we know: I'll tell you.

"You were in the room in which [illegible] killed early this morning—before [illegible] took something from a strong box in that [illegible] helped a woman to escape when Greenway [illegible] about to catch her. Add that to what [illegible] know already and figure the result! You're cooked."

Morgan was still.

"Well?" said Greenway. "What do you [illegible]

"Nothing," said Morgan. "Tell [illegible] to you!"

Draper laughed.

"I told you so!" he said to Greenway. "I told you you'd not get him that way. I'm sorry, Morgan."

"Thanks," said Morgan. Oddly, he felt [illegible] toward Draper at all as he did toward Greenway. "And now, if you'd mind clearing out—this is my room, after all."

Greenway, his face livid with anger, [illegible] ing step toward the door; stopped, [illegible] about to speak again. But Draper [illegible] him out.

MORGAN waited a full minute [illegible] lowed them. He had no illusions [illegible] Draper had said; they had not [illegible] They would make good their threat; [illegible] at hand. In a way he was glad; he had [illegible] last night, as he looked down at Forrest, [illegible] made up his mind, what suspense could [illegible] could do to one.

Downstairs in the hall he saw them [illegible] talking, with emphatic gestures, to Braden [illegible] and Harbison listening. He stood watching [illegible] no one else was about, except a couple of [illegible] troopers in a far corner of the room. [illegible] Harbison came over toward him; the others [illegible] into the corridor, toward the library.

"Mind coming along?" said Harbison. "I think there's something new——"

"Right!" said Morgan. He followed [illegible] the two bankers. Harbison paused to speak [illegible] of the troopers. They were afraid, Morgan supposed, that he might try to get away. [illegible] hadn't come to that yet! He went into the [illegible] saw that Braden was drawing up chairs by the [illegible] He himself, in a moment, sat down in Forrest's chair. Harbison came in quietly and [illegible] Braden, who glanced over.

"Now!" said Braden. "Capt. Morgan, you [illegible] I think, what Mr. Greenway has just told us. I am bound to tell you that this evidence is, to your point of view, extremely grave. I [illegible] tell you that there now exists a strong [illegible] that it was you who, in this room—at this [illegible] killed Mr. Forrest."

There was a knock at the door. Braden called "Come in!" And Mary Forrest entered. [illegible] rose; Braden led her to a chair.

"I am sorry to have to trouble you [illegible] Forrest," he said. "But, unexpectedly, [illegible] I should say, unexpectedly soon, there have [illegible] developments that make it probable that the mystery surrounding your husband's death [illegible] cleared up."

Mary's face was white; she looked [illegible] troubled.

"Yes," she said. "But—I'm not sure—[illegible] would be better——"

Braden ignored her.

"There is, as I was saying when you [illegible] he said, "a strong case against Capt. Morgan [illegible]

HIGH CHIVALRY

by ACHMED ABDULLAH

"You—you didn't!" exclaimed the young sultana, really shocked.

THE STORY SO FAR:

LORD CARMYON, penniless, is living in Paris after the war. He calls on his uncle at the British embassy and there meets a lovely young woman who, he learns, is the Sultana Evelyn, whose reign in Kivastan, a small principality of Asia, is threatened by a rival monarch. Carmyon's Russian friend, Prince Tamerlanoff, is no better off financially, and the two live on the bounty of Hector Aristide L'Hommedieu, a bottle washer in a small cafe. Hector, their buddy in the World war, tells them his love affair has just suffered a severe setback.

INSTALLMENT II.

"There Is a Way!"

HECTOR ARISTIDE L'HOMMEDIEU was superbly Gascon. Life to him was a series of picaresque, dramatic happenings. Therefore, having set out to be in despair, he did it properly—slumping there on the edge of the bed, burying his head in his hands, and occasionally stealing a look to see if Prince Tamerlanoff and Lord Carmyon were as impressed as he wanted them to be.

But they knew him of old. Deliberately, heartlessly, they refused to pay attention to him, and conversed pleasantly about this and that and the other thing—about paleolithic civilization and women journalists and the Ranelagh polo matches, and the deplorable trick some people have of sprinkling their caviar with shredded onions—until at last, deprived of an audience for his silent acting, the other decided to try voice and gestures.

He jumped up. "I shall explain!" he announced.

"Go to it!" They turned.

"Did I mention that my heart is broken?"

"You did. Who broke it?"

"Capitalism."

"O——"

"Gold-tailed, blood-sucking capitalism! You see, this morning I call on that animal of a plumber, Jacqueline's father. I ask him for his daughter's delightfully dimpled hand. And he—that rich, infernal plutocrat—what do you think he gives me?"

"A kick in the pants," suggested the Russian.

"A drink?" guessed the Englishman.

"Neither. He gives me abuse, full flavored and heavily filthy—and Jacqueline in the room with me. 'How dare you, you little undersized, pigtailed, spoiled rat?' he roars at me. 'How dare you, a contemptible specimen of a bottle washer in a low cafe, speak of marriage with my daughter? Get out of my house before I throw you out!'" L'Hommedieu paused, inquired: "Rude—hein?"

"Very. What did you reply?" asked Tamerlanoff.

"Not a word."

"Impossible——"

"Not a word, I repeat. But, as becomes a gentleman of the Gascogne, I kiss Jacqueline's hand and lead her out of the room. Then I walk up to her father. I shake my fist under his bloated and pimpled nose. I would have pulled it—could not reach—the animal is too tall. So, calmly, I spit in his right eye."

"Ha!" laughed Carmyon.

"Ha! Twice. He comes towards me with a roar of rage. I dance away, thus!"—the Gascon demonstrated it, leaping about the room, clearing a bed at a jump. "He cannot catch me—and tells him exactly what I think of him. I tell him that his face is a vast map of scenic depravity. I tell him that he has the morals of an eel—a fat and sympathetic eel. I tell him that, but for his money, I would squash him under my foot and grind his ears. Then, politely, I bow to him and leave his house. And now—ah." His voice trailed into a quiver.

"And now—what?" demanded Tamerlanoff.

"My heart is broken."

"You have informed us before," said Carmyon. "And why? Did Jacqueline give you the devil for running her father the way you did?"

"Not at all. She told me I was right. Told me she would wait for me—a year, a dozen years, a hundred years—until I return," he slurred; went on, with dreamy

"Isn't it refreshing," Carmyon whispered to Tamerlanoff, "the way French girls blend sentiment and horse sense?"

Aloud, to the Gascon, he said:

"Well—there you are. No reason to despair. All you need is money."

"How can I earn money—real money?" L'Hommedieu was tragically serious. No longer did he gesticulate. "A bottle washer—that's what I am—that's all I am fit for. That—and maybe a bit of fighting. Dear, blessed Virgin—how I wish for another war!"

"My feeling exactly," approved Tamerlanoff.

"Tell me," inquired Carmyon. "Are you chaps picky and choosy about whom to fight and where and why?"

"Personally," replied the Gascon, "I would fight against the boche—or for."

"And I," said the Russian, "for the bolshevists—or against."

"Excellent!" commented the Englishman. "Listen, my musketeers!"

So this romantic young man told the other two romantic young men about a fair lady in distress and Central Asian intrigues and the making of history, and they listened avidly, enthusiastically, until finally he suggested:

"Let's shake hands on it!"

They did; and in after years Lord Carmyon was wont to explain that but for the setting—the shabby little room in the Rue de Turbigo—they must have looked like a trio out of some heroic Italian opera—the Gascon, the Englishman, and the Russian-Tartar—"standing there we were," he would say, "holding hands, looking into each other's eyes—like little schoolboys swearing eternal friendship. Quite pompous, impressive and—hang it all!—rather decent—eh, what?"

He raised his stick as if it were a field marshal's grand gilt baton.

"On to the palace of our fair lady!" he commanded, gayly. "On to the Hotel Violette!"

He laughed.

"Imagine," he added, "the Hotel Violette, where, doubtless, the chairs creak and they have boiled mutton for dinner three nights a week and old ladies with cork legs whisper scandal about each other. And she—why, my musketeers—wait till you see her. The sort of woman who should always be in simple, glorious, amazing white—and a diadem of seventy black pearls on her head, and a string of seventy black pearls around her throat, with a clasp made of a single blue diamond, and——"

"And cigarets wrapped in rose leaves," cut in Prince Tamerlanoff, "and an emerald green jade bowl for an ash tray. My poor boy, you're in love. Ah—boshe moy—what a charming lover you would be—if you had a hundred thousand francs a year!"

"Don't be absurd, Mehmet! I could spend that much on orchids for her narrow feet to step on."

They left.

On the street the Gascon recklessly hailed a taxicab.

"Place de Thionville—Hotel Violette!" he directed the driver; continued grandiosely: "An oriental princess awaits us there."

"An oriental princess—on the Place de Thionville? Citizen," rejoined the driver, "you had a drop too much."

He stepped on the gas.

"En avant, cocotte!" he addressed the wheezy, clanking taxicab.

NOR should you blame the driver for his sardonic incredulity, since, after all, the Place de Thionville is the Place de Thionville.

You will find it—though heaven knows why you should look for it—not far from the Church of Saint Jacques de Grace. You will find it a packed, greasy, sooty wilderness—a dusky tracery of chimney stacks and gas works—a vulgar ecstasy of gutters and garrets—a maze of brick and stucco tenements pierced with countless unevenly spaced windows that are enlivened by bird cages and anemic potted flowers and rags hung out to dry, and, if the weather is warm, by the frowzy heads of housewives greeting each other in metallic clipped jargon—"bonjour, la p'tite mère?—et la santé, ça colle toujours?"—and then some broadly Rabelaisian jest as one of the artisans looks up from his basement shop and joins in the conversation of the women.

No verdure there except an occasional sickly fig tree straggling along a rusty water pipe, or perhaps a discouraged bit of clematis and convolvulus stretching up. No beauty. No charm.

Lots of life, though—if it is the sort of life you care for. Life in the raw; shrilling, shrieking, cackling, belching, laughing, cursing, fighting. Life unashamed. Life entirely and uniquely Latin.

And, incongruously, right in the center of this quite improper and rowdyish neighborhood the quite proper and refined Hotel Violette; really a pension, patronized by the more serious-minded Anglo-Saxon tourists—the sort who are keen about culture and service and Jane Addams and the league of nations and behaviorism and Senator Borah and the Louvre.

Therefore a cheap place. But not cheap enough for Sultana Evelyn, who was in her sitting room, a slip of paper in her hand.

It was her hotel bill. She looked at the total, a little over five hundred francs.

She had already paid it; could pay for several more weeks' board. But afterwards——?

Kivastan was rich. There was money in the treasury of her capital. But there was also revolution—and Iskandar Bek, sultan of Mervistan, massing troops on the border. And how was she going to get home—and what was she going to do, supposing she got there?

This morning His Grace of Hampshire had given her sound advice.

"I heard from Iskandar Bek in a roundabout way," he had told her. "He doesn't want actual warfare unless he's forced. So he'll make you some sort of offer for your claims. Accept it—of course, after bargaining as much as possible. . . ."

She had been indignant.

"What?" she had exclaimed. "You want me to bargain for what is mine by right?"

"Don't be melodramatic!"

"I'm not. But I—O, I won't bargain. I'm not a shopkeeper."

"Some quite possible people are these days." At times his grace was not without a certain grim sense of humor. "Lots of Russian grand dukes——"

"There has been a revolution in Russia."

"There's one in Kivastan at this moment."

"Just the same, I won't bargain."

His grace had married and buried two wives. He knew when a woman, logically or illogically, makes up her mind.

"Very well," he had said, rather generously, "I've another suggestion. Forget Kivastan. Return to England, the real home of your family. England is a sort of congenital asylum for deposed sovereigns. I'll see to it that the foreign office pays you a decent pension."

But she had refused. For there was her Scotch pride, her Scotch stubbornness.

"No!" she had replied. "I am the sultana."

She had added in Persian, which was the court language of Kivastan:

"Bash ustan—on my head be it!"

And such a charming head, ruddy-haired, violet-eyed, girlish. A soft little oval of a face. But a face not devoid of courage and strength and determination.

So determined!

"I am sultana!" she cried as she paced up and down the length of the sitting room. "I am sultana!"

"Of course you are, heaven born!" came an answering blending of two voices through the open door, where, in a small private hall that connected with her bedroom, a man and a woman were squatting on the floor, rocking to and fro like chained jungle beasts to ease the strain on their ankles.

They might have sat on chairs. But they did not. They might not have expectorated on the carpet. But they did. Thus, doubly, they proved that they were Asiatics.

Now they bent their heads, whispering.

Their whispering disturbed Evelyn, who was trying to think. So she closed the door.

The two in the other room were the not very princely remnant of the retinue which the young sultana had brought from Kivastan. Originally, when she had landed at Marseilles, there had been seven. But with the refusal of Great Britain and the league of nations to interfere, with news of revolution at home and funds running low, Mansur Khan, the itisad el-dowleh or "grandeur of the state," the prime minister, in other words, had pleaded an illness gnawing at his vitals and had taken train, presumably in the direction of Carlsbad's healing, gall-bitter waters. Yar Hassan Khan, minister of foreign affairs, had mentioned a mysterious lawsuit which had demanded his immediate presence in Teheran. No excuse at all had been given by Michail Michailian, the Armenian treasurer; Babu Chundra Chuckerjee, the Hindu controller of the royal household; and Esa Tugiuk, the sipar salar or captain general. They had simply disappeared.

So now only these two were left; both loyal to the core; both of humble beginnings.

THE woman's name was Gul-dur-Burram, which means rose in the bud—ridiculous, since she was old and shriveled and berry-brown and gnomelike, with a long and pendulous nose that almost met the jutting, combative chin; beady, opium-reddened eyes, sharp as needle points, and stumpy teeth stained scarlet with betel juice.

A peasant, hill bred, she had once been Evelyn's nurse. Today she gloried in the title of sil-il-sultana or "shadow of the queen"—and woe to the careless slave who forgot it!

The man was Arslan Khan, a gigantic Turkoman, hook-nosed, blue-eyed, yellow-bearded. He had been the late sultan's chief executioner; had often in the course of his calling—which he as well as his countrymen considered honorable and enviable—given the swish of the two-handed sword when it was crimson with blood and caused rebels' and malefactors' heads to roll about the ground like rather ghastly pumpkins.

He was still chief executioner. But his official title of rawan-i-sultana, "killer for the queen," was an empty one, and he was complaining of it to the old nurse.

"Heads off," he said, "is a profitable maxim of statecraft. For a dead horse cannot eat grass, nor can a cut-off head chew the stinking cud of lies and intrigues. Rebellion was rife before we left home. Then was the time to appoint my sword firman firma, decreer of decrees. So I advised the heaven born. But she——" He shrugged his shoulders.

"I know," replied Gul-dur-Burram. "She thinks—wrongly thinks—that the well of turbulence can be filled with the dewdrops of gentle forgiving."

"As soon drag for the moon reflected in the water!"

"As soon cover a kettle drum with the skin of a little, little mouse!"

"As soon expect a goat cheese at high noon to smell like a rose!" Arslan Khan pleasantly completed the circle of oriental metaphors; added with a sigh, nor meaning it disloyally: "Ah, if but the old sultan were alive!"

Which was exactly Evelyn's prayer as she paced up and down the length of the sitting room:

"If but my father were alive!"

Her father, Sultan Colin III., had ruled his lawless subjects with an iron, rather saturnine hand. Never had he permitted intrigue to raise its flat head, to whisper craftily, crookedly, in palace and bazaar and behind the harem curtains. Suddenly he had died. Suddenly, direct from a Belgian finishing school, Evelyn had been summoned to the grim pomp of the peacock throne.

She had strength, courage, a certain Scotch shrewdness. But she had not yet learned—they did not teach that sort of thing at her Belgian school—to cope with gliding Asiatic minds, nor to bury the soft poetry of her youth beneath the drag and smother of stark, stony resolve. How childish she had felt, she remembered, that day they had proclaimed her sultana, the nobles and Moslem priests salaaming before her where she sat cross-legged on the throne, dressed in gorgeous robes, her small hand clutching a scepter topped by an immense blue diamond known as the "Sea of Light."

"I wish I had that diamond now," she said to herself. "I'd pawn it. O, to be broke—a sultana and broke—isn't it positively silly!"

Up and down she walked, thinking, thinking—to have her thoughts suddenly interrupted by a series of shrill staccato yells that drifted through the door and sounded very much like the shrieks of an enraged parrot:

"Wah! Wah! Yahee! Yahoo! Yahei!"

A silence.

A man's apologetic stammer:

"I b-b-beg your pardon."

Then again the shrill voice—it was the old nurse's—pouring out a stream of most memorable abuse in a mixture of Tartar, Persian, and Hindustani: "Go way, O face of misfortune! Go away, O brother of a naughty sister! Go away, O festering pimple on the nose of the world! Go away, O cousin to a dung heap! Go away at once, O especially illegitimate grandson of a leprous hyena!"

"But—please—won't you announce me to your mistress?"

"No! Go away, O creature!"

"But, my father sent me——"

"Your father? I know him—by Allah and by Allah! Like father, like son! Wearers—both—of most lousy turbans!"

Evelyn laughed. She knew her nurse's temper of old.

SHE opened the door and saw there, on the outer threshold, with Gul-dur-Burram and Arslan Khan barring the way, a tall man gesticulating helplessly.

His turban, a gorgeous, monumental affair of purple silk shot with gold and tilted rakishly over the left ear, proclaimed him an oriental. Even more oriental—because too exaggeratedly, too foppishly European—were the rest of his clothes. You know the sort. You see them in London and Paris and Rome, coming out of embassies and swagger night clubs. Braided jacket tailored by Mr. Poole. Patent leather shoes bench-made by Herr Kärntner of Vienna. Scarf and shirt from M. Louis Poirier's shop in the Rue Rougemont. And as to underwear—no use advertising firms that specialize in underwear—but there is a strong suspicion that it was of mauve silk with immense embroidered monograms in purple and cerise.

Chic, though, the whole man; tremendously chic; down to the great white orchid in his buttonhole and the malacca stick topped by a huge Siberian amethyst.

He was a little over thirty, broad shouldered, narrow hipped, and with absurdly small feet and hands, true signs of his pure Arab descent. His dead white face was rather dissipated, yet kindly and amiable, and from under his broad forehead the eyes looked out, large and coal black, and they were full of pride and a certain whimsical melancholia.

It was Mustaffa Bek, Sultan Iskander Bek's eldest son. Evelyn had met him the week before at Geneva, where they had both been cooling their heels in the anteroom of the league of nations.

"How are you?" she greeted him.

He bowed.

"My father sent me——" he began.

"Do not listen to him, Heaven Born!" cut in Gul-dur-Burram, while even Arslan Khan, usually slow to show wrath, boomed out a deep throated "Anna senna, anna baba!—cursed be his father, cursed be his mother!"

"Peace! Peace!" commanded Evelyn, and she led her visitor into the sitting room and closed the door.

She smiled at him. Politically, he was her enemy. But, personally, she liked him. In a way—for he had told her a good deal about himself in Geneva—she felt sorry for him.

At heart he was gay, with all the simple, naif gayety which is the charm of the unspoiled Asiatic aristocrat. His ideal of a worthy life centered about a neat little apartment within easy distance of both the Bois de Boulogne and the boulevards, a smart motor car upholstered in maroon colored leather, a chef who knew how to blend a filet of sea bass with seeded white grapes and how to bone and truffle a youthful squab, cognac 1820, brown sherry 1837, creased trousers, English sporting prints, and the sort of dancing where you jam your partner's head hard against your neck, crouch as near the floor as you can without losing your balance, and fling yourself first to this side, then to that, with the undulating motions of a hypnotised cobra.

Instead, apart occasional short trips to London and Paris, he had to live in Mervistan, the country at the back of the beyond which, early in the sixteenth century, his Arab forefathers had hewed out of the Central Asian plateau with the sword and the battle axe. He disliked Mervistan; disliked its chilly climate, its crude pomp, its bad plumbing, its meretricious splendor, its coiling intrigues, its indifferent cooking.

Still more, he disliked the fact that at home he was another "heaven born," a man who, except for the members of his immediate family, had no equals and could have no friends—a simple statement which holds the most poignant tragedy in the world. But he was afraid to voice his dislike of his native land, for his father was a despot quick at punishing malcontents, not the sort to show mercy to his own flesh and blood. Indeed, there is throughout central Asia the whispered, hushed telling how, on ascending the throne, he had had his two half-brothers put to death. They had not been rebels.

But to quote Iskandar Bek's own words: "Human nature is human nature. Envy is envy. They were bound to be rebels some day. On that day I should have had to kill them. So I took fate by the forelock and attended to their demise ahead of time."

Hard, sardonic old man! He trusted nobody; not even his first born, whom he had continuously watched and supervised.

Even now, waiting downstairs in the hotel lobby, was Iskandar Bek's chief spy—though officially he passed as private secretary to His Royal Highness Prince Mustaffa Bek—a certain Capt. Evan Jones, a renegade Englishman drummed out of the Welsh Fusileers because—well—let's say that he had played cards too well.

On the drive over to the Hotel Violette Capt. Jones and Mustaffa Bek had had a heated argument.

"I shall speak to the sultana alone," the latter had insisted.

"But—your father's wishes."

"I read his orders. He did not even mention that you should be present at the interview."

"I know that he expects me to."

"I don't care." Perhaps it was the Paris spring air, perhaps the fact that he was far away from home, which gave to Mustaffa Bek this unwonted self-assertion. "I repeat that I shall speak to the sultana under four eyes. Your presence would be the height of indelicacy. After all, it's really an intensely personal matter, don't you think?"

"I suppose so," the other had admitted grudgingly.

SO now Mustaffa Bek was alone with Evelyn. He sat there sprawling negligently in a chair, one long leg thrown across the other to show a heliotrope silk sock, and speaking the perfect though slangy English of Harrow and Cambridge—he was proud of his British slang.

"Terribly sorry I must do it," he said after several not so bright remarks about the weather.

"Do what?"

"Propose to you." He inserted a cigaret in six inches of emerald green jade holder, lit it, and went on: "Will you marry me, and all that sort of drivel?"

Evelyn's astonishment swept her out of her chair and brought her up facing her caller.

"Did I hear right, Mustaffa?"

"Right—bally—O!"

"Marriage? You proposed—marriage—to me?"

"Right again—bally—O! Jolly old weddin' bells. Voice that breathed o'er Eden. March from Lohengrin. Slippers. Three pounds of rice. Honeymoon on the Riviera. And then"—he sighed—"Allah, Allah!—both of us back to Central Asia."

"You don't love me, do you?"

"I——"

"I want the truth."

"Well, you're right—I don't love you except—of course—like a brother."

"Then why did you propose to me?"

"My father's orders. Good way out of the mess back home, he thinks. Less expensive than war. Prefers marital to political animosities."

Evelyn laughed. This then was the offer which His Grace of Hampshire had told her to expect.

"Of course," she replied, "it's perfectly charming of you to ask me to be your wife."

"Nothing personal, I assure you," he interrupted. "Father's orders."

"Please let me finish my pretty little speech. Yes. It's charming of you to propose to me, and you're really quite delightful—except for your taste in neckties. . . ."

"O"—his hand went up to his throat—"don't you like the one I'm wearing?"

"It's rather heroic. Still, I might even forgive you your neckties. But we're in the same boat, you and I. I don't love you—except as a sister; and so"—with a curtsey—"I won't marry you, kind sir."

"You're quite positive you won't?"

"Quite."

"That's excellent. I feel so relieved."

She laughed again.

"My feelings ought to be hurt, I suppose," she said.

"Hurt? Why? You told me yourself that you . . ."

"Woman's perverse and illogical vanity, my dear. Never mind. It's settled."

"My father will be furious."

"Why should he? It isn't your fault."

"You don't know him. Tough old egg! By the prophet—on him the salute—what a tough old egg! I wish he'd let me live in Paris. I don't like Mervistan."

"Some day you'll be sultan there."

"And entirely unsympathetic to the job. Just like the Prince of Wales. Nice boy. Met him a few years ago at the Cowes regatta and he told me he'd much rather be a professional tangoist than king of England. Terrible bore—this crowned head business. You know our ancient Mervistan titles, don't you?" He rolled them off with mocking magniloquence: "Koteb al-Dunia v'al-Din Emir Temoor Saheb i-Keran—Axis of the World and of the True Faith, Iron Chief, Lord of the Stellar Constellations! Tell me," ashing his cigaret, "do I look to you like the Lord of the Stellar Constellations?"

"You don't. Why don't you tell your father—frankly? Hold out the olive branch."

"He'd hit me over the head with it—hard. That man hasn't the slightest regard for human life. I'm afraid of him."

"He wouldn't dare touch you—here in Paris."

"I don't suppose he would. But I'm going home."

"Why do you? Stay here?"

"I haven't the money."

"What? Are you broke, too?"

"Very."

"But—why—how—?"

"That Capt. Jones person downstairs holds the purse strings—makes a double entry for every centime he gives me. Another one of my dear father's precautions. What a life—that of an oriental prince!"

"Or of an oriental princess," suggested Evelyn, "counting her pennies in a second rate, dingy French hotel."

Immediately he was contrite.

"I am so sorry," he said. "Here I've been boring you with my troubles, and heaven knows you've enough of your own. I do wish I could help you."

"You are a dear. But—you know—you can't even help yourself."

"That has nothing whatever to do with my ability to help other people."

It was the truth. He was the type—nor such a rare type—who, unable to look after his own affairs, was often able and always willing to carry a stray leg of anybody's donkey.

"Let me see," he went on ruminatingly, "what I can do to . . ."

"Visitors for the heaven born!" interrupted the old nurse, as she entered and salaamed.

"Who are they?" asked Evelyn.

"Three young foreigners."

"Their names?"

"Jaw breaking foreign names. Who am I, a decent Moslem woman, to fill my memory with such devil's devicing of meaningless mumbling?"

"I wager they are bill collectors," Evelyn said with a sigh to Mustaffa Bek.

For she remembered, and regretted, how three times during the last few days, strolling down the boulevards, she had given way to strictly feminine temptation. Once at Mme. Lucinde's, where she had bought such a dream of a white silk tulle evening frock that tucked itself up in the giddiest Parisian way and trailed out one slim strip of peacock blue and gold embroidery in the pretence of a train. Once at Mme. Germaine's, who specialised in frothy, gossamer things of Belgian lawn with ruffled Valenciennes. And once at Mme. Jeanine's, whose short vamp slippers were guaranteed to make the smallest feet seem yet more small.

"Charge it up!" she had said each time, with thoughts of her well filled treasury home in Kivastan. Then, this morning, had come news of revolution; news featured in the early afternoon papers; news, doubtless, known by this time to Mme. Lucinde, Mme. Germaine, not to forget Mme. Jeanine. Charming women, all three, with charming smiles. But business women—slightly hard—les affaires sont les affaires—even when you are a pretty little sultana with ruddy hair and violet blue eyes.

So, after a few words to Mustaffa Bek explaining the situation, she instructed the old nurse to tell the callers that she was not at home.

But Mustaffa Bek argued that she was wrong: "They'll lie in wait for you downstairs, in the lobby, or on the street. They'll pop out at you from dark corners and make a scene." He sighed. "I know from experience. Better see them and have it over with."

"I've an idea you're right."

"If I can help you with them——"

"No, thanks."

"Well—you may want me."

"All right. Wait in the next room." Then, seeing the rather frightened expression in his eyes, she gave a little laugh. "I forgot," she added, "you're not exactly a favorite with my retinue."

She turned to Gul-dur-Burran, speaking in Persian: "Show the callers in. Then go for a walk. Take Arslan Khan with you."

"And leave you at the mercy of this assassin?" demanded the old woman, pointing a broad and grimy thumb at Mustaffa Bek. "No—by the honor of my nose!"

"I shall be safer with the assassin than the assassin with you."

"But, heaven born——"

"Go!" exclaimed Evelyn more sharply. "Hookum hai—it is an order."

The other salaamed.

"Listen is obey!"

A MINUTE or two later Evelyn was confronted by a very blonde young man, a very dark young man, and a very short young man.

Bill collectors? No.

This morning she had met the first at the British embassy, where he had spoken to her so engagingly about the days of high chivalry. She held out her hand. He kissed it.

"I am Lord Carmyon," he said.

"And are you still eager," she smiled with gentle mockery, "to do glittering deeds for my sake?"

"Absolutely, your royal highness. So are my friends." He introduced them; went on: "Here we are, we three musketeers—young, strong, reckless, familiar with the trade of war, and, I believe, loyal. Here we are, with no political axes to grind, caring not a tinker's curse what Lloyd George thinks or Clemenceau sneers, what Trotsky dreams or Mussolini threatens. I suppose it's frightfully bad form to blow your own horn. But, upon my word, you could look farther and find worse than us."

She laughed.

"I'm quite sure of it."

"Well, then—here we are: three free men-at-arms, at your service."

"But—sorry to be so prosy—what particular service?"

"We will help you to regain your throne."

"War!" cried the Gascon, enthusiastically.

"Do men really like war?" she asked, "I mean that, from what I've read——"

"I know," said Lord Carmyon, "the world war written by rather [illegible] fancy. We three are quite normal."

HE was silent for a moment. Then he [illegible] with that queer, stilted, almost [illegible] of phrasing which he used when he [illegible] scious and ashamed of high [illegible] token making fun of his own [illegible] emotional self-defense:

"It's a good life, is a soldier's life. With the melody of men riding with jingling [illegible] dramatic rumble of the guns—and the [illegible] face, and the rain and the [illegible] your cheeks to the naked earth—and red [illegible]

"And often red death," said the young [illegible] a low voice.

"Better the red death of war than the barren death of peace."

"Besides," commented Prince Tan[illegible]ly, "what good is peace unless you can [illegible] financially? We three certainly cannot."

"And I," replied Evelyn, "cannot [illegible] Here you come to me, three bona [illegible] knights in shining armor, willing to do [illegible] me. And—how modernity spoils romance—poor as my three champions."

"We expect no money!" the Gascon [illegible] flaring up a little.

"Of course you don't," she smiled. "I haven't even enough money to get you to [illegible] nor to get there myself—much less to [illegible] very necessary things as rifles and [illegible] all the rest. But it was nice of you," she [illegible] with just the suspicion of a break in her [illegible] "so nice and gallant and dear. And I am [illegible] you've no idea how deeply grateful I [illegible] see"—she spoke directly to Lord Carmyon—"days of chivalry are over after all."

"They are not!"

"Not in the human heart, the human [illegible] know. But—there's this modern world we [illegible] live in——"

"And to live against!"

"Exactly!" she agreed. "Sordid, isn't it? [illegible] question of money."

She was silent. Then—for it is [illegible] a woman's thoughts will switch—looking at Carmyon, she said to herself:

"I like him. I like his eyes. They are the nicest eyes in the world."

And, staring back at her, he thought: [illegible] proud little face of hers—so finely, so [illegible] chiseled—soaring forward, it seems, as a [illegible] soars into the wind! Like a song that [illegible] have sung to the Greeks of Rhodes—or [illegible] Cyprus—a song made of wine and honey [illegible] and golden honey! And—why can't I [illegible] Why can't I? There must be a way."

He echoed the last words aloud: "There [illegible] be a way!"

"There is, my dear old trout!" came a voice [illegible] the door, and Mustaffa Bek came into the [illegible]

The others turned, astonished. Evelyn [illegible] him.

"I heard every word you said," he [illegible] calmly, naïvely. "I listened at the [illegible]"

"You—you didn't!" exclaimed the [illegible] really shocked.

"I did!"

"O, Mustaffa!"

"I'm terribly Asiatic at times. So I [illegible] And, I repeat, there is a way. I'll get you money."

"You're as poor as we are," smiled Evelyn.

"But I have a rich father——"

"Who'd give us money so that we can [illegible] against him?" Evelyn shook her head. "[illegible] do not happen."

"Miracles do happen," said Lord Carmyon [illegible] was by way of being high church and devout.

He turned to Mustaffa Bek.

"Won't you tell us?" he asked.

ALIBI — By William Almon Wolf

"Wait, please—hear me out before you say anything, Mrs. Forrest," said Braden.

"Capt. Morgan had a grudge of long standing against Mr. Forrest. Mr. Forrest had married the woman he loved and—I am sorry, Mrs. Forrest—had treated her badly, made her unhappy. Capt. Morgan, returning recently after many years abroad, learned this—learned that Mr. Forrest had been not only notoriously unfaithful, but in other ways had shown himself a worthless and despicable character. He——"

"I PROTEST!" said Greenway. "Forrest was my friend. I have—I happen to know that his wife had given him ground for complaint—that there was extenuation for—for any peccadilloes. It is disgraceful to speak so of a dead man!"

"I deal in facts, not in sentiment," said Braden. "Moreover, except as it supplied a motive for Capt. Morgan's dislike, Mr. Forrest's character is irrelevant. The law does not excuse murder on the ground that its victim was a scoundrel. The vital fact here is the impression made on Capt. Morgan by what he heard. Capt. Morgan came here. He was much alone with Mrs. Forrest——"

"That—that isn't so," said Mary. "We saw one another twice——"

"There were evidences of an affectionate relation between them—he was seen to embrace Mrs. Forrest. Last night, not much more than an hour before Mr. Forrest was killed, he and Capt. Morgan quarreled violently when he interrupted a meeting between Capt. Morgan and Mrs. Forrest behind a locked door. Capt. Morgan at that time threatened Mr. Forrest with physical violence. I think a motive is clearly established. That is one of the two things the law requires in support of an accusation of murder—the other is opportunity. And that also Capt. Morgan had."

"I have denied that," said Morgan quietly.

"I know," said Braden, patiently. "But Mr. Forrest's body was found less than a minute after a shot had been heard by several persons in a nearby room. A searching and almost immediate inquiry disclosed the fact that every person in this house, except Capt. Morgan, had an unassailable alibi covering the moment at which that shot was fired. No one saw Capt. Morgan, no one will swear he or she saw him, until after the sound of the shot. Every one else was seen before. No jury is at all likely to accept Capt. Morgan's bare word that he was actually in that room, unseen by any of his friends.

"And there is more. I have just been told by Mr. Greenway, a witness of high standing in the business world, of unimpeachable character, that Capt. Morgan was in this room at an early hour this morning. His statement is corroborated in one detail by a state trooper on duty in the grounds, who, at the time specified by Mr. Greenway, saw extinguished a light that had been burning in this room."

He stopped, and leaned back in his chair, his eyes fixed on Morgan.

"But he might—there might have been plenty of reason for him to be in this room," said Mary Forrest.

"There was an excellent reason," said Braden, dryly. "He came to find a key—the key that opened the strong box in which Mr. Forrest kept his private papers."

"O!" Mary's exclamation was almost a scream. Again Morgan, in the crisis of his own life, had to stare at her in wonder. Her eyes were full of terror as she looked at the box.

"You——" She was looking at Braden now. "You've opened it! You saw—but—you don't understand. I can explain——"

"Please——" Braden's voice was harsh; he recognised the note of hysteria; he had heard it, no doubt, often enough. "I will listen later to whatever you have to say, Mrs. Forrest. Have you anything to say, Capt. Morgan?"

"Well," said Morgan, "I disagree, of course, with your flattering estimate of Mr. Greenway's character. I think it imposed rather a strain on Mr. Draper, too. He wanted to laugh."

Braden's eyes continued to bore into Morgan.

"And may I ask if Mr. Greenway says he saw me here this morning?"

"Yes—I did!" said Greenway.

"That's a lie," said Morgan.

"Capt. Morgan," said Braden, "will you let me see any papers you happen to be carrying?"

"Why—yes," said Morgan. He rose; emptied his coat pockets; laid down a few letters, a time table, his wallet and card case. Braden scarcely glanced at them. Morgan's eyes, as they turned to Greenway, were triumphant.

"And your key ring, please," said Braden, gently.

Morgan started. His head went up; he looked like what, in that moment, he was, an animal at bay. It was true! There was always something, some little, trivial thing, a man in his plight forgot! He was beaten because he'd forgot to toss away a key no bigger than a silver quarter!

Without a word he took out the ring, handed it to Braden. Braden chose a key; fitted it to the lock of the strong box; opened it. At the sound Mary Forrest screamed; then she sat still, her face chalk white, her eyes livid.

Braden stared at Morgan. All the gentleness of the last few minutes had gone out of him; the man was cold, incarnate menace now.

"So!" he said. "I think you'd better tell us the truth now, captain!"

Morgan was silent.

"He's got nothing to say!" cried Greenway, hoarse with triumph. "What can he say? He did it!"

Braden sat back. He sat still, looking at Morgan. Suddenly an incredible thing happened. A voice that was not the voice of any one there sounded in that room—Lee Forrest's voice.

"Letter to R. J. W-o-r-m-l-e-y," they heard. "One-one-one Broadway, New York City——"

GREENWAY leaped up, his face white, shaken by superstitious fear. Draper sat still, staring; Mary half rose, then sank back, nervelessly. Morgan alone, except Braden, knew at once what it was they were hearing. The dictaphone into which Forrest had been speaking! It hadn't been shut off—it must have been in operation all the time! He waited, his nerves screaming, listening. He heard his own voice—and at that moment the machine stopped.

"There," said Braden, "is the final proof that you were in this room last night when Mr. Forrest was killed, Captain Morgan!"

"I don't believe it!" Mary Forrest cried. "He didn't do it! I know why you think he did!" She sprang up. Before Braden could stop her she was at the safe; she gave a cry, suddenly, and held up a sheaf of letters. "You saw these!" she said to Braden. "Letters I wrote to Jack—and never posted! Letters that kept me from going mad! He—he found them—he threatened to use them—he said I could never prove they hadn't reached the man I wrote them to—he held them over me——"

She stopped.

"He never saw them!" she cried. "I never did post them! I swear it! You mustn't think he had that reason for hating Lee—for wanting to kill him——"

"Please——" said Braden.

His voice had some strange, hypnotic power over her. She sank back into her chair.

"I never knew about that—I knew there was something!" said Greenway. "Lee never told me what it was, though. But there's plenty of evidence without those——"

"Plenty—yes," said Braden. "Wait. Let us hear the rest of the record on this dictaphone."

"'Murder will out!'" said Greenway. "But what a thing to hang a man."

They listened as the machine resumed its strange speech. Brokenly, now, with queer gaps in which only a scratching sound was to be heard, the furious altercation there had been between Morgan and Forrest came to them. And then, a single phrase, startlingly clear:

"Put down that gun, you fool!" That was Morgan's voice. "Do you want murder here?"

They heard Forrest's reply—the last clear words he ever spoke:

"It won't be murder for you to be shot while I'm defending myself——"

Even through the distortion of the machine the malice in that voice rang out. Now there was a confusion of sound; the echo of the shot; silence.

"By God!" said Greenway, awed. "When did you find that, Braden?"

"Last night—five minutes after I came into this room for the first time," said Braden. "At the same time that I found the key to this box, and opened it, and went through everything in it—including the letters some one has taken from it since!"

"You left the key as a trap?" said Morgan.

"Something of the sort," said Braden.

"But—but——" Greenway was bewildered. "Why did you wait, then? Why didn't you tell me what you knew when I tipped you off to Morgan's motive for hating Forrest——"

"Because I do things in my own way," said Braden. He looked at his chief. "Mr. Harbison understands. I look for facts. But sometimes a fact is incomplete until you find the reason for it. I found a good many facts—and not so many reasons—last night. One fact, Mr. Greenway, was your anxiety to incriminate Captain Morgan. I had no reason for that. Nor for Captain Morgan's unwillingness to tell the truth—which I already knew."

"No mystery about that!" said Greenway.

"O, yes!" said Braden. "It was the only really mysterious element there was left when I came out of this room! He must have known that no jury in the world, knowing what had happened here, would convict him—that no grand jury, probably, would even have indicted him for manslaughter!"

"What? What's that?" cried Greenway.

"O, yes, I knew that, all right," said Morgan. "I didn't know how I could prove it, though—I never thought of the dictaphone. And—and——"

"You didn't want Miss West to be involved," said Braden. "I understand. And—you had some notion even then, I imagine, of Mr. Greenway's course." He smiled. "I know the whole thing now, you see," he said. "Miss West told me the whole story, from your point of view, half an hour ago—after I told her what I knew already. She gave me a couple of missing links—explained your dealings with Mr. Greenway, for one thing."

"Talk—talk!" said Greenway. "Facts are facts. You've got your man, Braden."

"Suppose I don't want him?" said Braden.

"You damned fool, Greenway!" said Draper abruptly. "You'd better stick to common larceny after this—you haven't the brains for a real crime! Morgan—I'll close with you myself the day after tomorrow—tomorrow's a holiday. If the others drop out I'll cover the option myself. And—I'm sorry I was ever mixed up in this!"

Greenway cried out, aghast, incredulous.

"Tomorrow!" he said. "He'll be in jail tomorrow!"

Harbison got up lazily.

"I think not," he said. "Ordinarily, I suppose, I might lay the facts before a grand jury and let it refuse to indict—as it would. But enough innocent people have suffered in this business. Braden—you can calm the newspapers down, can't you?"

"I think so—provided Mr. Greenway will take care of his own tame rag," said Braden. "It might have occurred to you, by the way, Mr. Greenway, that I'd have the telephone from this house watched!"

He got up; came around the desk; took Morgan's limp hand in his and shook it.

"I'm sorry," he said. "You've had a bad time. But it was your own fault—you might have trusted us. Here—steady—you need a drink——"

His arm about Morgan's shoulder, he led him to the door.

But it wasn't a drink that Morgan needed. It was just the sight of Nora West outside, waiting, eyes shining as they saw him come with Braden.

A DIVERSITY OF BLOUSES

by Corinne Lowe

NEW YORK.—(Special Correspondence.)—This season a weak arm can manage the week-end bag. Gone are the days when we said wearily to ourselves, "O dear, I wish Molly and Tom would stop pestering me to go out to the country. Why don't they leave me in peace with my radio?" For the ogre which loomed up always to frighten away any vision of rural landscapes and country joys had suddenly vanished. We no longer need to take ever so many changes of costume along with us. Nowadays we simply take several changes of blouse and—a skirt.

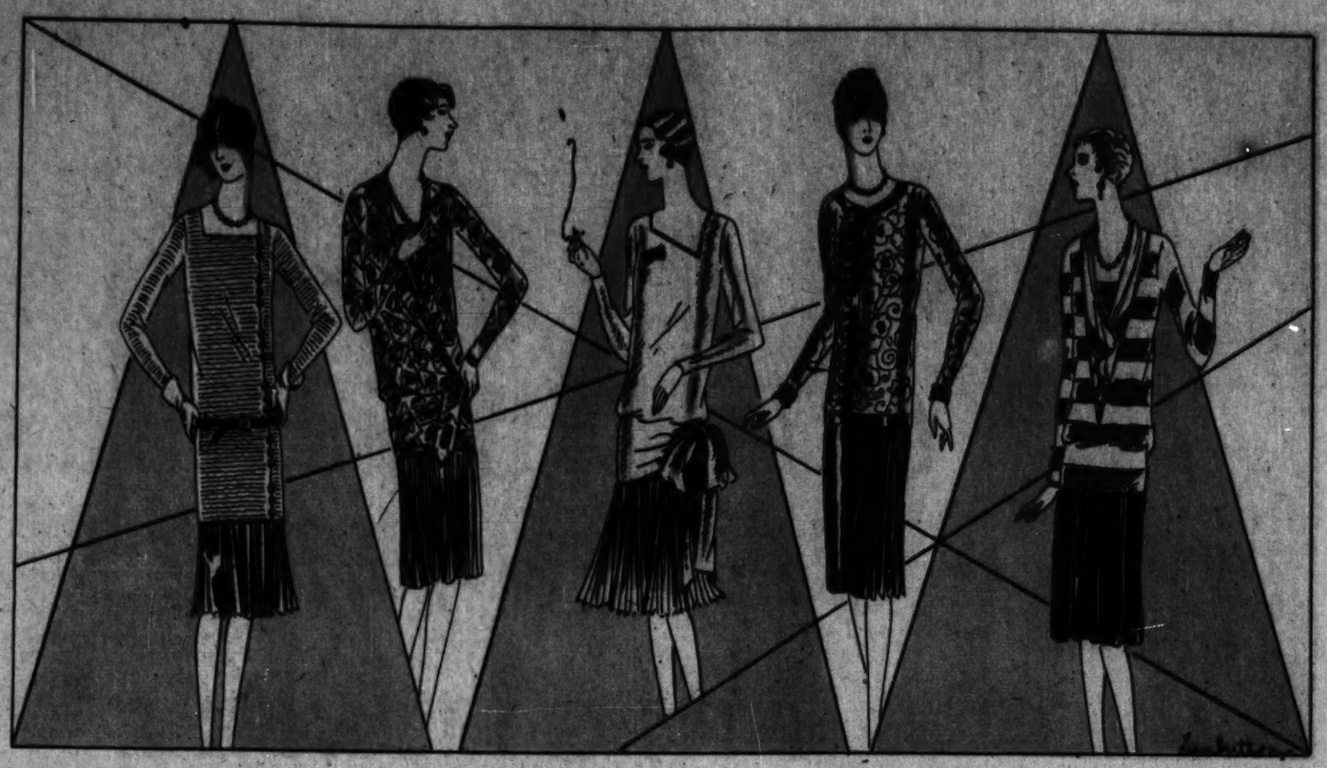
This is only one instance of the manner in which the present vogue of the skirt and blouse has come about. Not everybody is so radical as one friend of mine, who makes a single black satin skirt do duty through the entire day, who tops this skirt variously with a morning, afternoon, and evening blouse. Nevertheless, the average woman benefits by the blouse legislation to the extent of getting out an everyday and formal afternoon costume with one skirt.

Aside of the charm of color, black represents a safe and lovely choice for the skirt. Its only rival in this respect is brown or beige. Regarding this latter, one must return again to something which has already proved its universal eloquence. The vogue of the brown and beige combinations is practically unlimited, and there is today an especially strong emphasis upon the tone of beige known as "honey," a warm golden tone with perhaps the faintest suggestion of the faintest dawn. This appears even in the evening creations. For example, a wrap for the theater may choose honey beige for its velvet foundation and collar this in ermine or fox dyed the same tone.

This being the case, the brown satin skirt is commanding a logical amount of attention, for this lends itself to the new tones of beige in both informal and formal types of completing blouse. Of course the brown family is almost as large as the famous pig family, and it follows that picking the particular shade of this tone is today quite a chore. One cannot do better here than remember Patou's famous version of the familiar tone, a rich, warm shade which is catalogued under his famous triumvirate, one, two and three.

So far I have assumed that the accompanying blouse is satin. Now let us take some concrete examples of the blouse and skirt trust. Starting at the extreme left, we find an all over plaited skirt of satin. It chooses brown for its color, and therefore all accompanying blouses must fulfill its destiny by introducing beige.

With this as a premise, we find first of all an extremely long jumper blouse of the finest knitted silk in beige with a glint of interwoven gold. Such beautified knitted fabrics are, as I have so often remarked, extremely good this year, and this type of blouse makes a wonderful suggestion for either the business woman or her allegedly idle sister. Its length, its square back, its side buttoning, and, last of all, its narrow belt of gold leather, are all important items in the new sum of blouse chic. Needless to say, the accompanying draped turban is in brown.



The new long belted jumper with side closing and square neck is shown at the extreme left in beige knit material shot with gold and belted in gold leather.

This blouse represents the everyday solution of a plaited brown satin skirt which is shown in the second sketch in holiday mood, for here the same skirt is associated with an afternoon blouse of gold-brocaded beige crepe, trimmed with gold ribbon and a gold ornament.

In the center a skirt of plaited black satin goes into partnership with a blouse of gold lame.

That the jacket often inspires the blouse of today is demonstrated by our fourth sketch, a green metal brocade bound with the transparent black velvet of its skirt.

Last, the new and effective scarf collar finishes a blue and gold striped blouse of transparent metal cloth topping a skirt of blue transparent velvet.

Now, this blouse is all very well for the office hour or the lunch hour. But when we want to drop in upon a reception or a tea dance we shall need something more elaborate. Therefore we provide, to go with the same brown satin skirt, a formal type of blouse such as is shown in the second sketch. Here you find one of the most familiar and most successful blouse recipes of the year—the surplice closing, the fitted effect over the hips, and the bloused upper section.

In this case the material used is a rosy beige crepe brocaded in gold. But there are no limitations except those of tint. You may do that beige and gold effect in half a dozen different fabrics and be equally effective. You may, in fact, even eliminate the gold vein and still remain in happy vein. If, for example, you select a beautiful faconne velvet with beige as background and some vivid color introduced in the figure, you will be conforming to the most approved of blouse sentiments. For these lovely figured velvets are among the smartest of choices for the formal afternoon jumper.

All the edges of this blouse are bound with dull gold metal ribbon, and a vestee of dull gold metal cloth echoes the gold ornament placed upon the fitted hip section. And before dismissing this example of blouse wisdom, dwell upon the last significant touch of the garment—that diagonal appliqued strip of self material forming an angle with the surplice closing.

All these wonderful new supple lames remain one of the first thoughts on the subject of the formal blouse. Sometimes the numerous small patterns, which today are considered so smart on these lames, are omitted in favor of just the plain weave.

An example of such omission is furnished in our center sketch, which shows the sort of costume that would be apt to put anybody at her ease at the wedding reception or tea dance. In association with a black velvet skirt we encounter here a stunning blouse of plain gold lame with one of the diagonal neck lines and with its molded hip section describing an upward slant. A surplus fold of the material is arranged into a bow to accent this upward slant, and the final touch consists of a bow knot of brilliants attached to the corsage.

An excellent illustration of the manner in which the jacket has influenced the blouse mode is supplied by our fourth sketch. Observe this afternoon creation of green metal brocade bound with the black velvet of the skirt and you will see what we mean. This is, of course, a youthful mode and for that reason will appeal more to Mary just back from college on her Christmas vacation than to her mother or married sister.

There are all sorts of new neck lines and many old ones represented in any collection of blouses. At the extreme right you will find one which necessitates a special word. The scarf collar is really one of the most effective things you can do about frock or blouse. It is exceedingly dear to the heart of Louise Boulanger, who has invented a number of new guises for this familiar dress apparition, and who vacillates between the handkerchief scarf and one related to the effective example we show in that smart model of striped blue and gold transparent metal cloth. Mme. Boulanger, by the way, frequently associates this scarf collar with one of her important novelties—the wrapped girdle.

Although the skirt of today is usually plain, to contrast with figured blouse, the reverse of this system is sometimes applied. Figured velvet in small plaid or polka dot designs is favored for the skirt that wants to cut a figure of its own, and an excellent illustration of its success occurs in a model combining skirt of brown velvet dotted in beige with a beige blouse in flat crêpe (incidentally, this is one of the smartest of winter blouse fabrics). The blouse is made in the double breasted surplice closing jacket fashion, and it is bound with the figured velvet of the skirt. A flower of the skirt material perches on the left shoulder.

TEMPTING MENUS FOR THE WEEK

by Jane Eddington

Cates and Cookies.

THE little cakes, the little cates, the wafers and tartlets and biscuits (English term for crackers, sweetened and unsweetened) are dainties and delicacies of many implications and associations. Of all the beautiful and diverse ways of packing foods these have received the nicest attention in order that they may rank as rich gifts and travel the world around, while jars of marvelous china hold the fresh cakes and help to make them nutritive treasures.

The little cakes fitly accompany tea, and many another beverage which has not seldom been romantically or poetically coupled with them. We may speak with discretion while mentioning the indubitable fact that the old fashioned glass of wine which was offered an afternoon caller had its sweet wafer accompaniment.

Bread and cheese are homely cates, but not always so is the more universally popular crackers and cheese, while cream cheese and ginger wafers or snaps are a catering couple probably quite wholly American and may be an imitation of the rich Camembert and the water cracker. And other such couples there are perhaps not local yet, but the fact is that little cakes, sometimes sweet and sometimes no more sweet than the "cake" of Scotland, have formed an acceptable complement to many a form of refreshment, social or formal, casual or necessary.

From the homely cooky to the elegantly gay or queenly macaroon (consider also, because of its almond composition, the title of honor dainty) this family represents the most portable of foods, if we accept the idea that a cate is a food dainty or delicacy, something choice. The almond rocks, the kisses, the cherry tarts, may each be cates of consequence. And let us note in passing that the dominating almond has gone into and on to endless cooky forms, while fancy sugars and fruits and seeds and essences of anise (nothing to do with the fox, but calls up a picture of Reynard nevertheless) or caraways for digestive aid, have flavored and garnished a long list of spiced and perhaps iced little cakes.

Little children love these mild pieces perhaps figuring as sugar cookies or the almond and honey slabs or cards such as form the gingerbread house in Hansel and Gretel, or gingerbread boys, or forms of trees and all the denizens feathered and furred of a menagerie, or perhaps to fill a Christmas gift tin representing that first and doubtingly well known houseboat (Noah's). And for the pleasure of the children, too, are made forms like the Christmas fir tree and the stocking with the names piped on them in colored icings or letter and figure cookies to excite the childish imagination. Always they have sugar and spice and everything nice!

Simple Sugar Cookies—I.

ONE-HALF cup butter, one cup sugar, one egg well beaten, three tablespoons of milk, two cups flour sifted before measuring, one teaspoon cream of tartar, one-half teaspoon soda, nutmeg to taste. Mix and let stand one hour before rolling and baking. Since the kind of an oven used makes all the difference in the world in a cooky, we advise that these, when thin, be baked in an oven a little short of 350 degrees, but eight minutes is the time required in such an oven when they are small. When a cooky is baked just a few seconds too long in an oven that is too hot it becomes unpleasantly brown all through.

Simple Sugar Cookies—II.

Cream one-fourth pound of butter and add to it gradually one cup of sugar, one well beaten egg and a pinch of salt. Add alternately to this mixture one-fourth cup of milk and a scant two and a half cups of flour into which has been sifted two teaspoons of baking powder, then flavoring. After making this dough let it stand by the ice until chilled, then roll out a part of it at a time, thin, and cut with cutters dipped in flour. If thin and small, bake the cookies from ten to twelve minutes in an oven on the border line between medium and hot. Decorate each cooky with shreds of almond or angelica or what you will.

A Seeded Drop Cooky.

For five dozen fairly good sized drop cookies use the following: One-half cup butter, one cup of sugar, one egg, one-third cup of hot water, two cups of pastry flour, and one-half of a teaspoon of baking powder, three-fourths teaspoon baking soda, three-fourths cup raisins, three-fourths cup of nutmeats, two tablespoons of caraway seeds, one-half teaspoon of salt, one teaspoon of vanilla. Almonds or English walnuts are good in this cooky. Drop the dough when made on a buttered cooky sheet and bake for ten minutes in a 350 oven. In baking cookies of this type care must be taken not to dry them out much by slow cooking.

Ginger Snaps.

One-half cup butter, one-half cup brown sugar, one cup molasses, one teaspoon soda, one-half teaspoon ginger, one-half teaspoon cinnamon, one-eighth teaspoon cloves, four cups of flour—if that much can be worked in. The more flour that can be worked in—within reason—the smoother the wafer thin sheet of rolled out dough will be, and also the smoother and more brittle the snaps will be. Make this like any cooky dough, chill and roll as thin as possible. Ten minutes in an oven between 350 and 375 should be time enough for the baking.

WELL, JIM - HERE'S WHERE WE GET OFF -

I'LL BET YOUR MAMA'S GOING TO BE TICKLED TO SEE YOU, JIM - AND S'PRISED, TOO - SHE'D NEVER S'PECT WE'D FIND OUR WAY CLEAR 'CROSS TOWN TO TH' HOSPITAL WHERE SHE IS - I HOPE SHE'S GETTIN' ALONG ALL RIGHT -

TWENTY-FIVE CENTS IS ALL TH' MONEY I CAN SPEND BUT I WANT ALL TH' NICE FLOWERS I CAN GET - THEY'RE FOR A SICK WOMAN IN TH' HOSPITAL - SEE?

AH, FOR ZE SWEET LEETLE GIRL I GIVE ZE BEST BUNCH I HAVE -

HERE WE ARE - I WONDER WHICH IS HER ROOM - MAYBE SHE'S LOOKIN' OUT TH' WINDOW NOW - NOPE - I DON'T SEE HER - BUT THERE'S LOTS AN' LOTS O' WINDOWS -

LET'S HURRY UP AN' GET INSIDE - IF WE CAN GET IN WITHOUT HER SEEIN' US WE'LL S'PRISE HER LOTS MORE - SH-H-H-- NOW WE'VE GOT TO BE REAL QUIET WHILE WE'RE IN HERE -

WE'VE COME TO SEE MRS. PEWTER - THEY BROUGHT HER HERE AFTER SHE WAS HIT BY THAT AUTOMOBILE, YUH KNOW -

MRS PEWTER? HM-M'M - I SEEM TO REMEMBER THE NAME BUT I DON'T THINK SHE'S HERE ANY MORE - I'LL ASK ONE OF THE DOCTORS -

INFORMATION

NO - MRS. PEWTER WAS ONLY HERE A SHORT TIME - SHE'S OUT AT A HOSPITAL IN THE COUNTRY NOW -

OH - WHAT HOSPITAL IS IT, DOC, AN' HOW DO YUH GET THERE?

GEE - IT'S A HOSPITAL WHERE TH' COUNTY SENDS FOLKS - THAT ARE TOO POOR TO PAY - HE SAYS IT'S A FINE HOSPITAL, BUT THERE'S NO STREET CARS OUT WHERE IT IS - GOTTA TAKE A TRAIN AN' WE HAVEN'T MONEY 'NOUGH FOR THAT - TOO LATE NOW TO GO TO-DAY, ANYWAY -

AN', WHAT'S TH' USE O' CARRYIN' THOSE THINGS 'ROUND ANY MORE? THEY WEREN'T VERY GOOD FLOWERS ANYWAY, BUT THEY WERE TH' BEST I COULD GET AN' I'LL BET SHE'D HAVE LIKED 'EM -

IT'S PRETTY HARD TO DO ANYTHING REALLY NICE FOR FOLKS WHEN YER POOR, BUT IT DOESN'T TAKE NEARLY SO MUCH TO MAKE POOR FOLKS HAPPY -

IT'D HAVE MADE HER HAPPY JUST TO KNOW WE TRIED TO COME AN' VISIT HER - AN' SEEIN' HER WOULD HAVE MADE US FEEL GOOD, TOO - BUT NOW WE'VE GOT TO GET BACK HOME AN' WE'VE HAD THIS WHOLE TRIP FOR NOTHIN' - I DON'T MIND THAT SO MUCH, THOUGH.

TEXAS SLIM

HAS A BARREL OF FUN

COME ON, TEXAS- I WANT YOU TO NAIL THAT PADLOCK ON MY GARAGE DOOR FOR ME

LOOK, MR. AKERS- THERE HE GOES-! THERE GOES THE GUY THAT STUCK ME UP AND SWIPED MY $500.00 LAST WEEK.

STEADY, TEXAS- DON'T LET HIM SUSPECT THAT WERE FOLLOWING HIM.

IT'S FUNNY WHERE HE DISAPPEARED TO-

HE CAN'T HAVE GOT AWAY FROM THIS CORNER, TEXAS- YOU WAIT HERE WHILE I GO GET A COP!

THIS IS WHERE HE WENT ALL RIGHT HE MUST LIVE HERE- IT MIGHT BE A WISE IDEA FOR ME TO NAIL MY PADLOCK ON THIS DOOR.

I'D BETTER WRITE A NOTE AND TELL MR. AKERS THAT I'VE GONE AROUND TO WATCH THE BACK DOOR.

POW!

THIS LAD IS CERTAINLY A THOUGHTFUL YOUNG FELLER- FURNISHES NAILS, HAMMER AND EVERYTHING I NEED.

WHERE IS HE?

RIGHT AROUND THE CORNER, BUT BE CAREFUL, OFFICER- THIS MAN IS A DESPERATE CHARACTER.

HERE'S A NOTE- IT SAYS- "I'VE GOT THE BUM LOCKED UP IN HERE. I'M AROUND AT THE BACK OF THE HOUSE. YOURS TRULY TEXAS."

WELL WE DON'T NEED TO WAIT FOR HIM. WE'LL CARRY THIS BABY TO THE STATION, OURSELVES.

TEXAS!

GASOLINE ALLEY

WILL YOU PAINT THIS LEAF FOR ME, MR. FROST?

THE HAND OF JACK FROST HAS BEEN BUSY, SKEEZIX. HIS IDEA OF A BEAUTIFUL PICTURE IS THE SAME AS MINE.

THAT TREE IS THE LINDEN OR BASSWOOD. IT LENDS A BRIGHT TOUCH OF COLOR TO THE LANDSCAPE.

THAT IS THE HAWTHORNE

CAN YOU REACH ME SOME BERRIES UNCA WALT?

THE WILD CHERRY WITH ITS BRILLIANT LEAVES SPARKLES IN THE WOODS.

I THINK IT'S PRETTY TOO.

THE OAK IS IN QUIETER COLOR BUT VERY RICH.

THE PINE KEEPS IT'S GREEN ALL THROUGH THE YEAR.

TOO MUCH WORK FOR JACK FROST.

WELL, JACK LETS HIMSELF GO WHEN HE SEES A GRAPE VINE.

THE WILD PLUM ADDS IT'S TINTS TO THE PICTURE.

BUT I DON'T SEE ANY PLUMS.

THIS ONE SHOWS US WHAT THEY CALL A RIOT OF COLOR- THE MAPLE

IT LOOKS LIKE FIRE

JACK FROST DIDN'T WORK SO HARD ON THE ELM DID HE?

MAYBE HE GOT TIRED WHEN HE GOT TO IT.

BUT THE SUMAC WEARS THE GAYEST OF COLORS.

THE HICKORY NUT TREE RUNS TO BRIGHT YELLOWS AND BROWNS.

BUT THAT ISN'T WHY THE SQUIRRELS LIKE THAT TREE UNCA WALT.
